Mr. EATON. As I understand the proposed amendment of the Senator from Delaware, it is that whenever a contract is desired to be made to the sum of $1,000, there should be one week's notice in four daily papers, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, one in Washington, and one in Baltimore. There is to be the expense of advertising in four daily papers for one week in order to effect a contract of $1,000! If somebody who understands the price of advertising in those cities will just make up the figures, they will show a very handsome percentage upon $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The question being put, a division was called for; and there were—ayes 20, noes 24.

Mr. BAYARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to explain why I offer this amendment. As the section now stands contracts for $5,000 can be granted without any competition whatever. There is nothing to prevent a large contract from being subdivided so that twenty contracts amounting to a hundred thousand dollars by subdivision can be granted without competition. I do not suppose it is the intention of the Senate to have anything else than competitory bids for these immense improvements. If it is, and they see fit to allow as many contracts for $5,000 each to be granted without competition, they can vote accordingly. If on the contrary they take the view I do, they will reduce the sum for which any contract can be granted without competition to $1,000, and that will be in accordance with an amendment already adopted that prevents the subdivision of a contract where it is capable of being included in a single contract. The purpose of this whole bill is to institute guards upon extravagant bids and unfair lettings of contracts. It is in the power of the Senate to compel all contracts to be subjected to competition. The present bill as it now stands only subjects contracts over $5,000 to competition. I propose that contracts over $1,000 shall be subjected to competition, and such I think is a useful and a wholesome provision. If the Senate think otherwise they will vote as they see fit.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator suppose that Congress would approve of contracts subdivided in the way that he has suggested that this might be done? It is all subject to the revision of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. Not at all. Congress has the control over the estimates for a future year, but after those estimates are made the contracts for executing them must be controlled by the commissioners, under this section.

Mr. INGALLS. The estimates must be submitted in detail, specifying the exact amount of work to be done and what it is to cost. That is to be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, by him approved and then submitted to Congress, and by Congress approved. Can it be supposed for an instant that if it appears that Pennsylvania avenue were to be repaved and they had submitted estimates for paving by single blocks and thereby endeavored to evade the wholesome provisions of law, the Secretary of the Treasury and Congress would make themselves parties to such stultification?

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator and I understand this bill differently. I believe the second section of the bill very properly directs the estimates of expenditure of the year then current. It provides that the commissioners shall prepare estimates of their expenditures, that those estimates shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that he in turn shall be checked by the action of Congress. But after the estimates have been made, the contracts come to be made. Are you to make those contracts under competition or without it? The bill evidently intends that the Treasury shall be protected against favoritism in letting these contracts by having competitory bids. I say that the bill as it now stands permits contracts to the extent of $5,000 to be made without competition, and that by giving a man who wants twenty five-thousand-dollar contracts twenty separate contracts, you bring him within the language of the section; and that is a matter with which Congress and the Secretary of the Treasury would have nothing to do. They are to pass upon the amount of estimates, but they do not pass upon the contracts to carry out the expenditures according to those estimates, for that is left to the commissioners alone, and necessarily must be under the section as it stands.

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that instead of the provision which he has moved he make it read, "No contract exceeding $1,000 shall be let except by public advertisement in this city." It seems to me to be unnecessary to go to New York, Baltimore, and Philadelphia and advertise at an expense of probably a thousand dollars for a contract of $5,000. The Senator from Delaware must remember another thing, that up to this time there has been no limitation or restriction whatever upon the commissioners in regard to letting contracts. The present commissioners let the contracts as they see fit. There is no competition now at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator does not cite the past history of the expenditures of the District government as something to be followed in the future? We are trying, as I supposed, to stop that sort of thing.

Mr. DORSEY. That is precisely what this section is for; I submit to the Senator that to go through this form of advertising in these four papers and preparing specifications and all that kind of thing is very expensive machinery for a very small matter.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, it strikes me the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas ought to be acceptable to my friend from Delaware. If I understand it, it is that all contracts for more than $1,000 shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after an advertisement in this city, and that if the contract is for more than $5,000 there shall be advertisements also in the other cities. That, it strikes me, settles the whole matter. To say that you should advertise for a thousand-dollar contract in all these cities would, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] suggested, eat up the amount in advertising; but as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] there is no trouble about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator from Arkansas put his suggestion in shape? As the bill now stands, his object would not be reached by any words that I find there.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. SARGENT. We cannot get through with the bill to-day and we shall meet to-morrow any way.

Mr. INGALLS. I submit to the Senator from California whether it would not be better to sit an hour longer to-night and finish this bill, and then adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. SARGENT. We want a session to-morrow any way. There is other business besides this bill pressing upon our attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 24, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A number of gentlemen have asked the Chair to recognize them this morning for the purpose of introducing bills for reference, &c. If there is no objection, the Chair will recognize them in the order in which their requests were made.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. ELAM. By instructions of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, I ask consent to report at this time a bill for printing and recommittal, together with a report in writing, with an accompanying memorial, which I also ask may be printed.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4961) to repeal the twenty-second section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," and to declare the rights and privileges and lands granted in said twenty-second section to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburgh Railroad Company forfeited, and that the said twenty-second section be re-enacted in favor of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, was received, read a first and second time, with the accompanying report and memorial, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. EDEN. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so understood.

SETTLERS IN WYOMING.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1199) for the relief of certain settlers in the Wind River Valley, Wyoming Territory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MORTON C. FISHER.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4962) for the relief of Morton C. Fisher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH E. MOORE.

Mr. HARDENBERGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4963) for the relief of Joseph E. Moore; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT COLES.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 312, for the relief of Robert Coles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appearing that, according to the laws of the State of Iowa, Robert Coles is the rightful owner of indemnity certificates No. 92, for twenty-three hundred and sixty-three acres and twenty-six hundredths of an acre, dated March 28, 1872, and No. 93, for thirty-six acres and thirty-six hundredths of an acre, dated April 10, 1872; and

It further appearing that the ownership of said indemnity certificates accrued to the said Robert Coles by virtue of a contract between him and the board of supervisors of the county of Lucas and State of Iowa, dated November, 1862, as provided by the laws of the State of Iowa; and

It further appearing that the list of swamp selections upon which said indemnity certificates were subsequently issued was approved by the surveyor-general for the State of Iowa, March 3, 1859, of which approval the county judge of Lucas County, Iowa, was notified by letter from the surveyor-general's office of that date, and of which approval the then agent for the State of Iowa and of Lucas County, by affidavit, testifies; and

It further appearing that the proof for indemnity under act of March 2, 1855, was submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and filed for action therein June 20, 1860; and

It further appearing that the surveyor-general failed to certify his approval of said list of selections to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as required by the honorable Secretary of the Interior at the time of approval thereof; and

It further appearing that had said list of selections been certified up to the General Land Office at the time the same was approved by the surveyor-general, there were large quantities of public lands in the State of Iowa upon which indemnity certificates could have been located; and

It further appearing that a full and valuable consideration was paid by the said Robert Coles for the interest of Lucas County in and to the swamp lands thereof, to wit, one thousand and ninety acres of land, valued at $6,000; and

It appearing that at the time said indemnity certificates were issued there were no vacant public lands in the State of Iowa upon which the same could be located, owing to the delay and neglect of the surveyor-general, as aforesaid; and

It appearing as a part of the terms of the contract between said Robert Coles and the board of supervisors of the county of Lucas and State of Iowa that, "if compatible with the public interest, the patent for the lands granted in indemnity should be issued in his name:" Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue warrants in lieu of said indemnity certificates numbered 92 and 93 to the said Robert Coles, in accordance with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, in quantities not less than eighty acres, which may be located by the said Robert Coles, his heirs or assigns, upon any of the public lands not mineral or coal or double minimum lands, subject to entry by pre-emption or under the provisions of the homestead act; which warrants may also be received from actual settlers in payment of pre-emption claims or in commutation of homestead claims, in the same manner and to the same extent as is now authorized by law in the case of military bounty-land warrants: Provided, That said locations do not interfere with prior pre-emption or homestead rights. And patents may issue therefor the same as provided for military bounty-land warrants or lands sold for cash.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before we act on this bill I wish to ask the gentleman having charge of it whether these warrants which are to be issued in lieu of other warrants may under this bill be located upon any unappropriated lands.

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD. Heretofore in the case of some acts of this kind which permitted locations upon any unappropriated lands warrants have been located upon vacant lands of great value, which it was not the intention of Congress to permit. Under the provisions of an act which authorized the issue of scrip in lieu of lands to which a party in California claimed title, entry was made upon a military reservation covering a portion of the water-front of Lake Michigan, in the city of Chicago—land worth millions of dollars. I wish to know whether this bill would permit the location of scrip in the same manner?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, sir. The language of this bill is:

Not less than eighty acres, which may be located by the said Cole, his heirs or assigns, upon any of the public lands, not mineral, or coal, or double minimum, subject to entry by pre-emption or under the provisions of the homestead act.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAPP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4964) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

M. JANET BURLESON.

Mr. YOUNG also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. Ro. No. 4965) for the relief of M. Janet Burleson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARYLAND AND DELAWARE SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. HENKLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4966) to aid in the construction of the Maryland and Delaware Ship-Canal and to secure to all vessels of the United States service for all time the right of navigation through said canal free of tolls and charges; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Last evening I announced that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, was absent from the House on account of sickness. The announcement does not appear in the RECORD. I wish the correction to be made.

Mr. POLLARD. I announced last evening that I was paired with the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ACKLEN. No notice of the announcement appears in the RECORD.

Mr. JOYCE. Last evening I stated that I was paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HOUSE, and that if he had been here I should have voted "no." The statement is omitted from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that omissions of this character occurring in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as well as the inaccuracies sometimes complained of in votes by yeas and nays, are not the fault of the reporters. In the confusion which is too commonly prevalent in the House during roll-calls, these announcements and responses of members, who often speak from remote parts of the Hall, are frequently altogether inaudible at the desk.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUBBELL and others called for the regular order.

Mr. WILSON. I hope that gentlemen will withdraw this call for a few moments. I ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of State in regard to a matter which involves the honor of this Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be very glad to hear the letter read; but the regular order is demanded and he has no discretion but to announce the business of the morning hour, which now begins at eleven o'clock and thirty minutes.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent that the call be continued until all the committees are called through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRIGHT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call rests with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HERMAN NETTERFIELD.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2858) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

HELENA FECHTELS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3500) granting a pension to Helena Fechtels; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CALVIN E. PRATT.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3299, a bill (H. R. No. 4967) granting a pension to Calvin E. Pratt, late brigadier-general of volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY BROWN.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 491) granting a pension to Henry Brown, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN SANDERS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, back favorable a bill (H. R. No. 3576, for the relief of Benjamin Sanders; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASA MORSE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Asa Morse, of Stanton, Michigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PATRICK GLACKIN.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1010, a bill (H. R. No. 4968) granting a pension to Patrick Glackin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ANDREW F. HIGGINS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 309) for the relief of Andrew F. Higgins, of Brown County, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHRISTOPHER FEGAN.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back adversely a bill (H. R. No. 492) granting a pension to Christopher Fegan, Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES NEWCOMB.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (S. No. 363) granting a pension to James Newcomb.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Newcomb, formerly a private in Company H, First Battalion, Seventeenth United States Infantry.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4909) extending the provisions of the act of March 9, 1878, to certain soldiers of the war of 1812; and the same was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

SOLDIERS IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3625) relating to soldiers while in the civil service of the United States.

The bill, which was read, provides that all persons who, under and by virtue of the first section of the act entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1865, were deprived of their pensions during any portion of the time from the 3d of March, 1865, to the 6th of June, 1866, by reason of their being in the civil service of the United States, shall be paid their said pensions, withheld by virtue of said section of the act aforesaid, for and during the said period of time from the 3d of March, 1865, to the 6th of June, 1866.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4969) to repeal section 4717 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, repeals section 4717 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. EDEN. I think the gentleman should give us a little light on that subject.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask for the reading of section 4717 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4717. No claim for pension not prosecuted to successful issue within five years from the date of filing the same shall be admitted without record evidence from the War or Navy Department of the injury or the disease which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim is made: Provided, That in any case in which the limitation prescribed by this section bars the further prosecution of the claim, the claimant may present, through the Pension Office, to the Adjutant-General of the Army, or the Surgeon-General of the Navy, evidence that the disease or injury which resulted in the disability or death of the person on whose account the claim is made, originated in the service and in the line of duty; and if such evidence is deemed satisfactory by the officer to whom it may be submitted, he shall cause a record of the fact so proved to be made, and a copy of the same to be transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions, and the bar to the prosecution of the claim shall thereby be removed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LUCINDA BARRETT.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1843) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett, widow of Thomas S. Barrett, late a private in Company M of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. FERRELL.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2826) granting a pension to John H. Ferrell, late a pilot on the United States Steamer Moose in the Mississippi squadron; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. M'BRUYER.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4523, a bill (H. R. No. 4970) granting a pension to John H. McBruyer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY FRAZEE.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1558, a bill (H. R. No. 4971) granting a pension to Mary Frazee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. STUTER.

Mr. RIDDLE, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2767) granting a pension to John M. Stuter, bugler of Company I, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY J. STOVER.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3683, a bill (H. R. No. 4972) restoring Mary J. Stover to the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANK SNYDER.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4973) granting a pension to Frank Snyder, late private Company B, McLaughlin's Squadron, Ohio Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4515) increasing the pension of Mrs. Jane McKee from $30 to $50 per month.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The gentleman from Kentucky who introduced this bill is not present and I ask that it go on the Private Calendar.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported back, with unfavorable recommendations, the following bills and petition, and the same were laid upon the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 3626) granting a pension to Abby C. Haviland, widow of Dr. Abraham A. Haviland;

The bill (H. R. No. 2660) granting a pension to Charles Held, of Rochester, New York;

The bill (H. R. No. 3194) granting a pension to Sarah J. Russell and Emily E. Harpending, minor children of Hiram G. Harpending, deceased, late a private in Company D, Thirty-first Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers; and

The petition of Patrick Kinsella, for a pension as the father of John F. Kinsella, late private Company G, Thirty-fifth Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. RIDDLE also, from the same committee, reported back, with adverse recommendation, the petition of Eliza W. Ogden, of Mobile, Alabama, for a pension.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I desire that to go upon the Private Calendar.

The petition was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4702 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4974) to amend section 4702 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It amends section 4702 of the Revised Statutes by adding the following:

Provided, If the widow remarries and continues thereafter to draw the pension, the pension to the children shall commence at the date when payment to the said widow shall cease.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZA H. FRAILEY.

Mr. MACKEY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4975) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Eliza H. Frailey, widow of James Madison Frailey, late commodore in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MELISSA WAGNER.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2544) granting a pension to Melissa Wagner, widow of Jacob F. Wagner, late private in Company B, Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALICE B. MUNROE.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3598) granting a pension to Alice B. Munroe; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER KINCAID.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1007) granting a pension to Alexander Kincaid, of Company B, Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS WHO HAVE LOST TWO LIMBS, ETC.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2639, a bill (H. R. No. 4976) to increase the pensions of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both their eyes in the service of the country; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that on and after the passage of this act all soldiers and sailors who have lost either both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the United States shall be paid in lieu of the pensions now paid them by the Government of the United States, to be paid to them in the same manner as pensions are now paid, the sum of $72 per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACKEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS WHO HAVE LOST ONE HAND AND ONE FOOT.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3081, a bill (H. R. No. 4977) amending chapter 73 of the act approved February 28, 1877, relating to the pensions of soldiers who have lost one hand and one foot; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSIONERS.

Mr. POWERS, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3879) for the relief of certain pensioners.

Mr. POWERS. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read. It provides that all pensioners now on the pension-rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, for amputation of either leg at the hip-joint, shall receive a pension at the rate of $37.50 per month from the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POWERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES JOHNSTON.

Mr. POWERS also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4978) granting a pension to James Johnston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS C. YOUNG.

Mr. POWERS also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 846) for the relief of Thomas C. Young, late private in Company F, Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN GRUBBINS.

Mr. SINNICKSON, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4494) granting a pension to John Grubbins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL V. ADAMS.

Mr. SINNICKSON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3408) granting a pension to Samuel V. Adams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN GAVIN.

Mr. WALSH, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2489) granting a pension to John Gavin, of the Sixteenth New York Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE QUARREL.

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4979) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 908) granting a pension to George Quarrel, late a private in Company H, Tenth New York Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN DILLINGER.

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4980) granting a pension to John Dillinger, late a private Fifth Regiment United States Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLAIM AGENTS, ETC.

Mr. WALSH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4981) relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the passage of the bill.

The bill was read. It provides that it shall be unlawful for any attorney, agent, or other person, to demand or receive for his services in a pension case a greater sum than $25; that no fee contract shall hereafter be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions in any case and that in any pending case in which a fee contract has heretofore been filed, if the pension shall be allowed, the Commissioner of Pensions shall approve the same as to the amount of the fee to be paid.

The second section of the bill provides that sections 4768, 4769, and 4786 shall not apply to any case or claim heretofore filed or to any pending claim in which the claimant has not been represented by any agent or attorney prior to the passage of this act.

The third section repeals section 4785 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I cannot yield for an amendment.

Mr. EDEN. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to offer an amendment, to reduce the fee from $25 to $10.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for the amendment to be offered.

Mr. FULLER. This is more of a lawyer's bill than a pensioner's bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My amendment should come in first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WALSH] did not yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RANDOLPH] to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. WALSH. I will hear the amendment read.

Mr. RANDOLPH. My amendment proposes to repeal section 4709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WALSH. I cannot yield for the repeal of any other section.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Let the section be read.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Let it be read.

The Clerk read section 4709 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

All pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension; provided the application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions within five years after the right thereto has accrued; otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the last evidence necessary to establish the same. But the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons and children under sixteen years.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I ask the gentleman to yield for me to move an amendment to repeal the section of the Revised Statutes just read.

Mr. WALSH. I cannot yield for that amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Did the gentleman hear the section as it was read?

Mr. WALSH. I know what the section is; it does not relate to this bill at all. This bill relates solely to the fees of attorneys and agents in pension cases. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was first upon the amendment of Mr. FULLER, to strike out "$25" and insert in lieu thereof "$10," so that it would read as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any attorney, agent, or other person to demand or receive for his services in a pension case a greater sum than $10.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 58, noes 38.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I shall have to raise the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICE, of Ohio, and Mr. FULLER were appointed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Would it be in order for me to make a remark on this subject?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing.

Many MEMBERS. Let the bill be again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be again read if there is no objection.

The bill was again read.

Mr. RIDDLE. I think both sides will be willing to compromise on $15; $10 is too small a sum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done only by unanimous consent, the main question having been ordered.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the sum be fixed at $15. The majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions think that $10 is entirely too small a sum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed modification of the amendment?

Mr. HANNA. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the question is upon the amendment to strike out "$25" and insert "$10;" upon which tellers have been ordered and appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 98, noes 33.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I do not call for any further count.

No further count being called for, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARREARAGES OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WALSH. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back the petitions which I send to the Clerk's desk and to move that the committee be discharged from their further consideration and that they be laid on the table.

The petitions were as follows:

The petition of John Danlon, of Seventy-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, for a pension; and

The petition of James Birmingham, for leave to apply for a pension.

Mr. McMAHON. These petitions are for arrearages of pensions?

Mr. WALSH. They are.

Mr. McMAHON. And they are reported adversely, because there is a general bill covering these cases?

Mr. WALSH. That is so. They are not reported adversely upon their merits at all, but because we had a general bill covering the cases.

The motion of Mr. WALSH was then agreed to.

DANIEL M'CARRON.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 928) for the relief of the heirs of Daniel McCarron, and the committee was discharged from its further consideration, and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. JOYCE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 711) granting a pension to John S. Corlett; and

A bill (H. R. No. 754) granting a pension to James W. Crowley.

SUBSTITUTES FOR HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. JOYCE also, from the same committee, reported as substitutes for the bills named the following; which were read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 4982) granting a pension to Valeria C. Penrose, widow of William M. Penrose, late lieutenant-colonel Sixth Regiment Infantry Pennsylvania Reserve Corps—as a substitute for House bill No. 3272;

A bill (H. R. No. 4983) granting a pension to Sarah H. Bradford, mother of William H. Bradford, deceased—as a substitute for House bill No. 4487;

A bill (H. R. No. 4984) granting a pension to John L. Taylor—as a substitute for House bill No. 1473;

A bill (H. R. No. 4985) for the relief of George Denney, Company M, Seventh United States Cavalry—as a substitute for House bill No. 2453; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4986) granting a pension to H. Louise Gates—as a substitute for House bill No. 4296.

JAMIS H. COOK.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4987) granting a pension to Jamis H. Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALFRED RICHARDSON.

Mr. RAINEY. I am directed by the same committee, to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 874) granting a pension to Alfred Richardson, late of Company A, Twelfth Indiana Volunteers. At the request of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HANNA,] I ask that this bill be considered at the present time.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alfred Richardson, late of Company A, Twelfth Indiana Volunteers.

Mr. RAINEY. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAINEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 3258) to regulate the granting of pensions on account of death or wounds received since March 4, 1861, be reprinted, the supply having been long since exhausted. There is a great demand for the bill.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that certain Senate bills on the Speaker's table, granting pensions, be taken up and referred to the Committee on Invalid pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order now, as the committees are being called for reports.

WHITEWOOD FLUME COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. The Committee on Mines and Mining have directed me to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3669) incorporating the Whitewood Flume Company. This report is unanimous, and the Delegate from the Territory of Dakota [Mr. KIDDER] approves the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I make the point of order that this bill disposes of public property, and must therefore go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRICE. It does not dispose of any public property.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Yes, sir; it grants timber for ten feet on either side of the proposed ditch.

Mr. PRICE. Only so much as is necessary for the construction of the ditch.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Of course.

Mr. PRICE. It conforms to the law of the Territory through which the improvement passes.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I believe the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. This bill will go over to next Friday, and the point of order will be regarded as pending.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to bring a bill to the attention of the House by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In the first place, I ask to have read a resolution of the Committee and then a communication from the Secretary of State.

Mr. BRIGHT. I cannot consent to this; it will take too much time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] ought to allow the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] to present the matter which he has in hand.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. We ought to have to-day for private bills.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia; but I cannot yield to any other gentleman.

REFUND OF CERTAIN TONNAGE TAXES.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Clerk to read a resolution of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Copy from the minutes.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

At a meeting of this committee, held April 25, 1878, Mr. MONROE moved that Mr. WILSON be instructed to move that Senate bill No. 185 be taken from the Speaker's table, and ask that it be put upon its final passage as it passed the Senate; and it was so ordered.

C. SHIRLEY CARTER, Clerk.

Mr. WILSON. I also ask to have read a letter from the Secretary of State.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is not the bill which the gentleman proposes to bring forward a public bill?

Mr. WILSON. It is a private bill. I think the gentleman will see the propriety of it as soon as it is explained.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 22, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a note received from Count Lewenhaupt, the minister of Sweden and Norway in this country, in relation to the bill, (H. R. No. 1113,) introduced in November last, providing for the refund of certain tonnage taxes, and to commend the subject of the inclosure to the favorable consideration of your committee.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

HON. THOMAS SWANN,
Chairman of Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives.

(Inclosure: A copy of Count Lewenhaupt's note of May 20, 1878.)

Mr. WILSON. I also ask to have read a letter from the minister of Sweden and Norway.

Mr. WOOD. I must object to the consideration of this bill. It should have been referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. It is a revenue bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill to which these papers refer is unquestionably a public bill; and, if the point be made, it cannot be considered at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Friday, the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT]—which is also in the nature of a motion to suspend the rules—to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar, takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from New York. If the House should not agree to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, then the motion of the gentleman from New York will be in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, there were —ayes 110, noes 83.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. GARFIELD, were appointed.

The House divided and there were—ayes 79, noes 95.

So the motion of Mr. BRIGHT was rejected.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read section 9, which is the pending section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That from and after the 1st day of July next the Bureau of Military Justice shall consist of one Judge-Advocate-General with the rank and pay of colonel, and of four judge-advocates with the rank and pay of major; and the officers relieved by the operation of this provision shall be placed on the supernumerary list hereinafter provided for.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out that section.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 96.

Mr. FOSTER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. FOSTER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 99.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend section 9 by striking out the words "from and after the 1st day of July next" and in lieu thereof to insert "the board hereinafter provided in section 12 shall report whether;" so it will read, "that the board hereinafter provided for in section 12 shall report whether the Bureau of Military Justice shall consist of one Judge-Advocate-General," &c.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to occupy only a moment. The committee has already stricken out several of the sections relating to change of organization of staff corps. It is only fair, therefore, the whole subject should be considered together by the board to be hereinafter created. It would be specially unfair to select one, and particularly this one, the only law force in the Army, and strike it out of the staff organization when all the other parts are to be referred to this board of major-generals for action and report.

In this connection I wish to say that when the Bureau of Military Justice in its present form was first established, there was a good deal of jealousy on the part of Army officers against it. They were accustomed to what might be called the despotism of Army management, and to introduce the element of law among them and administration of justice was looked upon as a sort of interference with military discipline. But the years of existence of that bureau have not only changed all that feeling on the part of the better class of Army officers, but they are now almost if not quite unanimous that the Bureau of Military Justice has been, is now, and will hereafter continue to be of the greatest value to the Army in giving it order, law, discipline, and that good regulation which comes from a perfect understanding of martial law. Let me call to the attention of members a striking passage in a letter of General Hancock, where he speaks of the indispensable duties of the Judge-Advocate's corps and its value to all men invested with command in the Army. I ask the extract I have marked be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Major-General Hancock, in reply to inquiries of the congressional Army commission of 1876, after expressing the opinion that the number of judge-advocates is too small and that the grades of colonel and lieutenant-colonel should be introduced into the corps, says:

"The duties of judge-advocates are inseparable from the military system. They can only be fully and properly performed by men who make a specialty of them. If the regular corps be abolished or crippled the duty must be indifferently done wholly or partly by officers taken for the time from their proper positions. It is a fact worthy of special consideration that this corps constitutes the only element in our whole system of military jurisprudence which, not being created for temporary and special purposes, has the character of permanency. In the civil system, changeable juries simply find the facts, but judges, both eminent and permanent in the profession, determine questions of law and award sentences. In the military system courts are convened from time to time, composed of officers who act both as judges and jurors, but none of whom are in general selected with any reference to their knowledge of the judicial duties they are called upon to perform. In these courts the vote, for both findings and sentence, of the most ignorant in the law is as weighty as that of the most learned. In fact, the junior, presumably the most uninformed, is required to vote first, in order that he may not be influenced by his seniors.

"Is it wise to destroy or weaken, in these tribunals, their only element of stability?

"Inasmuch as the military is a more arbitrary and despotic system than the civil, so is uniform and even-handed justice the more necessary in it. But we are far from securing this under our code, even with our judge-advocates. Without an efficient corps of them we shall be still further from it. It is no uncommon thing to see soldiers as prisoners in charge of the same guard for identically the same offense, one under sentence of twice or even thrice the severity of another. They have been tried by different courts-martial, each using its discretion as to the amount of punishment for the common offense. Judge-advocates have not the power to prevent this evil by awarding sentences or otherwise, but so far as their limited number permits they mitigate it. I am not well informed as to the duties of the head of the bureau in Washington, but my own extended observation and experience justify me in speaking quite positively of the importance of judge-advocates at department headquarters. Without going into the details of the various duties required of them I will say that I consider them absolutely necessary. But the necessity for maintaining these officers does not rest alone on the importance of their current duties. A thorough knowledge of military law in its higher principles, as well as the intricacies of its details, is particularly necessary in new armies. Its prompt and correct application is one of the principal proceedings in the establishment of discipline and order in the armies which we rely upon creating in time of need. This can only be accomplished through a corps prepared beforehand. Ours is peculiarly a Government of law in the Army as well as out of it.

"In these remarks I have given prominence to the duties of judge-advocates in connection with courts-martial. But there are various other matters upon which I need not dwell, such as the questions arising out of the relation of military affairs to the civil service, in which their knowledge and experience are of great value to the public service, to commanding generals, and to subordinate officers.

"These are some of the general considerations which lead me to the conviction that a 'judge advocate's department' is an important and necessary feature of our military establishment, whether the regular Army be large or small."

Mr. GARFIELD. Besides, Mr. Chairman, I will say this: that in time of peace a Bureau of Military Justice is far more important to the Army than in time of war. We have our soldiers scattered through all portions of the Union and they are constantly coming against civil processes and within civil jurisdiction. I myself know of a large number of cases which have been argued in the Supreme Court of the United States by these officers of the Bureau of Military Justice, men who are thorough lawyers, and cases which have risen out of collisions between the civil and military departments. Hardly a day passes the commander of a great military department does not have some collision between military and civil authorities and it is as important to him, indeed more important to him, because he is not himself a civilian, that he should have the best judicial and legal authority under his command to look to these questions and act for him as it is for any of the Departments here in Washington to have such officers as their legal advisers.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman please designate the distinguished lawyers who compose the Judge-Advocate's corps?

Mr. GARFIELD. In the first place, the officer at the head of the corps at present, and then the officer who preceded him as Judge-Advocate-General, the distinguished lawyer, Judge Holt. They have several officers whom I know to be competent and thorough lawyers.

Mr. BRAGG. Name them.

Mr. GARFIELD. To say there shall be no law officers for the Army is to say we shall leave it measurably without law, and I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This does not propose to abolish the Bureau of Military Justice.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the gentleman from New York sees it cripples it hopelessly. There are some thousand cases of general court-martials every year, besides regimental court-martials, involving the rights and liberties of every soldier who comes within their purview. The Bureau of Military Justice is the private soldier's protection against military oppression, and to take away that safeguard is cruelty to those men. I hope the House will not allow this bureau to be thus crippled.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRAGG. I sincerely hope that the committee will make a bold stand upon this branch of the staff of the Army if they have weakened upon all others. It is said by distinguished Army officers that year after year the line are discriminated against; that there is great talk of reduction and retrenchment in the Army, and that the result invariably is the staff of the Army, the fungous growth of the war, the epaulets, the butterflies, are always provided for in the end much better than they were before, and all the reductions that take place in either rank or pay fall upon the men who do the labor in the service.

These staff corps are no more and no less than the ornaments such as you see upon the top of a building—of no value whatever and of no use, but only put upon it for the purposes of decoration, and in the carving the little birds make their nests and there breed.

This Bureau of Military Justice as it is now organized commenced since the war. Before the war the Judge Advocate-General was a captain of the regular Army with the rank of major, and all the work of the Army, the review of all the courts-martial of the Army, was done just as well by that bureau with its one officer who had the rank of major as it is now. But since the war, since the staff have been looking about for ingrafting upon the military service another department, they have magnified this department until now its head is a brigadier-general and with a large number of majors. I do not now remember, for I have not the figures before me, but they are altogether more than the needs of the service. The only business they have to do is not to attend court-martial trials, but to make up the record of the cases sent up, which is merely clerical work. Not one case in five hundred is reviewed by them as lawyers. The department belongs properly to the departments of the Adjutant-General and the Inspector-General consolidated, and it is utter nonsense under the plea of doing justice to the soldiers out upon the plains to have a judge-advocate here of the rank of brigadier and eight with the rank of major who do nothing except draw their pay. There is no work for them to do as lawyers.

If there was a necessity for this bureau it would have manifested itself long before this; but if a single officer in connection with the Adjutant-General was able to do the duties of all this corps prior to the war, I submit that this bill which provides now for a larger number of these gentlemen provides more force in proportion than the increase of the Army will seem to require.

The object of this amendment is that the question as to this bureau shall be submitted to officers whose business it is to consolidate together and to strengthen the staff. They will allow no branch of it to be attacked, else the balance will be attacked; and while they talk freely against each other, as soon as any branch of the staff is sought to be cut down then they go to protect each other on the principle of self-protection only.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word. I do not propose to reply to the attack of the gentleman from Wisconsin upon this corps. There is a practical question here, however, for the House to consider. We have provided in this bill for the reorganization of four staff departments, and then we propose to refer these staff departments after this legislation to a board to report to Congress next December. Then we take the six other staff departments without any legislation whatever and refer them also to the same board.

Now I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin or anybody else where the economy comes in. Every one of these officers retains his rank and pay precisely as if he were in one of these staff departments, and it is a confession of weakness on the part of the House first to legislate and then to submit that legislation to a commission which has to report to us next December. It will not save one dollar whether you keep these men in these offices or not. They draw their pay precisely the same whether they are there or whether they are out. There is not one cent of economy in this.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman from Ohio intend to have this House understand that when these men are placed on the supernumerary list only to be assigned to duty in case there be a proper field for them, the President of the United States will disregard the action of this House declaring them supernumerary and still keep them in service in spite of the voice of this House?

Mr. FOSTER. We have decreased the number of regiments to thirty-one or thirty-two, and the number of supernumerary officers will be very small, if the supernumerary provision is retained in the bill. They are on our hands. They will draw their pay and allowances precisely the same whether they are in this bureau or not in the bureau. We legislate here and then we refer our legislation to a board which is to report to us next December. Now I say that the common-sense way would be to refer all the four branches of the staff that we have been legislating about, as well as the eight others, to the board and let them report. It will not make a dollar's difference in the expense whether we do it or not, and I believe that this proposition will not be seriously antagonized either by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would like to ask my colleague a question. He proposes to refer these matters to a board of Army officers. Would not that be the same thing as if we were to refer to the syndicate the question of fixing the price of their bonds?

Mr. FOSTER. This is a suggestion that came from the other side of the House. I think the appointment of such a board is eminently proper and that good results will come from it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I understand that the proposition is not to refer everything in relation to the staff corps to this board.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken; everything is referred to them.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I understand that to be your proposition and not the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the proposition of the bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I thought it was the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the proposition of the bill is to refer everything to this board in relation to the staff corps?

Mr. FOSTER. Everything.

Mr. SPARKS. Then I am sadly mistaken about it.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to the gentleman who has charge of the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The bill itself is the best answer to that question. The proposition is, after making provision for a portion of the staff, to refer the remainder to the board.

Mr. FOSTER. No; it refers to the whole.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. After we have reduced the Bureau of Military Justice to a Judge-Advocate-General and four judge-advocates, then any other question is referred to the board.

Mr. FOSTER. We refer the Engineer department, the Ordnance department, and the Medical department, that we have legislated about, and the Quartermaster's Department, that we have legislated about, to this board, the Pay department and the Bureau of Military Justice, and we also refer the Adjutant-General's department.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. We do it for this reason, that we have reduced the force of this bureau to four, and it is probable that the board will recommend its reduction to one. We go as far as we can, and I wish the House to understand that we have gone to the limit of existing law. There is now a statute which provides that as judge-advocates die or go out of the service the number shall be reduced, and for that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who addressed the House and the gentleman who now has the floor [Mr. FOSTER] voted; all the effect of it is to put into operation now what would be the result under the statute on the death or retirement of judge-advocates, and then to refer the question to the board that they may determine whether a further reduction can be made.

Mr. FOSTER. And what is that for?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. We suppose that there may be a further reduction.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, it may seem absurd for me to attempt to explain any of the provisions of this section after the distinguished gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. FOSTER] have spoken, but it seems to me that there is one feature of it that the House has not had its attention attracted to.

If I understand this section at all or anything in relation to the Bureau of Military Justice, the present law provides that vacancies shall be created by casualties until the aggregate number of officers is reduced to one Judge-Advocate-General and four assistant judge-advocates. When vacancies occur they are not to be filled at all. The Committee on Appropriations, by this bill, as I understand it, in their hot haste to economize and retrench, does away with that wholesome provision of law and proposes to reduce the number of judge-advocates from nine, as it is now, not brigadier-generals and colonels, as the gentleman from Wisconsin says, but one brigadier-general and nine assistants with the rank of major, at once, or practically at once, by the 1st of July, so as to save to the Government a few dollars on the score of economy. You cannot construe the section in any other way, it appears to me. I can only repeat that there is now by law one Judge-Advocate-General and nine assistant judge-advocates. There can be no promotions, but, when vacancies occur through death, resignation, or retirement, those vacancies are not to be filled. This bill provides that on and after the 1st day of July next the office of Judge-Advocate-General shall not only be reduced in rank and pay, but that there shall be but four assistant judge-advocates with the rank and pay of major. Now, without professing to know anything specially about the duties of the judge-advocates of the Army, I presume that, like many other officers, like members of Congress perhaps, they discharge their duties, when called upon, to the best of their ability, and when they are through they engage in the "butterfly" business around Washington, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has suggested.

If so, I do not see what right we have to complain, neither do I understand the animus of these attacks upon not only the staff but upon all the officers of the Army. Unfortunately the members of the House have been unable yet to see the printed speeches of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS,] and those who listened to them are obliged to rely upon their memory of what they said.

Now, if I remember rightly, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] with all the keen and polished wit for which he is celebrated, attacked every officer of the Army, from the General down. He spoke eloquently about the manner in which they drink "cock-tails" and "punches," as I understood him, and of the way in which they enjoyed themselves at their posts, being waited upon in a "lordly manner" by private soldiers. Now, I desire to state the character of the officers of the Army, so as to show the true nature of this effort which is being made to convince the country of its aristocratic tendencies. I have here a list of the officers of the different regiments of cavalry and infantry, the arms of the service which the other side of the House yesterday struck down; the arms of the service that practically do all the fighting in the present condition of affairs.

The infantry is in all armies the most numerous, the cheapest, and under ordinary circumstances the most efficient. It is the soul of an army, for while in certain contingencies the other arms of the service may be dispensed with the infantry are indispensable; and it has been discriminated against by the committee at all times and under all circumstances.

As the names of the commanders of the regiments have been mentioned in debate, I will call attention to the officers of the Fifth Infantry, commanded by General Miles; of the Seventh Cavalry, commanded by General Sturgis, (formerly Custer's regiment,) and the Seventh Infantry, commanded by Colonel Gibbon, the old division commander of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

Mr. CONGER and Mr. SPARKS rose.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKS. That can be done directly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] desire more time to conclude his remarks?

Mr. McCOOK. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. I will yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK.]

Mr. SPARKS. I will seek the floor afterward.

Mr. McCOOK. I thank the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] Of the officers of the Fifth Infantry Regiment 6 are graduates of West Point, 4 have been promoted from the ranks, and 25 have been appointed from civil life. In the Seventh Cavalry Regiment 26 officers are graduates of West Point, 2 have been promoted from the ranks, and 15 have been appointed from civil life. In the Seventh Infantry, General Gibbon's regiment, 12 officers are graduates of West Point, 8 have been promoted from the ranks, and 15 have been appointed from civil life. Of the aggregate officers in the cavalry and infantry arms of the service 376 are graduates of West Point, 153 have been promoted from the ranks, and 672 have been appointed from civil life.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] state the rank of those appointed from civil life?

Mr. McCOOK. I am about to do that. In addition to what I have stated is this singular and striking fact: all that a man has to do is to look at the Army Register and he will find that two-thirds of the officers who are graduates of West Point are officers of the lower ranks, first and second lieutenants, who have graduated from West Point since the close of the war of the rebellion and have been assigned to the Army.

Of those appointed from civil life nine-tenths served with distinction either as non-commissioned officers or private soldiers in the regular Army or as officers in the volunteer forces engaged in the war of the rebellion.

In order to be perfectly fair about it, I will concede that in the staff departments and in the artillery branch of the service the proportion of appointments from civil life is not so great. Yet, in the artillery branch of the service, there are one hundred and sixty graduates of West Point, seventeen officers promoted from the ranks, and ninety officers appointed from civil life. Even in the staff corps, those "pet corps" of which the gentleman speaks and which he especially assails on all occasions, the officers who are graduates from West Point number two hundred and thirty-eight, two have been promoted from the ranks, and three hundred and thirty-eight have been appointed from civil life.

I do not know that I desire to say anything further on this subject except to call attention to the following tables, showing from where the officers come who are now in service:

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKS and Mr. BRAGG addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to a question of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. I am accused of having reflected upon the character of the officers of the Army of the United States. I think the gentleman who made that accusation, upon a moment's reflection, will see that he does me great injustice.

Mr. McCOOK. Allow me one suggestion.

Mr. BRAGG. I have never made any such charge at all. But it has become exceedingly fashionable for all gentlemen who propose to support the present Army establishment, when an attack is made upon that establishment as pernicious, to say that we are assailing the officers who are supported by that establishment.

Mr. McCOOK. Allow me to say——

Mr. BRAGG. I know, Mr. Chairman, that there are no more gallant men in the world than there are among the officers of the United States Army. But I stated only a fact when I said that our present Army organization and the needs of the Army are such that these men are compelled to spend their time in sheer idleness—have nothing to do. Gallant though they would be were there a chance for action, there is no call for action; and when they are stationed at a post with a corporal and five men, they have nothing in the world to do but to contrive some way by which they may idle away their time, which hangs heavy upon their hands. That is the charge I made.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Did I not understand my friend from Wisconsin, in his instructive address the other night, to offer some advice to General Sherman and recommend to him the example of Cincinnatus? Did not the gentleman comment upon the amount of salary which General Sherman is receiving and the luxury in which he lives; and was not this done in an offensive manner? I make this inquiry in justice to my friend from Wisconsin, whom I like very much.

Mr. BRAGG. I am very glad to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I did say, when speaking of that office, that it was supernumerary. I did say, in reply to an interrogatory put to me by the gentleman from New York, that it would be better for the men who have had the purse of the nation opened and lavishly emptied into their pockets, to follow the example of Cincinnatus rather than to hold office as supernumeraries with extravagant salaries, while the people are groaning for bread all over the land.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. May I not ask the gentleman from Wisconsin——

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, this debate has drifted away from the real subject-matter before the committee, which is the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] The gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK,] championing the Army, as he evidently has the right to do, for he was himself a distinguished officer, would have the impression produced, it seems to me, that he and his partisan friends are the only friends of the Army. I object most seriously to such a claim. As I understand, the gentlemen with whom I act politically (I know that such is my own feeling) have the highest regard for the Army and the men who command it. And I am quite sure that I have said nothing in this House that would warrant any supposition to the contrary. I would, however, correct such abuses as have grown up in the management of the Army. But whenever we attempt to do this we have the indignant protest and opposition of the gentleman from New York and those with whom he is in political affiliation.

Mr. McCOOK. If the gentleman would read my speech, which has been published, (as the gentleman's speech made the other day has not been,) he would see how I feel about this matter. I desire to correct any abuses in the Army, if they exist.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman complains that some gentlemen on this side of the House have made speeches that are not yet published in the RECORD. So far as concerns the remarks which I made on this bill, I had not one word prepared in writing—simply some notes. Whatever I said was uttered off-hand, as everybody must have discovered at the time. As soon as I get an opportunity to revise the notes the reporters have given me, the speech certainly will appear in the RECORD, and I hope that will be satisfactory to the gentleman.

But I propose now to come to the proposition before the committee. I do not care about being drawn off into any other side discussion. The bill under consideration proposes to regulate certain departments of the military service now fixedly and permanently as a matter of law; for instance, the Adjutant-General's, Quartermaster-General's, Paymaster-General's, and other departments. Then beyond this provision is made in the bill for the appointment by the President of a board of Army officers to consider various subjects connected with the Army with a view to modification and further amendment. In other words, we fix the Adjutant-General's department, the Inspector-General's department, and other departments, and then provide for a board who may look over this whole matter and report to Congress at the next session. We now enact certain provisions of law and at the same time provide for a board of Army officers to give us at a future session suggestions upon which any necessary amendments may be based.

Now the gentleman from Ohio who offers this amendment makes the point that we ought not now to fix any of these matters by law, but ought to submit everything to this board and ought to do nothing until this board reports. The committee think, on the contrary, that we ought to make certain amendments or modifications now. Then we can submit questions to this board and it may give us enlightenment on the subject for future action and reform.

Mr. BANNING. I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no gentleman, so far as I know, has found any fault with Army officers; the great difficulty is with Congress. I hold in my hand a report made in 1869 by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] in which report he recommends the consolidation of these ten staff departments into five. This was in 1869, nearly ten years ago, when the strength of the staff department was about the same as it is now, for there has been but little legislation on the subject since. Now, when we attempt some legislation in the direction pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio in 1869, the gentlemen oppose it.

Mr. Chairman, we have in the staff two hundred and fifty field officers; in the line one hundred and fifty. Yesterday, gentlemen on the other side told us that all our efforts at reduction were directed against the line, not against the staff. Now we have passed the line and reached the staff; and they complain because we propose to reduce the staff.

Mr. Chairman, the matter of judge-advocates has been well considered by Army officers. We have been frequently asked during this discussion why we do not follow the advice of Army officers. I now ask gentlemen on the other side to consider the advice of some Army officers upon this subject. General Sherman says:

The bureau grew up out of the war. In my opinion it is better to detail an officer of the line as judge-advocate for each court-martial. It encourages the study of military law by young officers usually detailed as judge-advocates. Lawyers introduced into the Army have not improved discipline or increased the measure of substantial justice, which is the object of courts-martial, rather than the technical judgments of courts of record.

That is the opinion of the General of the Army. I read from General Sykes, now a colonel of the line:

I have long thought the Bureau of Military Justice has injured the discipline of the Army.

General Jeff. Davis gives the same opinion. In order that we may fully appreciate what the Army officers themselves think of this organization, I read further what General Palmer says:

But for the so-called "Bureau of Military Justice." I think there is but one opinion outside of that "bureau." Even were the members of it profound lawyers and gentlemen, there would be no use for it, as the judge-advocates selected for the military trials from the officers of the Army, as a general rule, do the duty better than do those who are appointed to a military grade from the ranks of the legal profession. It is even justice that we wish at a military trial, and the tricks and subterfuges resorted to by small lawyers who wish to display their legal lore are entirely out of place in the trials of either officers or enlisted men.

The melancholy spectacle has been presented to me of seeing one of the bureau madly intent on convicting a poor fellow who had incurred the displeasure of a friend of the judge-advocate. In a few days thereafter the same judge-advocate was exercising all his low cunning to screen a miserable fellow who had the sympathy of another friend. No, sir; those who desire to see justice administered in the Army will all agree that the old system of choosing the judge-advocates from the officers of the Army was the best. Nowadays an officer will wait for months to hear the result of a trial, and a soldier will remain for the same time in a guard-house awaiting the leisure of some one of these law-officers to review his case.

There is the opinion of the Army officers. I hold in my hand a book which contains fifty-three opinions of Army officers, and four-fifths of them think this department should be done away with entirely.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hold this section should not be stricken out. Army officers are of the opinion it should not be stricken out. They are of the opinion that judge-advocates have injured the discipline of the Army. Before the war we had for the entire Army only one judge-advocate, who was a brevet major and an officer of the Ordnance department. At the present time in the Judge-Advocate's Office there are but very few cases pending for all these distinguished gentlemen to manage. It cannot be said if we turn these men out we have done them any injustice. They are not serving in the line of the Army. They have been improving themselves in their profession. They are not needed. There is no reason in the world why they should be kept. No gentleman can rise in his place and give one solitary reason why they should be kept. Army officers testify they are unnecessary and hurtful to the service. Colonel Andrews, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, says the Bureau of Military Justice is "a positive injury to the discipline of the service."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANNING. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. HALE. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion, as I presume most men here have had, to know something of the practical uses of this Bureau of Military Justice to the Army. It is the bureau which I might say softens the severity of military dicipline when it is overwrought; it is the bureau which, in revising courts-martial proceedings, in attending courts martial, mitigates what might otherwise be severity of punishment administered both to private soldier and officer, and its importance in this regard cannot be over-rated. Other gentlemen have had, no doubt, the same experience I have had. But I do not claim to have such exhaustive knowledge of this subject as officers of the Army, and I have risen principally for the purpose of having read an authority which should be considered good by gentlemen on either side of this House and that is the exhaustive but not long letter of General Hancock, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. BANNING. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HALE. There will only be time enough to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Major-General Hancock, in reply to inquiries of the congressional Army commission of 1876, after expressing the opinion that the number of judge-advocates is too small and that the grades of colonel and lieutenant-colonel should be introduced into the corps, says:

"The duties of judge-advocates are inseparable from the military system. They can only be fully and properly performed by men who make a specialty of them. If the regular corps be abolished or crippled the duty must be indifferently done wholly or partly by officers taken for the time from their proper positions. It is a fact worthy of special consideration that this corps constitutes the only element in our whole system of military jurisprudence which, not being created for temporary and special purposes, has the character of permanency. In the civil system changeable juries simply find the facts, but judges, both eminent and permanent in the profession, determine questions of law and award sentences. In the military system courts are convened from time to time, composed of officers who act both as judges and jurors, but none of whom are in general selected with any reference to their knowledge of the judicial duties they are called upon to perform. In these courts the vote, for both findings and sentence, of the most ignorant in the law is as weighty as that of the most learned. In fact, the junior, presumably the most uninformed, is required to vote first, in order that he may not be influenced by his seniors.

"Is it wise to destroy or weaken, in these tribunals, their only element of stability?

"Inasmuch as the military is a more arbitrary and despotic system than the civil, so is uniform and even-handed justice the more necessary in it. But we are far from securing this under our code, even with our judge-advocates. Without an efficient corps of them we shall be still further from it. It is no uncommon thing to see soldiers, as prisoners in charge of the same guard, for identically the same offense one under sentence of twice or even thrice the severity of another. They have been tried by different courts-martial, each using its discretion as to the amount of punishment for the common offense. Judge-advocates have not the power to prevent this evil by awarding sentences or otherwise, but so far as their limited number permits they mitigate it. I am not well informed as to the duties of the head of the bureau in Washington, but my own extended observation and experience justify me in speaking quite positively of the importance of judge-advocates at department headquarters. Without going into the details of the various duties required of them I will say that I consider them absolutely necessary. But the necessity for maintaining these officers does not rest alone on the importance of their current duties. A thorough knowledge of military law in its higher principles, as well as the intricacies of its details, is particularly necessary in new armies. Its prompt and correct application is one of the principal proceedings in the establishment of discipline and order in the armies which we rely upon creating in time of need. This can only be accomplished through a corps prepared beforehand. Ours is peculiarly a Government of law in the Army as well as out of it.

"In these remarks I have given prominence to the duties of judge-advocates in connection with courts-martial. But there are various other matters upon which I need not dwell, such as the questions arising out of the relation of military affairs to the civil service, in which their knowledge and experience are of great value to the public service, to commanding generals, and to subordinate officers.

"These are some of the general considerations which lead me to the conviction that a 'judge-advocate's department' is an important and necessary feature of our military establishment, whether the regular Army be large or small."

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine whether when the Army was more than sixty thousand strong was he not the author of a motion in this House, which afterward became a law, providing these judge-advocates should only be kept in service until the cases of courts-martial growing out of the war were disposed of?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I remember very well it was agreed when the cases growing out of the war were disposed of and reduction of the force was found to be possible with the present every-day duties, that reduction should take place.

Mr. BANNING. Not a reduction in the number; but that after these records were closed up they should be mustered out of the service. Is not that the law of which the gentleman was the author?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAYES. I rise simply to make a suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. HAYES. I move to strike out the last word.

For three evenings we have had night sessions and have absolutely accomplished nothing. Now, what I want to say is this: is it not about time that we stopped talking and went to working? We have had speeches made here this morning, very able speeches no doubt, but nobody has listened to them; we have had reports made and nobody has listened to the reports; and now I say, Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the members of this House to stop talking and go to voting, that we may see if we cannot get through with this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter entirely under the control of the committee.

Mr. HAYES. I understand that.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The question being taken on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment to section 9, there were—ayes 72, noes 85.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 10, as follows:

That hereafter the Pay department shall consist of one Paymaster-General with the rank and pay of colonel, two assistant paymasters-general with the rank and pay of lieutenant-colonel, and forty paymasters with the rank and pay of major. Vacancies in the grade of major in said department shall be filled by appointment from the captains of the line of the Army: Provided, That no person shall be appointed who shall have passed the age of forty-five years, nor until he shall pass a satisfactory examination before a board, to consist of the Paymaster-General and two officers of the Army, designated by the Secretary of War, one of whom shall be a medical officer.

Mr. COVERT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 10 by inserting after the word "Army," in line 7, the words "or from paymasters who have heretofore been mustered out of service or have resigned."

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations have given to this bill now under consideration days and weeks of earnest thought and patient labor. I regret that I feel it my duty to antagonize in any way the work they have presented to us in the shape of this bill, even so far as regards what may be considered a comparatively small detail of it. I can only regret that the committee could not feel at liberty to incorporate the amendment just presented, or the substance of it, in the bill when they were engaged in the work of framing the pending measure.

As a civilian I know, of course, practically nothing of the details of Army organization. I know little of the duties of a paymaster in the Army, except as I have learned upon inquiry what those duties are. I understand them to be substantially the keeping correctly money accounts and the disbursement of moneys intrusted to them for that purpose. In other words, that the position involves the discharge of the composite duties of an accountant and a cashier. I yield to none, sir, in the desire that promotion in all appropriate directions may follow faithful service in subordinate positions. I recognize this principle as lying at the very foundation of all proper and successful organization, be it in military or civic affairs. I shall be the last to advocate upon this floor any change in this eminently just and proper rule of action. But while I say this, I hold in addition that the officer thus sought to be promoted, apart from the past faithful performance of duty, shall show peculiar ability to discharge higher functions, or that his past service has fitted him for the appropriate and proper discharge of the duties pertaining to a higher grade of service. In other words, that fitness for position—whatever the position may be—and that especial quality alone, shall determine either appointment or promotion.

I know no reason, sir, why an officer who has satisfactorily and faithfully discharged the duties of a captain of the line should by reason of this fact especially be deemed superlatively well fitted to perform the peculiar duties of an accountant or cashier. A man may be a gallant, chivalric, and successful line officer, and yet lack the somewhat exceptional qualities especially demanded to make a good paymaster. The amendment just offered does not, however, exclude these officers from promotion to the position of paymaster with the rank of major. The amendment is in the alternative. Paymasters shall be appointed from captains of the line or from among former paymasters who have been mustered out of the service or who have resigned. The close of the late war witnessed the mustering out and resignation of a number of these officers, who had discharged with eminent fidelity the onerous and very responsible duties which had devolved upon them. By actual service they had learned thoroughly all the details of the work pertaining to the position, and, if reappointed, they would bring to the discharge of their duties all the experience they had thus gained in the past.

My amendment merely gives to the President the power to appoint an ex-paymaster to position if he finds the record of the officer good and if he passes the examination prescribed in the pending bill; an examination held before Army officers whose predilections if not prejudices would perhaps favor the exclusion of civilians and the appointment of officers of the Army to these positions.

I can see no objection, sir, to giving to the man or men who have served faithfully in this position, who have demonstrated their fitness for it, who have been "tried in the balances and found not wanting," the perhaps remote opportunity to perform similar service again. Indeed it seems to me an application, if such application is permissible in this connection, of the cardinal features of civil-service reform to Army organization; and it is in the spirit of civil-service reform thus applied, and to the end that the fittest men may be appointed to these positions in the Army, that I have offered the amendment just submitted.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask the attention for a moment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] while I make a suggestion in reference to his amendment. I do not rise to antagonize it but to suggest that I would prefer it if he will insert in his proposed amendment after the word "paymaster" the words "or other officers." I would suggest also to strike out of the proposed amendment the word "heretofore;" because if this is to be a permanent law in future it should not be limited to those who have been mustered out after this date. I think, therefore, that word ought to be stricken out. Then I desire to insert before the word "mustered" the word "honorably," so that the amendment as I desire to have it would read:

Or from paymasters or other officers who have been honorably mustered out of service or have resigned.

Mr. COVERT. I accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Perhaps it would be well to say or other "Army" officers.

Mr. KEIFER. That would be better.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the amendment may be reported as it is now modified.

The amendment, as modified, was read.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] for his acceptance the addition of the words:

Or clerks who shall have served at least five years in the Paymaster-General's Office.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is also right.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand this to be the desire of the Paymaster-General.

Mr. COVERT. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the amendment be read as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Army," in line 7, section 10, insert the following words: Or from paymasters or other Army officers who have been honorably mustered out of service or have resigned, or clerks who shall have served at least five years in the Paymaster-General's Office.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to suggest an amendment, which I think will not be objected to. There may be a doubt as to whether the expression "Army officers" would not limit it to the appointment of those who belong only to the regular Army. I desire, therefore, to suggest to the gentleman that he insert before the word "Army" the words "regular or volunteer." I presume there will be no objection to that on any hand.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I do not think it necessary.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is.

Mr. COVERT. I have no objection to the modification.

The question was put on Mr. COVERT'S amendment, as modified; and on a division, there were ayes 80, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I will now move to strike out the entire section, and I will only repeat the argument that I have already made that there is not a bit of economy in this legislation. It does not save a dollar. We legislate and then confess our weakness in this legislation by referring the same subject to a board. It seems to me to be a wiser plan, especially in reference to this department, to refer the matter to the board without any legislation.

Mr. BANNING. I desire to say one word in reply to my colleague. The Paymaster-General has said himself that he could get along with five less officers than he now has. By reference to the testimony and report of the committee, on page 446, the gentleman will find that these paymasters in discharging their duty of paying off the Army were some of them occupied only about sixteen days in a month.

Mr. KEIFER. How many of them are there?

Mr. BANNING. Fifty-five.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Fifty-five in the whole department.

Mr. BANNING. I hold in my hand the report, which shows that, of the officers employed in traveling and paying the troops, some of them are occupied only eight days, some only two days, others seven days, others ten days, others six days, and others three days. Here is a list giving the names of the paymasters and the number of days they are occupied. But no one of them was occupied as much as one month in every two months. This shows that we might reduce the number of paymasters at least one-half and then have more than enough, and that is the report of the Paymaster-General.

Mr. FOSTER. I make no point about the number of paymasters; that is not what I am driving at. What I desire is to refer this whole subject of paymasters to the board.

Mr. BANNING. I have only this to say further. We have been trying to do something since 1869, but we have done nothing with the staff department, until there are now two hundred and fifty field officers on the staff and one hundred and fifty in the line.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the section, and that is to strike out the words "forty-five," at the end of line 8, and to insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" so as to make it provide that no person shall be appointed who shall have passed the age of fifty-five years. It seems to me that the limit is altogether too severe. I cannot understand why a man of fifty-five is not quite as well qualified to perform the duties of paymaster as a man of forty-five. A man of fifty-five ought to be as good an officer as a man at forty-five or fifty-four. There may be men who have served in the regular or volunteer Army who are eligible under this section for these appointments at the age of fifty-four or fifty-five, and they may indeed have greater qualifications at that age than men of forty-five. I insist that in putting the gauge so low you do injustice to men and narrow the field from which selections are to be made for this very important department of the Army. I trust the committee will consent to my amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am sorry to differ with the gentleman from Minnesota, whose suggestions I always try to conform to, because I generally find them sensible, but on this occasion he is mistaken. I am informed by the officers of the Pay department that the real trouble is that the paymasters are too old for the services they have to perform. They have to travel long distances and are exposed to very great hardships, and what the department wants is young men for this service. Recently a paymaster was appointed at an age which entirely unfitted him for the work of the service, and I am quite clear that if there is anything that the Pay department desires it is to secure younger men for the work they have to do.

Mr. DUNNELL. It seems to me that if fifty years was fixed upon as the grade, it would be more just than forty-five. I am not willing to admit that when a man is fifty-five years old he may not be able to perform the duties of paymaster. The gentleman from New York and myself are probably both in the neighborhood of fifty-five.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. But I am entirely unfit for that class of work. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Not physically.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Yes. I am physically incapable of doing the kind of work required of a paymaster. But I ask the gentleman to consider for a moment that if a man enters this service at fifty-four or fifty-five he has to go upon the retired list, under the present law, at sixty-two years of age, and for the rest of his days the people of the country have to pay him 75 per cent. of his pay and allowances. If there be any place where young men should be appointed it is in this service.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, and I wish to say one word upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out the last word. I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is usually very kind and very charitable; but I think it is rather unkind for the member of the Committee on Appropriations who has charge of this bill to intimate upon this floor that a gentleman who has recently been appointed a paymaster of the Army is wholly unfit for the discharge of his duties. That gentleman was capable of going into the field when he was in poorer health than he is to-day, and serving there by day and by night and discharging his duties well.

There is a great deal of fine distinction in determining the age which unfits a man for service in the Army. We know that during the late war many men, both in the southern army and in the northern army, over sixty years of age went into the field and discharged their duties there under the most trying circumstances and discharged them well, breasting the storms and facing the dangers not only of the battle-field but of the weather at all seasons of the year. Yet in the year 1878 we find ourselves so dwindled down in manhood and strength that we are afraid to trust a man over forty-five years of age to go to New York or New Orleans or on the Pacific coast and pay troops, although many men of greater age go there merely as a matter of pleasure-seeking. It is true that in a very few cases these paymasters have to go to remote places on the plains, but in those places the climate is healthful and they generally go under escort, and if obliged to remain out of doors they are protected by tents or otherwise.

It seems to me there is something invidious in this limitation to forty-five years. It must be meant to cut off some persons. It is but a short time since that a gentleman born in the last century was urged for the place of standard-bearer of the democratic party, and in my section of the country he had a pretty good following. He had been governor of Ohio, and, so far as I know, had discharged his duties pretty well. But when we come to provide for a mere paymaster in the Army, to discharge ordinarily only clerical duties, we say that a man over forty-five years of age is utterly unfit to dischage such duties on account of age.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the limit thirty-five years of age.

Mr. KEIFER. Why not make it twenty? [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGINNIS. This idea of appointing a man to an office like that of paymaster in the Army, where he obtains a high rank at the first jump, without ever having performed any particular service to earn it, and from which in a few years he can be retired in order to make room for others, and those for others still, it seems to me is all wrong.

The very theory and principle upon which our large force of paymasters is based is that the duties which they have to perform are so arduous, our troops are scattered over such a vast extent of territory, they have to make such long journeys in summer and in winter, that we must have the best men for this purpose. If it were not for that fact, if our troops were all in towns in the neighborhood of national banks, we might dispense with the whole of the paymaster's staff and pay the troops by Treasury certificates.

I say that it requires young, active, energetic men to be paymasters in the Army. The Government should have the advantage of a number of years' service on the part of these men before they are placed on the retired list and allowed to draw the very large retired pay which we allow officers on that list.

Mr. BRAGG. I think the amendment of the Delegate from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] is a very good one. The theory upon which we place men upon the retired list is that they have either been wounded or injured or have sustained some disability in the service or that from length of service they have worn themselves out in performing their duties. These are the two things for which we put men on the retired list.

Now, when we come to provide for making appointments in a department like the Pay department, where the duties which are to be performed are in that department alone, we should place there men of vigor, men who have sufficient life before them to render it probable that the service which they may perform for the Government will be sufficient to warrant the Government in placing them upon the retired list when they arrive at sixty-two or sixty-five years of age. There would then be some excuse for placing them on that list.

But if you appoint men who are fifty or fifty-five years of age, you will simply provide for the appointment of men who may secure enough political favor to obtain a position, where in four, six, or eight years they would become pensioners of the Government, drawing three-fourths of the pay of a major or a colonel.

A man at fifty years of age may be able to discharge the duties of a paymaster, but how long will he be able to travel through the Territories from New Mexico to Arizona or to Idaho or to the frontier posts, traveling thousands and thousands of miles with an escort; how many years would it take him, if he has passed fifty, before he will be disqualified to discharge the duties of his office in a proper way? He will be sure to break down, and will become disqualified, and will then be placed on the retired list by reason of disability contracted in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend pro forma——

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I will withdraw my amendment, which was offered in good faith, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] will renew it.

Mr. KEIFER. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, the only plausible argument against the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota proposing to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty-five," is that men who are appointed at so late an age as fifty-five may soon be retired. I wish to call attention to the fact that it is proposed mainly to select paymasters from officers of the Army—officers of the line. Now gentlemen argue that after passing the age of forty-five these officers will be too old for paymasters; yet they are willing to keep them in service in the line, in command of troops in the field. It is argued that after this age these officers are utterly unfit to become paymasters, in which positions they might occasionally get rest and relief from service in the field; but at the same time it is proposed to require them to stay constantly in command of troops, performing service which is very much harder, more dangerous, and more likely to break them down.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAGINNIS. How many appointments to the position of paymaster have been of the character spoken of by the gentleman? Look at all the late appointments to the position of paymaster. From where do the appointees come? One has been taken out of the executive office; one has been appointed from Illinois, a vacancy having been created for the purpose; another appointment has been made from civil life; another within my own knowledge has been made from my own Territory through political influence. I venture to say that if I had in my hand a list of recent appointments I could go through the whole and show that scarcely one appointment has been made from the character of officers of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. KEIFER. I am speaking of the bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations. It made it the absolute duty of the President of the United States to appoint all officers of this class from the Army; and by the very terms of the bill, after becoming forty-five years of age, they are unfit to be made paymasters, although they may still be continued indefinitely in service which is much more laborious and dangerous.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BANNING. Do gentlemen mean to say that a man who has served until the age of forty-five in the line of the Army, doing no civil business whatever, will be a proper man to be made a paymaster, and have the management of large sums of money? Has it not been——

Mr. KEIFER. Let me answer that question before the gentleman goes any further. That is the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty-five," it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. FOSTER to strike out the pending section, there were—ayes 78, noes 79.

Mr. FOSTER called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. FOSTER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 95.

So the motion of Mr. FOSTER was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee of the Whole rose informally, when a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. DAWES, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. EUSTIS.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies for encouragement of the arts and sciences, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 72) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham; and

An act (S. No. 498) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the second judicial district.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the President is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of July next, to constitute a board to consist of the three major-generals of the Army whose duty it shall be to examine into and report to the President, on or before the 1st day of December next, upon the organization, practical working, and efficiency of the Corps of Engineers, the Ordnance department, the Medical department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence department, the Pay department, the Signal Service, the artillery service, the Bureau of Military Justice, the Adjutant-General's department, and the Inspector-General's department, and to make such suggestions as, in the judgment of said board, will increase the usefulness or reduce the cost of the maintenance of the Army and of the several branches of the service above specified, which report, when so made, shall be submitted to Congress by the President; and, until otherwise authorized by law, no new appointments nor promotions shall be made in any of the said departments of the military service, except to fill vacancies occurring in the grades provided for in this act. In the event of the inability to act or the death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HALE. I make a point of order on this section, that it changes existing law and does not upon its face carry with it any retrenchment of expenditures. This section provides for the organization of a board of major-generals whose duty it shall be to examine into the organization of certain bureaus of the Army and to make such suggestions "as in the judgment of said board will increase the usefulness or reduce the cost of the maintenance of the Army." The board under the authority here conferred may recommend something that while increasing the usefulness of the Army, will largely increase its cost or it may recommend something that will reduce the cost of maintaining the Army. The latter is one of the alternatives; but there is nothing in the provisions to indicate that the board is to confine its recommendations to such propositions as will reduce the expenditures in this branch of the service.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, this section makes no appropriation of money; there is no expenditure involved in it. These major-generals, under the law as it stands, will receive no more pay or allowances whether they serve or not as members of this board. The provision is clearly germane to the subject-matter of the bill; and therefore it seems to me the point of order cannot be sustained.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the gentleman's statement at all obviates the operation of the rule. It is not necessary that a new provision shall contain an appropriation in order to be subject to a point of order. When a provision proposed as part of a regular appropriation bill changes the existing law it must appear affirmatively that it carries with it the idea of retrenchment. The President at present is not authorized and required to appoint such a board. The present law is a blank on that subject. There is a new law created which declares that the President is authorized and required—that is, he must—appoint this new board. Without this law he would have no right to appoint it. Without the law he would make no such appointment. It is conceded by new legislation. I do not know whether it carries with it an appropriation or not. The idea of the rule is that you must have a retrenchment clause, and if you do not you cannot change the law.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I need hardly call your attention to the fact that the intention of the section is obviously for retrenchment; that is clear on the face of it. The object of this board is to discuss the condition of the several staff departments of the Army with a view to reduce the cost of maintenance and increase their usefulness. The idea of reducing the cost is inherent, therefore, in the provisions of the section. Beside that we have the precedent of the appropriation bill of 1876, where a similar board was constituted and an appropriation of $1,000 made in actual money, and that was held to be in order and the decision was sustained by the House.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, this provision is similar to a provision adopted in the appropriation bill of the last Congress. It does not change existing law in any respect whatever, but merely provides that three officers who are now in the Army, whose pay goes on and is provided for, shall sit as a board to determine questions referred to them, and to report to Congress. That it is germane to the bill cannot be questioned, because the bill itself appropriates money for the support of the Army, and this section relates to the Army. In addition, it may well be said to be in the direction of reduction of expenditures, because its very object is to discover what reforms, changes, and reductions may be made in these staff corps.

Mr. EDEN. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the latter clause of the section itself, showing that it is a retrenchment of expenditures. It is there provided that, until otherwise authorized by law, no new appointments nor promotions shall be made in any of the said departments of the military service except to fill vacancies occurring in the grades provided for in this act.

Mr. BANNING. I was about to come to that. Promotions are constantly taking place in the Army, increasing the salaries of the officers promoted, and all this is stopped under the operations of this section. In that direction, therefore, it is a reduction of expenditures. The section is drawn especially to accomplish these reforms and reductions; to reduce the present great expenditures in the several staff departments referred to the board. For my part, I cannot see where the point of order will lie against this provision. It is certainly in order under Rule 120.

The CHAIRMAN. Rule 120 provides that no clause or section of an appropriation bill shall be in order unless it is germane to the subject-matter and retrenches expenditures. As a part of the Army appropriation bill this section is germane, but it does not appear upon its face that it retrenches expenditures. It changes existing law by reason of the fact that the President without this would not be required to detail any portion of the Army for any particular duty, but under this section he would be required to detail three officers for a specific duty not now required by law. Hence it changes existing law.

Mr. MAYHAM. Let me make a suggestion to the Chair. It seems to me the last clause of this section which provides against further promotions is clearly in the line of economy. Officers are being promoted as the law now stands, and even if this is new legislation it at least provides for retrenchment by prohibiting further promotions. The prohibition of promotion, as the House will easily understand, implies prohibition of further increase of expenditure in that direction. This section cannot be ruled out, therefore, on the ground that it does not restrict expenditures, for I hold that it does retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot resort to argument or conjecture for the purpose of determining whether this would retrench expenditures or not. But it must appear either on the face of the section compared with existing law, or else the Chair would not be authorized to hold it does retrench. There is nothing in this section which by its own force retrenches expenses.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I move in line 13 to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair sustain the point of order?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. My amendment will provide this board must report a system which will reduce expenditures.

Mr. HALE. In what section?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The section under consideration.

Mr. HALE. That has gone out under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The Chair has made no such ruling as that. I propose to amend the section so as to bring it within the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled this section out of order, but it is competent for the gentleman to move a new section.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is competent for him to do so at the end of the bill. But he cannot now amend a section which has gone out on the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move a new section to take the place of section 12; being the same as section 12 except by substituting the word "and" for the word "or" before the words "reduce the cost," &c.

Mr. HALE. Is it in order to do this except at the end of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The section which the gentleman from New York offers may be offered here because it comes in properly at this part of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the rule to be that a new section cannot be offered until we reach the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A section having been stricken out by the committee or by a decision of the Chair it is in order to move to supply its place by a new section.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I offer as a new section what I have just indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the section offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the President is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of July next, to constitute a board to consist of the three major-generals of the Army, whose duty it shall be to examine into and report to the President, on or before the 1st day of December next, upon the organization, practical working, and efficiency of the Corps of Engineers, the Ordnance department, the Medical department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence department, the Pay department, the Signal Service, the artillery service, the Bureau of Military Justice, the Adjutant-General's department, and the Inspector-General's department, and to make such suggestions as in the judgment of said board will increase the usefulness and reduce the cost of the maintenance of the Army and of the several branches of the service above specified, which report, when so made, shall be submitted to Congress by the President; and, until otherwise authorized by law, no new appointments nor promotions shall be made in any of the said departments of the military service, except to fill vacancies occurring in the grades provided for in this act. In the event of the inability to act or the death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HALE. Does that carry the idea of retrenchment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine make the point of order on the new section offered by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HALE. Certainly I do.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Maine desires to speak upon the point of order the Chair will hear him.

Mr. HALE. As the gentleman from New York has left the section it provides that this new board, which the gentleman recognizes as being a creation of this new law, shall—

Examine into and report to the President on or before the 1st day of December next upon the organization, practical working, and efficiency—and make such suggestions as in the judgment of said board will increase the usefulness and reduce the cost of the maintenance of the Army, &c.

Of these various staff departments—

It does not provide any retrenchment. It is only a matter of suggestion which is dependent upon the future legislation of Congress.

Thus it comes precisely under the ruling of Speaker Kerr on the transfer of the Indian Bureau, that he could not look to what a subsequent Congress might legislate in the view of the framer of the amendment, but that the language of the amendment itself must carry with it retrenchment and reduce expenditures—a suggestion to that effect not being sufficient.

Mr. CHALMERS. I take it every gentleman in this House is in favor of a reduction of the Army, provided it can be done in such a way as not to interfere with the usefulness of that arm of the service. Now, the only reason why a direct reduction has not already been made by this House, as I understand, is that gentlemen do not feel sufficiently advised to enter upon that reduction. This clause, however, is a clause in the interest of economy, because it is a clause which prepares for a reduction of the Army that shall be made in accordance with the best interests of the country. Then, sir, the substitution of the word "and," in the thirteenth line, by the gentleman who has charge of the bill, unquestionably makes this legislation in the interest of economy. But I go further, and I say, as I have asserted already, that the whole object of this section is to inform the Congress upon a matter in regard to which Congress has not sufficient information to act advisedly. Every man on that side and upon this has declared himself in favor of a reduction of the Army, provided it can be done without detriment to the Army. This provision is to give us information that will enable us so to act.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make one further suggestion in connection with the amendment that has been proposed by the gentleman from New York. It occurs to me that the section as now proposed is not subject to the point of order. I very much question if this proposed section changes any existing law at all. It simply asks the President of the United States for information to be given to Congress with a view to having the benefit of that information in future legislation.

We may call upon the President for information. It is now his duty under the Constitution and under the law to give Congress information and we have the right to call upon him for it; and in this proposed section we simply call upon him for information that is to be furnished by a board of Army officers. And when the asking for information is coupled with the clear proposition that expenditures are to be retrenched it does seem to me that it comes within the rule, especially in view of the other fact to which I called the attention of the Chair awhile ago and to which I do not care now to refer.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman who has charge of the bill to the point whether the board established by the twelfth section would not be entitled to claim compensation for the work they do. It might not be out of the way to put in a proviso that they shall not receive compensation for any work they do under this section.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is prohibited by law now.

Mr. WRIGHT. Where is the law?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is a law which prohibits the payment of any extra compensation to Army officers.

Mr. WRIGHT. You impose new duties by this section, and the question as to compensation may arise. Would the gentleman have any objection to this proviso:

Provided, That no compensation shall be allowed to said board for duties imposed by this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Not the slightest. But the question now pending is whether this section is now in order. An amendment to it would not now be in order. I wait the decision of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the Clerk to read a portion of Speaker Kerr's decision on the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Now, the Chair cannot look forward into that legislation and say, upon anything that appears on the face of this section, that such legislation will in all respects coincide with, sustain, or affirm the provisions of this section and carry out the proposed retrenchments indicated in it. In other words, the Chair desires it to be distinctly understood that the point upon which his decision in this case turns is that from the face of the section it does not appear that the provision comes within the requirement of this rule, which is that it shall be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and "shall retrench expenditures." It does not affirmatively appear upon the face of the bill or the laws of the land or the usual and customary mode of proceeding of this body that this section, if enacted in this bill, will retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. For the reason stated by Speaker Kerr the Chair holds that it does not affirmatively appear by this section that it does provide for retrenchment, but the question depends upon some future legislation of which, of course, the Chair cannot take cognizance, and, for the same reason given by Speaker Kerr, the Chair rules the amendment of the gentleman from New York out of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Has the Chair taken into account the provision which prohibits new appointments?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter to be determined in the future.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then in lieu of section 12 I move to insert the following:

That the President is hereby requested, on or before the 1st day of July next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals of the Army, whose duty it shall be to examine into and report to the President, on or before the 1st day of December next, upon the organization, practical working, and efficiency of the Corps of Engineers, the Ordnance department, the Medical department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence department, the Pay department, the Signal Service, the artillery service, the Bureau of Military Justice, the Adjutant-General's department, and the Inspector-General's department, and to make such suggestions as, in the judgment of said board, will increase the usefulness or reduce the cost of the maintenance of the Army and of the several branches of the service above specified, which report, when so made, shall be submitted to Congress by the President; and, until otherwise authorized by law, no new appointments nor promotions shall be made in any of the said departments of the military service, except to fill vacancies occurring in the grades provided for in this act. In the event of the inability to act or the death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman will modify his amendment so as to harmonize it all through I will not make the point of order, although I think the amendment is still subject to it. Let it be harmonized all through.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not see any lack of harmony. We request the President to do a certain thing, and we provide that no new appointments shall be made in the interim. I see no lack of harmony.

Mr. CHALMERS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "consist of," in line 3, the words "the Secretary of War, Adjutant-General, Chief of Engineers, and;" so that it will read:

That the President is hereby requested on or before the 1st day of July next, to constitute a board, to consist of the Secretary of War, Adjutant-General, Chief of Engineers, and the three major-generals of the Army.

Mr. HALE. I think that is an improvement.

Mr. CHALMERS. We ought, in the consideration of this bill, to look at it as practical men who are seeking the best interests of the country. The amendment as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations leaves the board entirely in the hands of the line officers of the Army; and since the commencement of our Government there has been an existing jealousy between the officers of the line and the officers of the staff, a jealousy in the public mind not only against the staff, but against the line officers.

Arguments have been made here in this debate which have been drawn from the prejudices of the people, arguments drawn from the prejudices of sections, because the Army has been used at one time for improper purposes. I hope we shall consider the question without any such prejudices. I hope no man will be led astray by the constant charge that the staff officers of the Government form the butterflies of the service, as gentlemen have said on so many occasions. The staff officers are the peace portion of the Army, and since the beginning of time in our Government the line officers have sought to strike them down and to make them subordinate to their own command. If this board be composed of line officers and they are permitted to reorganize the Army they will do injustice to the staff. They will make such arrangements as would take the staff away from its direct and appropriate duty of reporting to the civil department under the Secretary of War and make them perhaps responsible to the commanding general. This is a great evil which we must guard against. It is an evil not only in our country, but we find the same to exist in England. This same jealousy existed there between the war office and the commanding general. The Duke of Wellington stands on record as being in favor of making the staff officers into a department which shall report directly to the secretary of war and not to the commanding general. Gentlemen have heard here in this debate criticisms made by our Commanding General here in this country against the staff. It arises from that same jealousy, that same desire to make them subordinate to the line. I have here a document entitled The Establishment of the War Department as one of the Several Executive Departments of the United States Government. In it will be found extracts from the report of Hon. John C. Calhoun when he was Secretary of War in 1818, who states the question so much better than I can do it that I ask the Clerk to read from that document the extracts I have marked as my speech upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War (Hon. John C. Calhoun) being called upon by the House of Representatives, in 1818, for a report on the reduction that could be made in the establishment as then organized, made an elaborate report upon the subject, in which he treated of the "staff" as follows:

"The staff, as organized by the act of last session, combines simplicity with efficiency and is considered to be superior to that of the periods [1802 and 1808] to which I have reference. In estimating the expenses of the Army, and particularly that of the staff, the two most expensive branches of it (the Engineer and Ordnance departments) ought not fairly to be included. Their duties are connected with the permanent preparation and defense of the country, and have so little reference to the existing military establishment that if the Army were reduced to a single regiment no reduction could safely be made in either of them. To form a correct estimate of the duties of the other branches of the staff, and consequently the number of officers required, we must take into consideration not only the number of troops, but, what is equally essential, the number of posts and extent of country which they occupy. Were our military establishment reduced one-half it is obvious that if the same posts continued to be occupied which now are, the same numbers of officers in the Quartermaster's, Commissary's, Medical, and Adjutant and Inspector Generals' departments would be required. To compare, then, as is sometimes done, our staff with those of European armies, assembled in large bodies, is manifestly unfair. The act of last session, it is believed, has made all the reduction which ought to be attempted. It has rendered the staff efficient without making it expensive. Such a staff is not only indispensable to the efficiency of the Army, but it is also necessary to a proper economy in its disbursements; and should an attempt be made at retrenchment by reducing the present number, it would, in its consequences, probably prove wasteful and extravagant. In fact, no part of our military organization requires more attention in peace than the general staff. It is in every service invariably the last in attaining perfection; and if neglected in peace, when there is leisure, it will be impossible, in the midst of the hurry and bustle of war, to bring it to perfection. It is in peace that it should receive a perfect organization and that the officers should be trained to method and punctuallity, so that at the commencement of a war, instead of creating anew, nothing more should be necessary than to give to it the necessary enlargement. In this country particularly, the staff cannot be neglected with impunity. Difficult as its operations are in actual service everywhere, it has here to encounter great and peculiar impediments, from the extent of the country, the badness and frequently the want of roads, and the sudden and unexpected calls which are often made on the militia. If it could be shown that the staff in its present extent was not necessary in peace, it would, with the view taken, be unwise to lop off any of its branches which would be necessary in actual service. With a defective staff, we must carry on our military operations under great disadvantages and be exposed, particularly at the commencement of a war, to great losses, embarrassment, and disasters."

The further curtailment of the military establishment being, however, insisted upon by Congress in 1820, the Secretary of War (Hon. John C. Calhoun) in that year made a further report to the House, in which he said:

"The organization of the staff in a peace establishment ought to be such that every branch of it should be completely formed, with such extension as the number of troops and posts occupied may render necessary.

* * * * * *

"It is believed that the true principle of its organization is that every distinct branch of the staff should terminate in a chief, to be stationed, at least in peace, near the seat of Government and to be made responsible for its condition. It is thus that the Government may at all times obtain correct knowledge of the condition of the Army in every particular and be enabled to introduce method, order, and economy in its disbursements. It is at present, with slight exceptions, thus organized, and the beneficial effects of it have already been strikingly exemplified by experience."

During the reading of the extracts the time of Mr. CHALMERS expired.

Mr. CALKINS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS.]

Mr. CHALMERS. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading, as above.

Mr. CHALMERS. Gentlemen notify me that they will accept my amendment provided I will make no further speech. [Laughter.] As I have accomplished my object I will accept the proposition.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not know if the amendment is accepted by the Committee on Appropriations. If it be accepted by them, I desire to move to amend it so as to strike out the words "Adjutant-General." My reason for this amendment is that the office of Adjutant-General of the Army is where all the trouble in the staff of the Army has been bred.

The staff to which Mr. Calhoun alluded did not have a brigadier-general at the head of the Adjutant-General's department. The present Adjutant-General has been so long in his place, and has so long led the Army, as it were, that he sets at defiance the laws of Congress. You may pass a law providing how promotions shall be regulated; he will set that law at defiance. You may pass a law providing that there shall be counted in the time of service of an officer in regulating his grade and rank the time which he served in the volunteer service. The Adjutant-General sets that at defiance and provides that the whole class of graduates of West Point in last July shall outrank that volunteer officer.

Without one single dissenting voice in the Army, from lieutenant up to General, that officer is the one complained of as the source of all the evils in the Army. Now, does this committee desire that he shall be put on a board, when the very object of that board is to reform the evils of which he is the author? Is it the desire of this committee that he, with the Secretary of War and an officer of engineers, shall be able to neutralize the fighting part of the Army, and allow the staff to be put in such a position that they can make no recommendation which will be of service to the country? I trust not.

Mr. DUNNELL. I am exceedingly surprised to hear the language of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.] I had supposed that the Adjutant-General of the Army was an exceedingly good officer. I have never before heard that he set at defiance any law of Congress. The gentleman makes a pretty broad statement when he says that the Adjutant-General sets at defiance the laws of Congress.

Mr. BRAGG. Permit me. If you will turn to the Army Register you will find men graded as captains, and you will find a decision of the Adjutant-General that when one of those captains meets with his brother officer who is a captain of much later appointment and an officer of lower rank, then that later officer shall outrank him because he belongs properly to the corps, while the other officer has obtained his rank under an act of Congress which the Adjutant-General will not respect.

Mr. DUNNELL. I repeat what I have already said in regard to the Adjutant-General of the Army. I think members of Congress who have had to do with that officer have not only found him courteous, but they have found him a very strict observer of the law. Who has ever asked him to correct an Army record and has not found him exceedingly careful even in the exercise of that discretion which the law gives him? I have never heard of an officer of this Government more constant in his deference to congressional action than the Adjutant-General of the Army. I do not like that kind of general statement which the gentleman indulges in when he says that the Adjutant-General of the Army sets at defiance the laws of Congress; that is a little too much for the gentleman to say.

Mr. BRAGG. The reason I say so is because several cases, where the law was set at defiance by him, have been submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs for them to pass upon.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to make but one remark. By the gentleman's own statement it is plain——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BRAGG. I will withdraw my amendment if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. CALKINS. I will renew it for the purpose of saying that by the gentleman's own statement it is plain that the Adjutant-General has not set at defiance any law of Congress. In regard to certain acts of Congress, where a construction of those acts was necessary, the Adjutant-General has construed the law in a way that the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] had he been the Adjutant-General, would have construed differently; that is all there is about it.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. CALKINS. It is a mere difference of construction. Our law-books are full of decisions by the courts, where one court upon a given point has decided one way and another court upon the very same point has decided directly the opposite. The books are full of such decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG,] which has been renewed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS,] is not in order, it being an amendment in the third degree. The first amendment is the one moved by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] has moved an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. CHALMERS. I will modify my amendment by leaving out the words "Adjutant-General," if I have the right to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to modify his amendment.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. CHALMERS as modified, to insert the words "the Secretary of War, Chief of Engineers, and;" so that it will read:

A board to consist of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, and the three major-generals of the Army, &c.

Mr. BANNING. I desire to say a word. It appears to me that the true inwardness of all the objections to Congress making a reform in the Army, and leaving it to Army officers alone, has developed itself to-day. That true inwardness is that gentlemen do not want any reform.

The bill here presented provides that General Hancock, General Schofield, and General McDowell, three major-generals, not one of whom can expect any more promotion, every one of whom is an educated soldier, all of whom have been distinguished in the service and are capable and qualified, shall constitute a board to consider the reorganization of the staff. Gentlemen propose to strike out this provision although they have been saying they wanted the Army reorganized by a board of Army officers. They are willing to accept an amendment which will provide for putting in as members of this board officers of the staff and the Secretary of War.

This does not leave the board composed exclusively of Army officers, but puts into it a civilian as well as an officer of the staff. Concerning this staff a distinguished staff officer, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly for March last, says:

The defects are due more to its management than to any other cause; and it is in curing these defects that every citizen of the country should interest himself. They are principally the occasion of the enormous and largely unnecessary appropriations for the support of the Army, of the heavy taxation necessary to meet such appropriations, and of the wasteful but unintentional extravagance with which our Army is conducted.

Speaking of the ability of the staff, an officer of which gentlemen insist on placing upon this board, this writer says:

It is believed there are to-day officers in the staff department, and perhaps even in the general staff, who are so ignorant of our own country and of military service on the frontier, who know so little of Indians and of their mode of warfare, that if ordered to proceed from one frontier post to another through a hostile Indian country they would be unable to conduct their marches or manage their escorts so as to insure their own safety.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. From what does the gentleman read?

Mr. BANNING. From the Atlantic Monthly; an article by General Robert Williams, one of the best officers of the Adjutant-General's department.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The Adjutant-General is not in now.

Mr. BANNING. I am aware of that. The bill presented by the committee proposes that three major-generals, Generals Hancock, McDowell, and Schofield, all able and distinguished officers, shall constitute a board for the reorganization of the staff, but the gentleman opposed that.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want to dispose of this matter as a business proposition or does he wish to treat it as a mere politician?

Mr. BANNING. I merely want to show what the bill was as it was brought here.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The speech of the gentleman shows that he has some spite against the Army.

Mr. BANNING. Let the gentleman take his seat and not interrupt me further. I merely want to show that the committee were willing to do this, but gentlemen were not willing to help us.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. Does the gentleman apply what he has read from the Atlantic Monthly to General Humphreys, the Chief of Engineers, who is in my opinion one of our best officers?

Mr. BANNING. I believe that the Chief of Engineers is an able and accomplished officer. The trouble with the chiefs of the staff departments is that they do not seem to think there is anything in their departments to be reformed. Now, sir, as General Williams says, there are great defects in the administration of all of them. Of course no reform is to be expected from men who do not think thus, but believe the present organization and administration of the staff to be perfect. Therefore I am for a board of impartial officers.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CHALMERS, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, honorably to discharge from the service of the United States officers of the Army who may apply therefor on or before the 1st day of January next; and every such officer who shall have been in the service for two years or more, so discharged under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to the pay and allowances due him at the date of his discharge, one year's pay and allowances at the rates herein provided: Provided, That in addition to what may be due him at the date of his discharge, any such officer so discharged who shall have served fifteen years in the Army shall receive two years' pay and allowances; if he shall have served twenty years, he shall receive three years' extra pay and allowances; if he shall have served twenty-five years, he shall receive four years' extra pay and allowances; if he shall have served thirty years, he shall receive five years' extra pay and allowances: Provided, That in the case of any officer disabled in the line of his duty, the President may, in his discretion, in lieu of the discharge with pay and allowances, as prescribed in this section, place such officer upon the retired list in the grade held by him at the date of such transfer.

Mr. HALE. I rise to make a point of order on this section.

Mr. BANNING. I was going to make a point of order, no doubt the same that the gentleman from Maine proposes to make.

Mr. HALE. I make the same point of order that I made last night in anticipation of this section and which the Chair then decided did not apply to the section then under consideration. I make the point that this section not only makes no provision retrenching expenditures, but in fact contains provisions which will increase the expenditures of the year for which we are now appropriating. The first provision of the section is that the President may discharge certain Army officers. Undoubtedly by reason of that discharge, if there were no accompanying provisions, the pay of officers would cease and there would thus be retrenchment. But the gentleman from New York does not propose to resort to so harsh a step as that. The bill goes on to provide the pay which these officers shall receive after going out; that one class shall receive one year's pay, another class two years' pay, another three years' pay, another four year's pay, and still another five years' pay. Thus by this section the expenditures of the Government are increased to the extent of the allowances for these additional years. If these officers are to go out I do not complain that the allowances are too large; but I do not want them to go out at all.

I suppose that the point I make is very clearly covered not only by the rulings of the Chair to-day but by former rulings, including the ruling of the late Speaker Kerr. The construction of the rule under which this point is made is that the retrenchment must appear as a part of the pending proposition. For instance, suppose I should offer an amendment providing that the Army be increased to the extent of ten regiments for the purpose of finishing the Indian war and should provide that at the end of two years the Army should be cut down to thirty regiments; in three years to twenty-five regiments; in four years to twenty regiments. While I might have an economic idea in my brain and might be honestly seeking to work it out the Chair would undoubtedly rule that I would have no right to change existing law by increasing the regiments of the Army, although I might intend in the future to make a counterbalancing reduction. So far as this section provides additional pay and allowances to officers mustered out according to the time that they have served, the whole effect of the provision is an increase of expenditures. The language of the rule is:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law—

Of course this section does that; for the President has now no right to retire these officers—

be in order except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

If this provision should now be held by the Chair to be in order, next year a proposition may be presented to put all these officers back, in which case these additional allowances would of course be so much extra expenditure on the part of the Government. The only safe rule—and I am glad to see that the Chair is running in that direction—is to take the bill as we find it, and decide upon the face of its provisions whether it does retrench expenditures. If the bill or section increases expenditures it is the infirmity of the attempt the gentleman is making, and it must go out under the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have no disposition to test the point of order with the gentleman from Maine. If he is satisfied to make it I am quite willing to accept it and let the section go out.

Mr. HALE. Certainly, I do not wish this class to be retired.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Let it be understood it went out under the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The cruelest thing I know about this bill is throwing these men out into the wide world unprovided for.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Let them judge of this.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not profess to be au fait on the subject of points of order, but I make this point in objection to the gentleman from Maine. The very same reasoning he used to induce the Chair to decide that the former section was subject to the point of order if applied to this shows that this section is not subject to the point of order. The reason is this: the President does not necessarily send these men out; they are not necessarily obliged to go out, and therefore non constat they ever will go out. The section consequently on its face does not show expenditures will be increased because it does not compel them to go out, but allows the President to retain them if he shall see proper. The point of order that the section on its face increases expenses is not, therefore, well taken, because whether the expenses be increased or not depends on future contingencies, one of which is the action of the officers themselves and the other the action of the President. And although it may by possibility increase expenses it does not per se increase expenses. The provision of the section which authorizes retirement decreases expenses, because if retired they will only draw three-quarters pay and no allowances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the point of order raised by the gentleman. For the reasons stated during the consideration of this bill the Chair is of the opinion this section does not upon its face retrench expenditures, and therefore he decides the point of order to be well taken and the section is ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments and the heads of the various staff departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of July next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit, from any cause whatever, except on account of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of September next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals on the active list, to which board said lists shall be referred for examination; and upon the recommendation of such board the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported, who shall not be reappointed; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer an opportunity to appear before said board and show cause against it: Provided, That every such officer, who shall have served not less than two years, so mustered out pursuant to the provisions of this section, except in cases where his unfitness for service shall have been caused by intemperance or other vicious habits, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to the pay and allowances due him at the date of his muster-out, one year's pay and allowances. In the event of the inability to act or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HALE. I make the same point of order against that section.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the point does not apply to this section. There is no change of existing law here except such as leads to retrenchment of expenditures. This board is authorized to report and the officers who are mustered out will receive a year's pay and allowance. They cease to receive pay and allowances forever afterward. They receive the pay and allowance for the year they would receive it in any event. It is necessarily a reduction of expenses and therefore retrenchment.

Mr. HALE. The officer retired gets, as will be seen in lines 24, 25, and 26, in addition to pay and allowance due him at the date of muster out one year's pay and allowance.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Paid up to the time. Now, certainly he would leave the ensuing year, but on the doctrine of probability applied to the whole number of officers it is obviously a very large retrenchment. In a particular case the man might die before the end of the year, but on any doctrine of probability known to the law or known to mathematics it would not be likely two would die within a year, and as to three it would certainly be a reduction.

Mr. HALE. I will not argue that. I do not think the Chair will go into any computation like that of life-insurance companies. It is clear and plain here that, in addition to the pay due him, it is provided he shall have a year's pay and allowance. I do not care to go into any calculation of chances. This section does not on its face carry retrenchment with it. I ask the Chair to look at lines 24, 25, 26, and 27.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is proposed to muster out absolutely from the service officers of the Army and to discontinue their pay, then the Chair would hold it to be strictly in order. But it does not appear on its face that anybody is mustered out of the service. It seems to be a machinery by which such a thing might occur in the future. But as new legislation, not retrenching expenditures upon its face, the Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the section out.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Of course I have no disposition to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I therefore now propose a new section in the language of section 14 as printed, leaving out the words after the word "provided" in the twentieth and twenty-first lines down to the word "allowances."

The Clerk read the proposed new section, as follows:

SEC. 14. That the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments and the heads of the various staff departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of July next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit, from any cause whatever, except on account of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of September next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals on the active list, to which board said lists shall be referred for examination; and upon the recommendation of such board, the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported, who shall not be reappointed; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer an opportunity to appear before said board and show cause against it. In the event of the inability to act or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HALE. The same point of order that the Chair alluded to in his ruling; that this is a section setting up a machinery which may result in mustering out, but does not necessarily do so; and that there is no retrenchment in it. Therefore it falls short of the line of the rule. It still comes within the ruling of the Chair on the previous section. It changes the law and carries no retrenchment with it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If a single officer should be discharged under the provisions of this section, as a matter of course it would effect retrenchment. The only question is whether it is likely or apparent under the section that anybody will be mustered out of service. If it is, then it is within the line of retrenchment. And that, it seems to me, is to be always kept in mind by the Chair in deciding these matters, whether the proposition is in the direction of retrenchment. If it is not in the opposite direction, and if it is to result in any way in reducing the salaries paid by the Government, it is in the line of retrenchment. Certainly it is not in any other line.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say just a word in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Maine.

This section as now proposed absolutely requires that there shall be constituted a board of major-generals which necessarily involves the expense of mileage of their travel. There is certainly expense incurred in this change of law. And as has been already well stated by the Chair, this does not on its face absolutely reduce one officer. All this machinery may be set up and all this done without one officer being found unfit for his place, in which case there is no reduction. It is wholly a contingent matter and wholly uncertain whether any reduction will result. But some expense will necessarily follow, and the section sets up a machinery which does not necessarily retrench expenditure at all.

Mr. BANNING. Just one word as to mileage. It will be found from the reports here there are quite enough officers at headquarters at Washington to constitute this board without any mileage whatever being incurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires again to call the attention of the committee to Rule 120, which appears to him to be very much misunderstood. The clause to which he desires to call attention is this:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such, as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

It is not enough to say that it is in the line of economy, that it looks in the direction of economy; but it must actually retrench expenditure by the very terms of the bill or amendment itself. That is the rule; and unless it does appear that the section in its very terms does retrench expenditure it is subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I propose in lieu of section 14 a new section leaving out the proviso as in the section I last offered and substituting for the words "authorized and required," in line 12, the word "requested;" so that it will read:

The Secretary of War is hereby requested, on or before the 1st day of September next, &c.

That does not change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman would so frame the section that the President was required to muster out any officers it would be held to be within the rule.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is the effect of the section as now offered. It requests the Secretary of War to constitute a board and if the report be adverse to any one the President is required to muster out. There is no change of existing law, except in the line of retrenchment, since the section requires the President to muster out of the service every officer reported by the board as unfit for duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York did not understand the suggestion of the Chair. It was that the bill should absolutely muster out such as were disabled.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. In lines 16 and 17, it is said:

And upon the recommendation of such board the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported.

Mr. HALE. But we cannot tell if the board will recommend any one to be mustered out.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Very true; but we change no existing law unless somebody is recommended.

Mr. HALE. The section says, as the gentleman now offers it:

The Secretary of War is hereby requested.

That is a change of law because the Secretary of War is not now requested.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It has been held that a request is not a change of law. It was so held with reference to the last section.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to make a single suggestion on this point of order. I hold we have the right in this bill to provide the means by which officers may be mustered out. That is perfectly germane to this bill; and when we make that provision it is just as clearly and emphatically in the line of retrenchment as though we required certain officers to be mustered out. It does not depend on future legislation. The retrenchment depends on the carrying out of this particular paragraph. Whenever a man is mustered out under the operation of this paragraph, that retrenches expenditures to the extent of the reduction in his pay.

It does not come within the decision of Speaker Kerr. Speaker Kerr in the decision he made could not tell from the face of the amendment whether the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department would retrench expenses or not, because there was nothing in the proposed legislation to show what the cost would be when the transfer was made; but in the section under consideration, whenever you muster out a single man you thereby, to that extent, retrench expenses. In that case it depended upon a contingency which the Chair could not determine; in this case it depends upon a contingency that the Chair can determine without looking beyond the section under consideration at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again read the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HALE. The amendment in its present shape is not so near coming within the rule as it was before. The first part of the section, which directs the commanding officers of the departments to report, is left just as it was, and it is a change of law, and the only change which has been made by the gentleman from New York is that the Secretary of War is "requested" instead of "authorized and required" to constitute a board, to consist of three major-generals, &c. Suppose he appoints that board; when the board gets through and recommends the dismissal of any officers he is not obliged to dismiss them from the service. It is not as good a provision in the direction of retrenchment as it was before.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It says positively that the President shall muster out, &c.

Mr. HALE. But you leave it to depend upon the Secretary of War whether he does it or not.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The Secretary of War is requested to call a board.

Mr. HALE. And suppose he does not call a board? Where is your retrenchment? How can you get anybody out of the Army then?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If he does not call a board, it is no change in the law.

Mr. HALE. Precisely; but it is not in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It will be if he calls a board.

Mr. HALE. But there is a change in the law directing the commanders of the departments to report a list of those officers whose services they think can be dispensed with, and if the Secretary of War does not call the board you cannot get anybody out.

The trouble is that it is difficult for the gentleman from New York to frame anything that comes under the square ruling, and I am glad it has been made here for our guidance in the future, that the rule must be observed, that a proposition must carry retrenchment upon its face. We shall know what the rule is hereafter.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to say one word upon the point of order in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.] It is agreed on all hands, I believe, that retrenchment must appear upon the face of the provision, and must not depend upon future legislation.

Now, the only question, it occurs to me, that the Chair has to decide is whether this law when it takes effect is in the line of retrenchment. There is no future legislation required. This law may never take effect; but when it does take effect, if it does, is it not evident upon the face of the record that it must be in the line of retrenchment? If this law is carried out, then certain officers must be mustered out of the service; and if certain officers are mustered out of service, then there must be retrenchment. This law is complete in itself, and the only question for the decison of the Chair is, will the law execute itself, and if it executes itself will it be in the line of retrenchment?

Mr. ATKINS. I believe that the committee is indebted to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] for the suggestion the other day that there was a series of clauses in this appropriation bill, one depending on the other; that they were all akin. Now, sir, this is a system of legislation which the committee has proposed, and, in my judgment, the chairman of this committee, in passing his judgment upon this point of order, must take into consideration the substance of all of these propositions. It is a series of propositions which is intended in this bill to reform the Army and to retrench expenditures. That they will do so there is no sort of question. Now, then, it seems to me that, as a part of that series, this section should be considered with the whole; and, as was well said by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] and by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] it is impossible to tell what the retrenchment will be until the law goes into effect. Now, it is not reasonable to suppose that none of these officers will be mustered out. In all human probability there are many who will be retired, and it is impossible to look at this section and the series of sections, in my judgment, without drawing the conclusion from the whole of them that retrenchment will be effected; that expenditures will be lessened; and, with that view, I submit the case.

Mr. HALE. The trouble with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is that he is arguing from his desire to retrench, and not from the rule as the Chair has construed it. I was willing in the beginning that these several sections should all be taken together, because the result would have been, with the ruling of the Chair, that they would have all gone out together. But the Chair stated (I think wisely, and I submitted to his decision) that he could only rule upon each section as it was reached. I therefore yielded to him, and have made my point of order upon these several sections as they have been read.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to one proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.] That is, the presumption which he makes that if this board shall be convened somebody will be turned out. The gentleman is contravening the rule and practice that all lawyers and the whole world are governed by: the presumption that every man is doing his duty. Now, the presumption is not that this board will turn out any officers, but that all the officers are now doing their duty and therefore nobody will be turned out.

You might as well, when a docket is made up, claim that the presumption is that somebody will be convicted. But the presumption of law is that every one is innocent until he is proven to be guilty.

Now, here in this case the presumption is (and the Chair has recognized it in his decision) that nobody will be turned out, and therefore the retrenchment which must be provided in order to bring the section within the rule is wanting, because there is nothing here in this case that carries the certainty that anybody will be turned out.

The gentleman may say that he thinks somebody will be turned out; that does not make it so. He may think that there will be fewer officers should this bill pass; but the phraseology of the bill does not make it so; the section itself does not so provide. The rule limits us to the section itself, not to what any gentleman may guess may be the effect of it.

Mr. ATKINS. Does not the gentleman himself believe that a great many will go out?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair is not to rule upon our belief, but upon the section itself; he is not to rule upon a presumption.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now rule upon the point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has himself furnished the Chair a sufficient reason for the ruling which he will give upon this point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee has stated that this bill proposes a system of legislation which has to be considered by the Chair. Now that is the very difficulty which we are in.

This is an appropriation bill, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879; and no legislation can be incorporated in this bill, except such as shall be germane to the bill and shall retrench expenditures. Therefore, the Chair must look to the text of the proposed section in order to determine whether that section does retrench expenditures.

The Chair held last evening, as he also held in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress in regard to the proposition for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, that in construing Rule 120, in order to determine whether a proposed section was germane or whether it did retrench expenditures, he would not resort to evidence aliunde, or to speculation, or to arguments; but would limit his inquiries to the face of the bill, to the specific terms of the section in question, the law of the land, and the parliamentary rules and practices of this House.

Now it may be argued that under the terms of this section, if it shall become law, some persons will hereafter be mustered out of the service. But it may be that there will be no such muster-out of officers under this bill. The section itself must muster them out, must stop their pay, in order to show, upon the face of it, that retrenchment will result from its enactment. For that reason the Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move in lieu of section 14 of the printed bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments and the heads of the various staff departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of July next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit, from any cause whatever, except on account of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness, and the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported, and such officer shall not be reappointed; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer an opportunity to appear and show cause against it. In the event of the inability to act, or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. GARFIELD. The very same point of order lies against this amendment.

Mr. HALE. It is just the same as the one just ruled out; it leaves it contingent, first upon the commanders of divisions and departments reporting anybody, which they may not do; and after that it leaves it contingent upon the action of the board, for it says that the officer shall be allowed to appear before the board and be heard.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no board left.

Mr. HALE. No matter whether there is a board left or not. The proposed amendment leaves it so that the officer shall be heard; it musters nobody out. The Chair has used phraseology which is much more felicitous than any that I can use. The Chair states that this bill sets going machinery that may or may not muster somebody out. That is the trouble about it, and the gentleman cannot get around the difficulty.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is a way of getting around the difficulty which the gentleman undoubtedly will force me into and which may not be agreeable to some gentlemen outside of this House. I now move that the committee rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 84, noes 99.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MARSH, and Mr. HEWITT of New York, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 92.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 312) for the relief of Robert Coles.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1951) for the relief of John F. Sutherlin & Brother, of Parke County, Indiana.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CUTLER, indefinitely;

To Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, for one week;

To Mr. BEBEE, for ten days from next Monday; and

To Mr. ROSS, for two days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. McKENZIE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of Ben. Alsop, no adverse report having been made.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of Emanuel Klauser, no adverse report having been made.

RINGGOLD BARRACKS, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation for the purchase of the site of Ringgold Barracks, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, that the House adjourn, there were—ayes 153, noes 13.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: Papers relating to the claim of Sarah E. Herrel—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARK, of Iowa: A communication from John H. Gear, governor, and David Secor, register of the State land office of Ohio, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4284—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. COLLINS: The petition of citizens of Danville, Pennsylvania, for aid to the Texas and Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina: The petition of 120 citizens of North Carolina, that the proceeds of the sales of public lands be applied to purposes of popular education—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. ELLIS: Papers relating to the claim of R. C. Oglesby—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. EWING: The petition of citizens of Shawnee, Ohio, against any reduction of the tariff—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the publisher of the Hubbard (Ohio) Signal, for the abolition of the duty on type—to the same committee.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of citizens of Kelly's Island, Ohio, against the passage of the bill providing for the establishment of a board of fish commissioners to regulate and protect fisheries—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FRANKLIN: Papers relating to the claim of Dr. Edward Dunscomb—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. GIDDINGS: Six petitions from citizens of Texas, for the division of that State into two judicial districts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: Papers relating to the claim of F. M. Faircloth—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JONES, of Alabama: The petition of citizens of Washington County, Alabama, for the refunding of the cotton tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORGAN: Papers relating to the claim of Alexander C. Cloud—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SPRINGER: The petition of J. T. and W. T. Alexander and other producers and shippers of live stock, residing in Morgan and Sangamon Counties, Illinois, against the passage of the bill relative to the transportation of animals—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WATSON: Two petitions of citizens of Chicago, Illinois, and East Liberty, Pennsylvania, of similar import—to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 25, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. HAMLIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3079) to provide means for giving official notice of the acts of the Government, and to provide for the advertisements required by the several Departments of the Government, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (H. R. No. 4105) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," approved June 18, 1874, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of J. Ormond Wilson, superintendent of the public schools of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for a donation of certain lots of ground in that city to the District government as a site for a public-school building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the memorial of the Saint Paul Type Foundery, of Saint Paul, Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of the bill providing for refunding to Miller & Richards a fine imposed upon them for undervaluing a lot of goods passed through the custom-house at San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1627) granting a pension to Jacob M. Groce, late a sergeant of Company D, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3059) granting a pension to Jacob F. Ruth, late a private in Company I, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 734) granting a pension to Syvert A. Anderson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4383) granting a pension to Stephen L. George, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4424) granting an increase of pension to Derrick F. Hamlink, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4361) granting a pension to Elizabeth Winters, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 134) for the relief of Jacob G. Croman, of Dickinson, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3103) for the relief of Oliver Yake, of Sanilac County, Michigan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3440) granting a pension to George Fritz, First Regiment United States Dragoons, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 735) granting a pension to James H. Thew, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4389) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Robinson, late commissary sergeant First Regiment United States Colored Troops, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4362) granting a pension to Cynthia A. Mizelle, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4384) granting a pension to Daniel Donnelly, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. THURMAN. I desire to have that bill placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 793) for the relief of Edwin R. Clark, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

HAYDEN'S GEOGRAPHICAL ATLAS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives to bind copies of the Geological and Geographical Atlas of Colorado and portions of the adjacent territory, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be bound 500 copies of the Geological and Geographical Atlas of Colorado and portions of the adjacent territory under the Hayden survey; one copy for distribution to each Senator and member of the House of Representatives and Delegate from the Territories; the balance for distribution by the office of the survey; the style of binding to be determined by the joint committee of the two Houses on printing.

PAY OF CERTAIN HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men, and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll, to report it with an amendment; and I was requested to ask the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, if the Senate will allow me.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that ten laborers, known as cloak-room men of the House of Representatives, who clean the Hall of the House daily, are entitled to pay as laborers from the 16th day of December last, and that they be paid as such, and directs that hereafter eight laborers only be employed as session laborers on the roll of the Doorkeeper of the House, to perform such labor, and that they be paid at the same rate as other session laborers.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, to insert after the word "such," in line 6, the words "to the close of the present fiscal year, and the sum of $3,913 is hereby appropriated for that purpose."

Mr. INGALLS. Is this another deficiency bill from the House?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; but the House omitted to put in the amount which was necessary to pay the men. I have a letter from the Clerk of the House stating the exact amount. These men are required to sweep the Hall of the House. This is the exact amount to be inserted to supply the omission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read the third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. OGLESBY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1318) granting a pension to Mary E. Lowe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 extra copies of the message of the President transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberations of the fishery commission, with accompanying documents, and that 500 copies of the same shall be for the use of the State Department.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is instructed to inquire into the expediency of limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in any practicable direction so as to diminish the pressure of business thereon.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SARGENT. The Committee on Foreign Relations, two weeks ago, reported back a substitute for the resolution which I submitted on the subject of Chinese immigration. With this substitute I am content in that it calls the attention of the Executive to the subject and invites action on his part to arrest a great, growing, and dangerous evil. I shall ask for direct and effective legislation on the subject, and hope to obtain it before this Congress closes. Meanwhile I desire the Executive to co-operate with Congress, and the substitute secures that. It will take but a few minutes' time of the Senate to consider it now, as the matter has been heretofore so fully explained, and I request present action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the provisions of the existing treaty between the Empire of China and the United States, allowing the unrestricted immigration to this country from China, might wisely be modified so as to subserve the best interests of both governments; and the attention of the Executive is respectfully invited to the subject.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. CONOVER and Mr. WITHERS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS OF CONSULS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to allow me to take up Senate bill No. 1272. I think it will not consume five minutes of the time of the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1272) to amend section 4127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the judicial powers and functions of consuls. It amends section 4127 so as to read:

SEC. 4127. The provisions of this title, so far as the same are in conformity with the stipulations in the existing treaties between the United States and Tripoli, Tunis, Morocco, Muscat, and the Samoan or Navigator Islands, respectively, shall extend to those countries, and shall be executed in conformity with the provisions of the treaties and of the provisions of this title by the consuls appointed by the United States to reside therein, who are hereby ex officio invested with the powers herein delegated to the ministers and consuls of the United States appointed to reside in the countries named in section 4083, so far as the same can be exercised under the provisions of treaties between the United States and the several countries mentioned in this section, and in accordance with the usages of the countries in their intercourse with the Franks or other foreign Christian nations.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, to add at the end of the section of the Revised Statutes as proposed to be amended:

And whenever the United States shall negotiate a treaty with any foreign government, in which the American consul-general or consul shall be clothed with judicial authority, and securing the right of trial to American citizens residing therein before such consul-general or consul, and containing provisions similar to or like those contained in the treaties with the governments named in this act, then this act, so far as the same may be applicable, shall have full force in reference to said treaty, and shall extend to the country of the government negotiating the same.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will state in a word to the Senate what the bill is. When the Revised Statutes passed we had existing treaties with several foreign governments by which we secured rights of a judicial character to American consuls, to wit, to determine suits between American citizens residing in those countries. Since then we have adopted similar treaties with other governments; and the purpose of the bill is to throw over our laws to those governments where we have secured those rights. The amendment proposes to extend the law to any subsequent treaty that shall be made, so as to save the necessity of extending the law as similar treaties are made. That is all there is of the bill.

In line 28, in the amendment reported from the committee, I move to strike out the words "this act" and insert "said title," referring to the title instead of to the act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT TOLEDO.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 380) to provide for circuit and district courts of the Unites States at Toledo, Ohio. It will take no time, I am sure. It is simply a bill to provide for holding the terms of the circuit court of the United States at Toledo, Ohio, and fixing the time for holding the district courts there. The district courts are held there already, and the bill only provides for holding the circuit court as well. It creates no new office and involves no additional expense.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That a term of the circuit court and district court for the northern district of Ohio shall be held at Toledo, in said State, on the first Tuesday of the months of June and December in each year; and one grand jury and one petit jury only shall be summoned, and serve in both of said courts at each term thereof. And the existing provisions of law fixing the times of holding the district court at Toledo are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Said northern district shall be, and hereby is, divided into two divisions, to be known as the eastern and the western division of the northern district of Ohio. The western division shall consist of twenty-four counties, to wit: Williams, Defiance, Paulding, Van Wert, Mercer, Anglaize, Allen, Putnam, Henry, Fulton, Lucas, Wood, Hancock, Hardin, Logan, Union, Delaware, Marion, Wyandot, Seneca, Sandusky, Ottawa, Erie, and Huron; and the eastern division shall consist of the remaining counties in said district. But no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in said district.

SEC. 3. All suits not of a local nature in the circuit and district courts, against a single defendant, inhabitant of such State, must be brought in the division of the district where he resides; but if there are two or more defendants, residing in different divisions of the district, such suits may be brought in either division. All issues of fact in such suits shall be tried at a term of the court held in the division where the suit is so brought.

SEC. 4. All offenses committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division.

SEC. 5. Actions or proceedings now pending at Cleveland, in said district, which would under this act be brought in the western division of said district, may be transferred, by consent of all the parties, to said western division; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the deputy clerk's office at Toledo; and the same shall be proceeded with in all respects as though it originally commenced in the western division.

SEC. 6. All grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 7. This act shall be in force from and after the —— day of September, A. D. 1878. And all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. THURMAN. The blank in the seventh section ought to be filled by inserting the word "first," so as to read—

This act shall be in force from and after the first day of September, A. D. 1878.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That word will be inserted if there be no objection. The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 986.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1178) to provide a fire-proof building for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mechanical branches of the Treasury and other Departments, which was partially considered a morning or two ago. I hope the Senator from Delaware will allow me to have this bill, which was up a few mornings ago, finished this morning.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not object to the bill, but I suppose it will be debated more than the one the consideration of which I ask.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish my friend from Vermont would not ask to take his bill up when the Senate is so thin. There is some opposition to that bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think there will be. It was up on a former occasion. I do not intend to debate it; I merely ask a vote upon it. It is important that it should be acted upon.

Mr. THURMAN. I am so unfortunate that I do propose to debate it, and I should like to have something more of a full Senate here before the bill is taken up.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Ohio will consent to have the bill considered now. We have over half an hour remaining of the morning hour.

Mr. BAYARD. If there is to be debate upon the bill, I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me that I may secure the passage of the bill which I move, and which I do not think will be debated when the report is read.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know of any Senator but the Senator from Ohio who proposes to debate the bill which I have named.

Mr. THURMAN. I think it will be discussed perhaps by more than the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 986.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the Senator from Ohio object to the consideration of the other bill this morning?

Mr. THURMAN. I only say that I do not think the bill ought to be acted upon when there is barely a quorum of the Senate present. It is a very large subject, in my judgment. It is not simply the building of a house here, but it is the question whether or not the whole of this work shall be done in the Treasury Department. I do not think the whole of it ought to be done there, and I wish to express the views I have upon the subject; and I hear other Senators say that they will do likewise.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no doubt it can be far more economically done in the Treasury Department; and whenever the question comes up, if it is contested, I will show that whatever has been done inside has been done at immense profit and that a great saving has been made. Of the appropriation made for this year of $800,000, not $200,000 has been expended.

WILLIAM S. MORRIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 986.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 986) for the relief of William S. Morris, William S. Mann, Charles A. Oakman, George W. Hillman, the Union Transfer Company, all of Philadelphia, the Union Transfer Company of Baltimore, Maryland, and John R. Graham, late of Philadelphia, now of Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state to the Senate that there have been three favorable reports upon this measure, one in December, 1876, by a House committee, one March 16, 1878, by a House committee, and one in August, 1876, by a Senate committee. This last report was made by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH,] and that being a Senate report I will send it to the desk in order to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH August 2, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of William S. Morris and others, respectfully report:

The parties named in the bill were all engaged in the business of carrying passengers and baggage in the city of Philadelphia.

The collector of internal revenue for the district in which these parties did business assessed and collected from them taxes aggregating the amounts respectively named in the bill, under the alleged authority of section 104, act of June 30, 1864, which provides as follows:

"That any person, firm, company, or corporation carrying on or doing an express business, shall be subject to and pay a duty of 3 per cent. on the gross amount of all the receipts of such express business."

It appears that in a large number of cities the officers of the revenue did not construe this law as applicable to persons engaged in business similar to that of the parties named in this bill; that the carrying of passengers and baggage on no continuous or fixed route was not "an express business within the intent of the statute;" but that in some cities now, notably New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, taxes for such business were assessed and collected.

It appears that, in consequence of this want of uniformity, on April 16, 1870, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue instructed S. B. Dutcher, supervisor, New York, that "it is only those who do their business on regular routes that should be regarded as engaged in an express business and liable under section 104. * * * If taxes under section 104 have been assessed contrary to the above rule * * * you will see that collection is suspended and claims for abatement prepared."

Subsequently, as a consequence of this ruling of the Revenue department, various parties who had paid such taxes made claims to have them refunded. Among these Dodd's Express Company, of New York, filed claims July 14, 1870; Parmlee's Local Express Company, of Chicago, August 28, 1871; Wescott's Express Company, of New York, September 22, 1871, and the parties named in the bill under consideration, at various times during the years 1871 and 1873. All of these claims were rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and as a consequence, Parmlee's and Dodd's Express Companies brought suit in the United States courts, and, obtaining judgments in their favor, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue re-opened all their claims that he had previously rejected, and refunded the taxes they had paid.

It appears from the evidence on file that the parties named in this bill did not bring suit to recover the taxes paid by them, for the reason that they were given to understand, by the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau, that the Department would govern itself by such decision as might be given by the courts in the "Dodd case," and after that decision, if in claimant's favor, would re-open their cases and decide them in accordance therewith.

On application, however, to Hon. D. D. Pratt, who succeeded to the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that these cases be reopened and reconsidered in view of the decision of the courts and the fact that other similar claimants had been refunded the taxes paid by them, he declined to reopen them on the ground that "these claims were all rejected by my predecessors in office, and under the rules governing this office I have no authority to reopen them." It appears, however, that after refusing to reopen the cases of these parties, he did reopen the case of Westcott's Express Company of New York, whose claim was originally filed at about the same time as that of these claimants, and refunded to them $21,539.37. In a letter to your committee, April 5, 1876, he states, "I understand that the claims are of the same nature as the claim of the Westcott Express Company;" though he adds, as a reason for his difference of action in the cases, that "the only difference in their status at the time of my entrance upon the duties of this office being that the former stood rejected while the latter was a pending claim."

It appears, therefore, to the committee that claims filed at the same time as those of the parties named in this bill, and of precisely the same nature, have been paid; and that the only obstacle to the claimants in this case having their cases reconsidered under the same rulings that have been applied to all other similar cases, is a purely technical one, caused by a change in the incumbency of the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And it further appears that the claimants have no other method of relief except by an act of Congress that will authorize the Commissioner to review the cases, as their long pendency in the Revenue department, through no fault of the claimants, has caused the time to elapse within which they could bring their cases before the courts.

The committee, therefore, are of the opinion that the bill should pass. In this opinion we are sustained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who states "that as the bill does not direct the refunding of the amount claimed, but simply directs the Commissioner to reopen and reconsider the claims, I can see no objection to its becoming a law." He further says: "I would suggest an amendment at line 5 in the bill, so that it may read 'taxes alleged to have been improperly and illegally assessed and collected.'"

The committee recommend that line 5 of the bill be amended so as to read "of taxes alleged to have been improperly and illegally assessed and collected," and report that the bill thus amended ought to pass.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire to move an amendment to the bill. I move to insert in line 20, on the second page of the bill, after the words "Treasury Department," the following:

And also consider and examine the claims of Matthew Smith, late of the city of New York, for $1,600, for the repayment of taxes similarly assessed and collected improperly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the claim referred to in this bill which is the subject of legislation here was at one time before the Committee on Claims. That committee took action upon it. I am unable to state now what the report of the committee was. I presume it was the report just read.

Mr. BAYARD. That was the report, made by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] as chairman of that committee.

Mr. McMILLAN. If I am not mistaken, there was a difference of opinion upon the matter in that committee. The report was not unanimous, I am inclined to think, although upon that point I am not positive.

Mr. MORRILL. This only gives them a chance to go before the Commissioner.

Mr. BAYARD. I may state to the honorable Senator that the case in a nutshell is this: it was a question of construction under a statute of 1864 and a prior statute of 1862, whether these parties, doing an express business, were liable to a certain tax of 3 per cent. on their gross receipts or not. The Commissioner ruling that they were, a number of them paid the tax under protest, among whom were the parties mentioned in this bill. Then a test case was instituted in the circuit court of the United States, which was tried on the 30th of January, 1874, in the southern district of New York, Judge Shipman presiding and Mr. George Bliss representing the Government. The result of that decision of the case, which was to be the test case, was that the parties were not liable for the tax; and the jury were directed to return a verdict accordingly. Then, the other parties who depended upon that decision sent forward on the 6th of February, 1874, a copy of the decision; but when the decision reached the Department it was not acted upon.

The party litigant recovered his judgment and got back his money. The others whose cases were to depend upon that test case presented their claims, but owing to some misunderstanding by the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Douglass, a decision was still made against them. When the case was brought before Mr. Pratt, of Indiana, he said that under the rule of the Department he could not open a case which had been decided by his predecessor, without the warrant of Congress. In consequence of that, this bill was brought in. Three reports have been made, two in the House of Representatives, and one, which has been read, in the Senate, by a committee of the Senate. The bill has also been subjected to the criticism of another committee, the Committee on Finance, and by that committee I was instructed to report the bill favorably. I did not think it worth while to make another report because that already framed by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire and printed covered the facts of the case and satisfied us that where parties had paid taxes under a construction of the statute which was erroneous and decided to be erroneous by the courts, it was right and just and proper that they should have a hearing before the Commissioner for the purpose of showing that they had paid taxes not justly due under the construction of the court duly obtained in a test case.

This bill, the honorable Senator from Minnesota will observe, does not pay money. It simply gives these parties the right to have the case opened before the Commissioner in order to make an examination of the records of his office and their receipts, and decide according to the construction of the circuit court for the southern district of New York whether these taxes were properly or improperly imposed. That is all. Two committees of this body have considered the bill. I do not know whether the committee of which the honorable Senator from Minnesota is now chairman were unanimous or not, but they made a report as of the committee, which has been read. The Committee on Finance I may say did not dissent; they were unanimous in believing that it was a proper bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator will not understand me as saying positively that there was a dissent in the Committee on Claims. My attention was attracted to this bill from the fact that here is a claim against the Government of the United States which had been at one time referred to the Committee on Claims, and at this session it was not referred to that committee, but to the Committee on Finance of the Senate. I was not aware why such a change should be made.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will pardon me. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] and was I believe originally referred to the Committee on Claims, who reported favorably, and that was the report of the Senator from New Hampshire. When the Senator from Pennsylvania reintroduced the bill, the Congress having passed without action, he sent it to the Committee on Finance, and we adopted the report of the Committee on Claims in substance.

Mr. McMILLAN. My attention was attracted to the matter, as I have already stated, from the fact that this claim had been before the Committee on Claims at one time, at a former session, and was now referred to the Committee on Finance. I was not aware of the reason for the change and wanted to have the matter fully explained to my own satisfaction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question. I see the bill goes upon the theory that there have been taxes illegally assessed against certain persons named here.

Mr. BAYARD. And collected.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Assessed and collected. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to re-examine that question, and if he finds that the assessment and collection has been illegal he is authorized to correct it and to deduct any legal unpaid taxes that may be due from these persons under a certain section of a certain act. Is that the same section under which the illegal assessment and collection has been made?

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir. There were two laws, one of 1862 and one of 1864. The act of 1864 was amendatory of the act of 1862, and the act of 1864 had the effect, as the circuit court of the United States held, of exempting these parties from the tax laid in 1862. It was under the law of 1864 that the taxes which they paid on the gross receipts of express companies were assessed and paid by them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The theory, then, is that under the original act there were no legal taxes at all.

Mr. BAYARD. That was the effect upon them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Because if there are legal taxes under that act, they ought to be deducted also.

Mr. BAYARD. They should pay all taxes due, but they should have an opportunity of showing that they paid taxes which were not due and were wrongfully collected under the construction of the courts.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill proposes, and the effect of it is directly to remove the bar of limitation provided for in the internal-revenue law. Now, the question is will the Senate remove that bar? When parties have had ample opportunity of presenting their claims and they have permitted the time allowed by law to elapse, will the Senate then remove that bar? If it does it in one case, it ought to do it in all.

Mr. BAYARD. I will say to the honorable Senator that I have here letters from the attorneys representing the United States and from officers also, which show that these suits were not brought because it was understood that the decision to be reached in the suit then pending should control that class of cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. In New York to-day there are millions of dollars pending for rebatement on affidavits of attorneys that they made the claim within the time prescribed by law; and if you take the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate you will find that there has been more fraud and corruption and perjury in this identical class of claims than in all others combined, and in the city of New York this is perfectly appalling.

What is this question? Under section 3226 of the Revised Statutes, which was in force at this time, this provision was allowed these parties; I will read the section:

SEC. 3226. No suit shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any internal tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or of any penalty claimed to have been collected without authority, or of any sum alleged to have been excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected, until appeal shall have been duly made to the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue, according to the provisions of law in that regard, and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury established in pursuance thereof, and a decision of the Commissioner has been had therein: Provided, That if such decision is delayed more than six months from the date of such appeal, then the said suit may be brought, without first having a decision of the Commissioner, at any time within the period limited in the next section.

SEC. 3227. No suit or proceeding for the recovery of any internal tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or of any penalty alleged to have been collected without authority, or of any sum alleged to have been excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected, shall be maintained in any court, unless the same is brought within two years next after the cause of action accrued: Provided, That actions for such claims which accrued prior to June 6, 1872, may be brought within one year from said date; and that where any such claim was pending before the Commissioner, as provided in the preceding section, an action thereon may be brought within one year after such decision and not after. But no right of action which was already barred by any statute on the said date shall be revived by this section.

Under these sections of the law these parties had full and ample means of remedy. There was nothing to prevent them. They took none of the necessary steps. Now, what is the excuse for not complying with the law and bringing them within its requirements? A large number of parties were affected by this assessment and collection. Some of the parties brought suit in the United States courts. They were all rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Parmlee's and Dodd's express companies brought suit in the United States court and obtained judgments in their favor:

It appears from the evidence on file that the parties named in this bill did not bring suit to recover the taxes paid by them, for the reason that they were given to understand, by the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau, that the Department would govern itself by such decision as might be given by the courts in the "Dodd case," and after that decision, if in claimant's favor, would reopen their cases and decide them in accordance therewith.

Mr. Pratt refused to do it. There is nothing in this report, there is nothing in any of the reports to show that the head of the Internal Revenue Bureau was the party who had consented to this, and it will not do to hold that an inferior, subordinate officer of this Government, an assistant collector of revenue, some man who has no authority to bind the Government at all, can make a contract with parties which can afterward be pleaded. The head of the Department was the only party with whom any contract could be made. After one party has used the diligence that the law requires and has succeeded, it is simply then an effort on the part of other parties who have not used that due diligence to come in and reap the benefits of the action of another.

This matter was before the Committee on Claims, and I would simply like to know how it is that when a committee of the Senate at one session gets a certain case and acts upon it, at the next session of the Senate it goes to an entirely different committee, and we have the Finance Committee acting on this case under one rule and the Committee on Claims under another.

Mr. BAYARD. They both unite in the same report.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is true that the report of the Committee on Claims, made in 1876 by the Senator from New Hampshire, was favorable to the bill; but at this very session of Congress that same committee have had under consideration a large number of claims of the same character. All these claims ought to go to one committee. I think this bill is an exceedingly dangerous precedent. I have no doubt but what these parties paid this tax and that it was illegal, so far as that was concerned; and I have no doubt that there have been $50,000,000 of illegal taxes paid to this Government in all since the foundation of the Government in the collection of revenue. There have been double payments, and in some cases treble payments.

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator admits that the tax was collected unlawfully. Will he say to the Senate that that money ought not to be refunded, although some other man may have practiced a fraud on the Government?

Mr. COCKRELL. The precise position I take is this: in the collection of the revenues of this Government, when ample remedies have been given to every party for every injury done to him, if a man willfully fails to avail himself of those remedies there is safety alone in refusing to refund these amounts. They have a remedy, the law has provided them ample means, and they refused to accept them, and where will be the end of it? Is Congress to take up and consider an illegal tax that was paid in 1818, paid in 1847, or paid in 1857?

Mr. MERRIMON. If the Senator addresses his query to me, I say that I do not care when the Government received money unlawfully or inadvertently from anybody, it ought to pay it back. The Government cannot afford to keep by slip or crook or inadvertence money that honestly belongs to a citizen. The Government ought not to avail itself of the statute of limitations where it is clear that it owes the money.

Mr. COCKRELL. Congress then decide that a certain payment of revenue under a certain law was illegal and they refund it, and they pass a law for the collection of revenue. Millions of dollars are collected under that, and the next Congress decide that this law is wrong, and they refund the money collected under that, and where will be the end? You would never have any revenue, and I think it is an exceedingly dangerous precedent to set in this case.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, I do not agree with the doctrine which my friend the Senator from Missouri so pointedly contends for, nor do I admit in this case the position which my friend the Senator from North Carolina takes. I do not believe that it would be good policy or that Congress could sanction such a policy, to go back and refund taxes which had been paid illegally. This case does not rest upon that ground at all. These parties sought their legal remedy for the illegal taxation which they had paid, in an application to the Internal-Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department.

There were quite a number of cases all resting upon precisely the same ground. A hearing was had in them and a decision rendered that the tax was legal. From that decision an appeal was taken by one of the parties and the suit carried into the courts for the purpose of having the question decided. It was not for the advantage of this Government that all those suits should be carried into the courts, and thus increase the expenses to which the Government was subjected. Under these circumstances there was an understanding, proved as clear as light, between the officers of this Government who had to do with that matter and these parties that one case alone should be carried up; that a decision should be obtained in that case, and then when that decision was obtained that a decision conforming to it should be made in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The decision of the court was rendered that the tax was illegal. When application was made for a rehearing in form it came before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Pratt, once a Senator from Indiana, who decided that under the rules of the Department he could not reverse a decision rendered by his predecessor in office, although he said freely that if it had been in his power he would have reversed it, and would have carried out the understanding which was had when this one suit was taken to the courts as a test case.

Now, Mr. President, it would be infamous in this Government or any other, under those circumstances, where its officers had by such an agreement prevented parties from carrying up an appeal from the decision of the Commissioner, to take advantage of the neglect occasioned by their agreement to keep taxes which they had illegally obtained.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the very point which the officers of the Government deny, that there was any agreement.

Mr. WITHERS. This bill only proposes to reopen the cases and submit them to the examination and decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That is all. If the claims are fraudulent he will not permit them to be paid. If these taxes are found to have been illegally collected and money has been taken improperly from these parties the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will order restoration to be made. That is the whole of it.

Mr. McMILLAN. That principle would apply in any case where there was an allegation that the tax levied was illegal. If Congress will pass a law to permit any subsequent Commissioner of Internal Revenue to pass upon a question and to make an appropriation depending upon his decision in favor of the claimant then we can do it in all cases as well as this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Department," in line 20, to insert:

And also consider and examine the claim of Matthew Smith, late of the city of New York, for $1,600, for the repayment of taxes similarly assessed and collected improperly.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I ask the Senator from Virginia whether this is a claim of the same character?

Mr. WITHERS. Precisely; the party was doing business in New York at the same time and in precisely the same capacity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 39, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allison,	Conover,	Kernan,	Randolph,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	McCreery,	Rollins,
Armstrong,	Eaton,	McDonald,	Sargent,
Bailey,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Saulsbury,

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN GOODE of Virginia, managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 363) granting a pension to James Newcombe; and

A bill (S. No. 874) granting a pension to Alfred Richardson, late of company A, Twelth Indiana Volunteers.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1164) for the relief of Peter G. Mills, his heirs and assigns;

A bill (H. R. No. 3625) relating to soldiers while in the civil service of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3879) for the relief of certain pensioners;

A bill (H. R. No. 4974) to amend section 4702 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4976) to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the country;

A bill (H. R. No. 4981) relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases; and

A bill (H. R. 4988) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute superintendents of mints or assayers in assay offices assistant treasurers of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 312) for the relief of Robert Coles; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1951) for the relief of John F. Sutherlin & Brother, of Parke County, Indiana.

TENTS FOR SOLDIERS' REUNION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa, to report it back favorably and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel it to be my duty to call for the regular order.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This resolution will take but a minute.

Mr. INGALLS. If it gives rise to no debate, I will not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTICES OF LAND CONTESTS.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3369) to provide for the publication of notices of contest under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States. The bill provides that the notices of contest now provided by law under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States shall, after the passage of this act, be printed in some newspaper printed in the county where the land in contest lies; and if no newspaper be printed in such county, then in the newspaper printed in the county nearest to such land.

The committee have unanimously instructed me to recommend its passage, and have asked me to have it taken up and considered now. There are only five lines in it, and everybody is in favor of it. It will take less time now than it ever will again.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be taken up, subject to a call for the regular order.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOWE. I have been trying for some time to speak on the present bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator was addressing the Senator from Illinois, not the Chair.

Mr. HOWE. I was asking a question of the Senator from Illinois, which I will proceed to complete if allowed. It is whether this notice in a newspaper is intended as a substitute for what the law requires.

Mr. OGLESBY. Whatever notice is now required by law has heretofore been published in any paper in the land district or in the State. This simply provides that where public notice is given by publication, it shall be given, instead of anywhere in the State or district, in the county where the land lies.

Mr. HOWE. Is that all?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDONALD. Or if there is no newspaper in that county, in the county nearest it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask the Senate to take up a bill which will take but a very little time to dispose of. It is the bill (S. No. 144) to establish the Territory of Lincoln, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. INGALLS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas calls for the regular order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will say to the Senator from Kansas, that if there is any likelihood of debate growing out of taking up this bill I will not press it now.

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot yield to that seductive voice any longer. There are plenty of "bills that will not lead to debate" that would probably take all the afternoon if I were to yield to them. The District bill has been under consideration three or four days, and I ask the Senate to proceed with it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think I have been tolerably modest about this myself.

Mr. INGALLS. I think so.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have given way each time I have been applied to.

Mr. INGALLS. I will assist the Senator to get up his bill as soon as the pending measure is disposed of.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Very well.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BAYARD, to strike out "five," in line 6 of section 5, before the word "thousand," and insert "one."

Mr. DORSEY. Last night, about the time the Senate adjourned, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] suggested an amendment to the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] which I now send to the desk, and ask the Clerk to read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Washington," in line 8, insert:

And if the total cost shall exceed $5,000, then in one newspaper in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore also.

Mr. DORSEY. Before that, the word "five" is stricken out and "one" inserted.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, section 5, strike out "five" and insert one;" and strike out in lines 7 and 8 the words "in each of the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore;" and after the word "Washington"——

Mr. INGALLS. I think the Clerk is mistaken about that. My understanding was that the words "New York, Philadelphia, and Washington" were retained, and the word "Baltimore" inserted as an additional city.

The CHIEF CLERK. The section, as it has been amended, reads thus in that part:

Given in one newspaper in each of the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore by advertisement for one week daily for proposals, with general character of the work, as to materials for the whole or any portion of the work proposed to be done, and setting forth that full specifications can be seen at the office of the commissioners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is as it now reads. Now, the amendment——

Mr. THURMAN. Let it now be read as it would be if amended as the Senator from Arkansas has just proposed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter when any repairs of streets, avenues, alleys, or sewers within the District of Columbia are to be made, or when new pavements are to be substituted in place of those worn out, new ones laid, or new streets opened, sewers built, or any works the total cost of which shall exceed the sum of $1,000, notice shall be given in one newspaper in Washington, and if the total cost shall exceed $5,000, then in one newspaper in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore also.

Mr. BAYARD. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment in this form? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to just as read, the Chair understands.

Mr. MORRILL. Yesterday there was a motion made to strike out "three" and insert "two," on line 19. I voted against that proposition; but from information that I have received since, I am satisfied that I voted wrongly, that the Belgian block-pavement can be obtained, has been obtained, for $1.75 and less per square yard, and that there are some descriptions of asphalt pavements that certainly look very well which have been laid for less than even $2. I therefore deem it just for me to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] was rejected.

Mr. SARGENT. Why not move it again in the Senate? We shall make greater progress with the bill in that way.

Mr. MORRILL. I would rather cover the point now.

Mr. BAYARD. I will say a word in confirmation of the motion of the Senator from Vermont. I stated yesterday that I had been informed by reliable authority that excellent pavement, both of Belgian blocks and concrete pavement, had been laid and was now in service in this city which had cost $1.75 per square yard and no more. I said also—and in this I was in error—that the block to which I referred of concrete pavement had been guaranteed for a period of ten years. I have ascertained to-day that the guarantee was for five years, and I desire so far to correct my statement of yesterday and to accompany it with the further remark that I took occasion to-day to drive over the square of concrete pavement which lies on F street between Twelfth and Thirteenth, being the square just this side of the block in which the Ebbitt House is. I know very little practically of the construction of pavements of that character; but I asked a merchant there resident, who, I believe is a coal merchant, and who has heavy coal carts constantly traveling in and out of his premises over this pavement, what he thought of it. It has been there since last October, and he told me he believed it was as good a piece of pavement as there was in Washington City. The cost of that was $1.75 per square yard. I have also driven since Congress met, over about one mile of Belgian pavement laid on Seventh street, driving to and fro from the Smithsonian garden to the Potomac River. That pavement is in my judgment as good as any one can reasonably ask for. That pavement cost $1.73 per square yard. I was also to-day in Georgetown upon the main street of that town leading from the Avenue bridge, which the railway traverses, and drove over two or three blocks of Belgian pavement there, and stopping opposite the store, a handsome establishment, of some merchant there doing business, he was called to the carriage and asked what his opinion of that pavement was, and how he and the other business men in that neighborhood liked it. He said it was perfectly satisfactory; it had been down since last fall, and to all appearances it is substantial and proper in every respect. That pavement cost $1.75 per square yard. I merely repeat this to the Senate because what I said yesterday is only confirmed by my personal examination to-day.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If I had not felt that a good pavement could be put down for less than $2 a yard, I would not have offered this amendment to this bill. I am as well satisfied of that as I can be of anything; and I am satisfied of another thing, that as a rule the maximum limit is reached in giving out contracts. I think every Senator will bear me out in that assertion. As a rule, that is the case, and I think it the part of prudence and the part of economy to put this limit down to $2. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to reconsider the vote rejecting the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment striking out the word "three" in line 19, and inserting "two;" so as to read:

The total cost of which shall not exceed $2 per square yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the fifth section as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to suggest that in line 20 of this section in the print I have—I do not know but that it is different in the reprint—occur the words "bonds to the United States." I wish to move to insert after the word "States" in line 20 these words:

In a penal sum not less than double the amount of the contract.

The present phrase is in respect of contractors giving bonds for public works, &c.:

A good and sufficient bond to the United States, with sureties, to be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be required.

I wish to have the penal sum of the bond not less than double the amount of the contract so as to require a sufficient bond, as in many other instances is done. I do not presume the Senator from Kansas will have any objection to that.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to inquire of my friend from Vermont why he fixes double the amount of the sum to be paid under the contract as the penalty of the bond. The penalty is only fixed as damages, as we all know, and yet sometimes it might be impossible for a good man to give a bond with a very heavy penalty when he might give one with a smaller penalty that would answer all purposes. I can hardly conceive of a case where the recovery on such a bond would be for any such sum as the contract price of doing the work, unless it was a very small sum indeed. I do not see that the amount of the contract price for doing the work, the sum to be paid to the contractor, furnishes any criterion for the penalty of the bond. The bond ought to be in such sum as to secure the performance of the work, and usually a per centum of the price is retained by the Government in letting the contract to secure the performance of the contract. The penalty of the bond may not be double the amount of the entire contract price of the work, and yet be equally good. I do not see why the contract price should be the penalty of the bond.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me put a case which I have been told by responsible persons, and therefore I believe, subject of course to being corrected on investigation, has happened in this District on the subject of street-paving. Contracts were made for the paving of certain streets in this District many years since; I do not wish to be too specific so as to produce any irritation in the public mind here—amounting to more than a million dollars. The pavement was laid down and paid for and in a short time afterward the whole pavement had to be taken up and further provision made, so that after a million dollars had been paid for putting down that pavement and taking up the old one, which was a stone pavement, a rough one but still it kept you out of the mud, the public in this District were worse off than they were before. There was an actual absolute destruction of the whole of that money paid, and of more too. In a case of that kind the rule of damages on a bond for a good and proper pavement would have gone beyond the amount paid for laying it down, so I thought that as happens in many other instances which now exist in the laws, it would be well to put the penal sum up to double the amount of the contract price. Perhaps to put it at once and a half the amount would be enough, but "double" was the easier phrase. You want the penalty up high enough, so that if the whole thing is a delusion which the man undertakes to perform, and he has taken $100,000 in a given case, and it will take a hundred and fifty thousand dollars to make it as good as before, the bondsman should be responsible. That is the point I had in view, and which I had in view from circumstances which had been stated to me in our previous experience here, and others that can readily be imagined, make it clearly proper here.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know to what particular case the Senator refers, but I have no doubt of cases here in which the District is a great deal worse than if the pavements had never been laid. There were fifty odd miles of wooden pavement laid here, and absolutely now a large portion of that pavement is an embargo to travel on the streets.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not refer to those instances, which are pretty well in point, but I referred to instances where the thing done was immediately discovered and thrown up and taken up.

Mr. THURMAN. I can hardly conceive of such a case as that without there having been some great error in deciding what kind of pavement should be laid, as there was undoubtedly a very great error in the authorities deciding to lay this wooden pavement. Still there may be some such case. I remember there was something of that kind on Ninth street and, perhaps, some portion of Seventh street.

My reason for suggesting a doubt about the propriety of the amendment is, that if you require too large a bond, you limit competition and put the business in the hands of a few men that can give great bonds to get the contract, whereas a smaller bond that other men could give would open the door to competition and secure the execution of the work at a cheaper rate. I suggest to my friend that instead of saying "double the amount" he should say "in an amount equal to the contract price."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; to harmonize views I will say:

In amount not less than the amount.

Striking out the word "double," so as to read:

In a penal sum not less than the amount of the contract.

That, in the cases which have been stated to me of previous experience here, would not make the penalty sufficient to pay the damages; but let it go.

Mr. THURMAN. I think it will be found so generally.

Mr. DORSEY. The amendment, as now modified, I hope will be agreed to without objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to call the attention of the Senate, so that we shall vote understandingly, if attention has not already been called to it, to the scheme of this section in respect of street improvements, pavements, sewers, and other works of that sort. This section, as reported, provides first, for the railways, which is well enough, and then it provides for the United States paying one-half and the general treasury of the District paying the other half, and entirely drops assessments on adjoining proprietors, as is the custom in most cities and has been the principle and rule adopted here. In view of what has already taken place here, of good improvements through a good many streets which have been paid for, and bad ones in some others, and no improvements at all in still another series of streets, the effect of this statute as it now stands is to have charged upon the adjoining proprietors on the streets that have been properly paved one-third of the expense of paving them specially; that the owners have had to pay out of their own pockets. Now, as to the other streets in the same city, and in carrying on the same grand work of making this a great place, you propose to exempt those people whose streets are yet to be improved entirely and compel the people who have already paid for improving their streets one-third of the expense to contribute to the payment of the same rate of expense for those who have not paid anything and whose streets are still to be improved.

I doubt the justice and propriety of that. I think that the principle of special assessments for local improvements in streets in front of property, is a sound principle; at least almost every city and almost every State provides for that species of special taxation for special benefit; and yet after that principle, so universally recognized, has been adopted here and partly executed, this proposition is to drop that altogether and to continue the improvements at the expense of the general treasury. It appears to me that it is not just to those who have been already so heavily assessed to be taxed for the other special improvements out of their proportion; and in the next place I am not at all clear that it would be expedient if it were a new proposition, for the reason that if you impose local assessments upon property specially benefited you lead every property-owner in those blocks, along that line of street, to unite with his fellow-citizens and neighbors in being a corps of observation and of criticism and of complaint and of resistance against the wrong and corruption and imposition which are so apt to happen, in such cases of public improvement, because they have a more direct and special interest in it, as they themselves on their own property or frontage have to contribute specially to that thing.

I should not wish this section to pass without attention being called specially to this sudden change in the middle of a series of improvements which this bill makes from existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that the present law provides that the abutting property-holders shall pay one-third of the cost?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is on both sides; the property-holders on each side pay one-sixth.

Mr. ALLISON. Each pays one-sixth. It would be very easy to amend this section so that that shall continue by inserting "except as now provided for by law" after the provision as to one-half the work, and of course the remainder will be paid out of the proper funds of the District, out of the general revenue.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be amended without difficulty.

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest that there is no desire on the part of the committee, so far as I know, to change any existing law in respect to that matter, and if the Senate think best to continue this system of special improvement taxes, I think the Committee on the District of Columbia will have no objection, though it has led to a great deal of difficulty and trouble, and in many cases to very excessive taxation. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that in line 44, after the word "direct," we insert:

That the property immediately abutting on and benefited by such improvement shall pay one-third the cost of the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You ought to say "one-sixth," because the property on both sides abuts; and one-third on each side would make two-thirds.

Mr. DORSEY. No; this is the language we have used heretofore, and it is divided between the two sides.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator show me where that language has been used.

Mr. DORSEY. The Pennsylvania avenue bill. Let the words "in proportion to their frontage" be inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should read "one-third by the owners of private property lying and abutting on such streets, in proportion to their frontage thereon."

Mr. DORSEY. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as now proposed will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "direct," in line 44——

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should read in this way I think:

And the owners of private property lying and abutting on such streets or avenues shall pay one-third of the expense thereof in proportion to their frontage thereon, excluding the proportion of the railway companies.

Mr. DORSEY. That is correct. Let it be put in that form.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Vermont should there not be some consideration for the owners of lots whose lots run to a fine point and who have a double frontage? The Senator will recall a case near by where both he and I reside, of some one across the street at the intersection of Massachusetts avenue and M street, where there is a long slim point which fronts on the two streets. It begins with a depth of perhaps one foot and runs back considerably. I mean that as you retire from the apex of the triangle you widen out, but at the apex of the triangle you have a depth of probably one foot and a double frontage, one on Massachusetts avenue and one on M street. It is simply confiscation of the property to charge it on both fronts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the case that the Senator supposes, the facts, as I understand them, are not quite in accordance with what he understands. The United States owns the triangle in which that property is situated up to within about twenty or thirty feet from the structure that now stands there, and it is public property. Then when you come to the private property, the distance from street to street is probably sixty feet. When that property was first improved, from the lofty eminence on which we have been left we can see it very easily, we can take a bird's-eye view of it—when that property was first improved two structures were erected, although they came together two distinct fronts, though the lots were of very little depth. So in the instance the Senator suggests he is not fully fortified by that particular illustration; but still there is force in what he says as there is also in what another Senator has suggested, that in respect to those who have paid for this wood pavement which has turned out to be a disastrous failure, it may be hard upon them to require the full payment of the third. I am inclined to think, on the whole, the matter should be further considered, although the principle that I have suggested I am sure is correct and some step in that direction ought to be taken; perhaps a third is too high in certain cases. I am inclined to think it would be better to let this point pass by for a moment and we can consider later what ought to be done in a case of that kind, if that is agreeable to the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. There was some proposition I think in another bill to prevent property from being taxed for more than simple frontage. The Senator from Arkansas may remember it. This very property to which the Senator from Vermont refers, which I know very well, has on it quite a handsome house—I do not know built or owned by whom—but it has a frontage of fifty feet upon both streets, and with what you may call front doors on each. It seems to me for a man who has almost no land it is very hard to compel him to pay the expense of paving Massachusetts avenue and also to compel him to pay for that on M street because his other door looks on that street. There ought to be consideration for the want of depth of the lot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can be obviated by providing for a certain depth of lot.

Mr. DORSEY. The committee considered this matter very fully and called on the District commissioners to ascertain if there was not some way of providing for relaying these worn-out pavements as they will have to be relaid, so as not to absolutely confiscate the property abutting on each side of the streets where these pavements have been laid, this property having once paid one-third the expense, and in some cases I believe one-half, for the first special assessments I think were one-half. We thought it was better, considering all the circumstances, to ask the Government of the United States to pay one-half and let the District at large pay the other half, except in cases where there are new streets. In a bill which was passed the other day, the assessment bill, we made provision that the commissioners might make a special assessment for streets that were freshly opened, for any work laid down where there had never been any special assessment for pavements or sewerage; but in this measure we thought it would be better to leave the payment as the committee reported in this bill, and I am glad the Senator from Vermont has seen fit to direct attention to the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall hope at a later stage in the bill to have some scheme devised which will work perfectly fair all round, as the present plan does not; and the one suggested by the Senator from Arkansas in reply to my suggestions or in consequence of them may work too hard in the opposite direction; but for the time being, it being withdrawn, we can go on and have that matter reserved.

But in the same section and on the same page the bill provides that the "railway companies, having conformed to the grades established by the commissioners, may use cobble-stones or Belgian blocks for paving their tracks, or the space between their tracks, as the commissioners may direct."

That merely leaves the commissioners the power of deciding between cobble-stones and Belgian blocks, but without any power of controlling the kind of cobble-stones or the kind of Belgian blocks, which I think is wrong. The commissioners ought to have the power to compel the railway companies not to use cobble-stones above a certain size, for instance. There is absolute cruelty to animals on the part of one of the present city railways owing to the enormous size of the cobble-stones that are put in between the tracks, which are so much cheaper than smaller ones laid smooth and uniform. It is absolute cruelty to animals to compel the horses of that company to go over that kind of stone when it is at all wet or slippery, because it is almost impossible for them to get a foothold, to say nothing of the great inconvenience and injury to the general traffic of that street.

I move to amend, in line 42, after the word "use," by inserting the word "such." In that case it will read:

That the railway companies having conformed to the grades established by the commissioners, may use such cobble-stones or Belgium blocks for paving their tracks, or the space between their tracks, as the commissioners may direct.

So as to enable the commissioners to control the size and character of the material that is to be used.

Mr. DORSEY. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The same section, in lines 54 and following, reads:

That if any street railway company shall neglect or refuse to perform the work required by this act, said pavement shall be laid between the tracks of such railway by the District of Columbia.

And then it provides for compelling the railway companies to pay. The previous part of the section has provided that it is the duty of the railway companies to lay not only between the tracks but two feet on each side outside of the tracks. This therefore applies only if they will not do it, and it only provides for the commissioners laying between the tracks and compelling companies to pay for that. To save the expense of paving four feet in width, which the two outsides make put together, all the companies have to do is to omit doing the work and let the District do it.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator is mistaken about that. The previous part of the bill provides that the street-railway companies shall pay for paving between their tracks and two feet outside. It does not provide that they shall pave outside their tracks because the commissioners intend to have the pavement harmonious running up to the track. The commissioners are obliged to pave the two feet any way, and charge the cost of it to the railway companies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see.

When any street or avenue through which a street railway runs shall be paved, such railway company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of such roads, and for a distance of two feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair.

So far you will see no distinction is made as to who is to do the work, as to the space between the tracks and that exterior to them. Then it goes on:

But the said railway companies, having conformed to the grades established by the commissioners, may use such cobble-stone or Belgian blocks for paving their tracks, or the space between their tracks, as the commissioners may direct.

That fairly confers an affirmative power on the companies to pave themselves between their tracks and two feet exterior thereto. It says if they do not do it, if they neglect or refuse to perform the work required by this act; that is the railway companies themselves are to perform the work in the first instance, and if they do not do it, then the commissioners may cause the work to be done between the tracks, and the companies shall pay for it. I move to amend in line 56 by inserting after the word "tracks" the words "and exterior thereto" so as to read:

That if any street-railway company shall neglect or refuse to perform the work required by this act, said pavement shall be laid between the tracks, and exterior thereto, of such railway by the District of Columbia; and if such company shall fail or refuse to pay the sum due, &c.

Then the commissioners shall compel them.

Mr. DORSEY. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Beginning on line 80 the section reads:

It shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to see that all water and gas mains, service-pipes, and sewer-connections are laid upon any street or avenue proposed to be paved or otherwise improved before any such pavement or other permanent works are put down; and the Washington Gas-Light Company, under the direction of said commissioners, shall take up, lay, and replace all gas-mains on any street or avenue to be paved, at such time and place as said commissioners shall direct.

I propose to insert in line 86 after the word "shall" the words "at its own expense." That is probably implied now, but to make it perfectly clear and to save a lawsuit, I move to insert the words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I have no more amendments to propose at present to this section, reserving for future consideration the question of special assessments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on section 5 as amended.

The section was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next section will be read.

The Secretary read section 6.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out that section entirely, which provides for a Delegate to Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to strike out section 6.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My reason for that is that there is no occasion in the world, in my humble judgment, for a Delegate to Congress from this District. The District is right here in the face of Congress all the time. Both Houses of Congress have committees specially charged with the duty of looking after the interests of the District. They are always accessible to the citizens who can present through them, as they can through every other Senator and Representative, as well as by petition, everything that concerns their interest; and there is no need of putting the people of this District and the taxpayers of the United States to the expense of from five to twenty-five thousand dollars every two years for going through the machinery of having an election in a District containing one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, that reaches no practical good.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at any length upon this subject. It is one that has engaged the attention of Congress and of the people here for many years, and I presume that the opinion of every one who hears me is fully made up as to whether he is in favor of the election of a Delegate from this District, or opposed to it. The bill reported from the House provided for the election of a council, consisting of twenty-one members, based upon the idea of giving the people who reside here the power of participating to a certain extent in the management of their own local affairs, and to this extent carrying out the universally recognized American idea of the right of every community to manage its affairs in its own way. The committee of the Senate thought it best, under all the circumstances, not to agree with this proposition of the House, but in order to recognize this principle of self-government, and to appease as far as possible the sentiment which exists here in the minds of a great many people that they ought to have some representation so long as they are taxed, it was thought advisable to provide for the election of a Delegate as being the least injurious method of attaining this end.

I may say also that it would undoubtedly be a very great relief to Congress in both branches to have some person selected by the people here to present their views and their wishes in an authoritative manner. As it now is, the committees on the District in the House and Senate are the special organ of this community. To those committees they apply habitually for relief; their complaints are presented to them; and the result is that there is a vast amount of time consumed that might profitably be devoted in other directions. If the people here had the opportunity of electing a Delegate who could represent them and submit formally to Congress their wishes and act for them, he being at the same time, as this bill provides, ex officio a member of the District committee in the lower House, I believe it would be advantageous; that the people themselves would be better satisfied and contented, and we should hear less complaints; there would be less difficulty; we should know better what the people here want and Senators and Representatives would be relieved of a vast amount of unnecessary trouble.

I can see no objection, in the nature of things, arising either from the organization of this community or from its particular wants, to the adoption of this provision; and as it carries out the idea which is recognized as the basis of our institutions, and makes this community no longer an exception to the general rule that all peoples that are taxed shall have their proper representation, it appears to me that it would not be unjust or improper to agree with the committee in this respect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has stated with his usual clearness and force all the arguments that can be advanced in favor of this proposition; but it does not appear to me that they are adequate to the great expense which this entails in a District that is bankrupt and in want from previous mismanagement. We tried the experiment, under the government that ran the District head under water, of a Delegate, who was an estimable and very reputable man. I had the pleasure of knowing him. I believe there was only one gentleman who served as Delegate during the time one was allowed; and yet I think the experience of everybody who remembers about it is that Senators and Representatives and committees were not relieved from the duty of considering the views of the inhabitants of this District and attending to their wishes at all. It was merely an ornamental place. This gentleman acted as the attorney and spokesman of the District before these committees, instead of having, as since has been the case, a committee of citizens, everybody for himself, but when citizens act in concert, a committee of them appear before these committees for the same purposes. He has no vote. It is true he can make a speech in the House of Representatives; but we all know that speeches there, as well as here, against the report of a committee that has heard all sides, as mere speeches, do not amount to anything. All the information that a speech develops has already been acquired and stated in the report of the committee. And it appears to me—that is the only objection I have to it—that upon this overtaxed and overburdened and swamped community, it is a wrong thing to impose any, the least, expense that is not for some indispensable purpose of carrying on their affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the section.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before the motion is put, I wish to strike out of the section these words——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my motion is lost, you can move it then.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes. Then I will reserve my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to strike out section 6.

Mr. INGALLS. It is proper, as this is a subject that has met with much discussion in the District, and much argument has been advanced upon it pro and con, and a great deal of feeling has been manifested, that there should be some authoritative expression on the part of the Senate of its wishes in this matter. I will therefore, although it will take some little time, ask for the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the mover of this proposition if it would not be well to include the seventh section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we strike out the sixth, the seventh will go as a matter of course. There is no trouble about it.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) Upon the question of striking out this section I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on the motion.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 40, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Allison,	Conover,	Kernan,	Plumb,
Armstrong,	Davis of Illinois,	Kirkwood,	Randolph,
Bailey,	Eaton,	McCreery,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Edmunds,	McDonald,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Teller,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Maxey,	Thurman,
Burnside,	Grover,	Merrimon,	Voorhees,
Christiancy,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Wadleigh,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Morrill,	Windom.
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,	Withers.

NAYS—9.

Dorsey,	Howe,	Mitchell,	Sargent,
Hamlin,	Ingalls,	Rollins,	Spencer.

Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	McPherson,	Whyte.
Cameron of Wis.,	Gordon,	Matthews,

So the motion to strike out section 6 was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. If that section is stricken out, the next, the seventh, should come out with it. I move that section 7 be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read section 8.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not after abolishing the board of Metropolitan police, the commissioners of the District of Columbia will have authority to increase the police force at will, or if that is fixed by existing laws; and whether the police force can be increased without action of Congress?

Mr. INGALLS. They are left under existing laws so far as not inconsistent with this act and subject to the limitation I have previously called the attention of the Senate to, that all estimates of expenditures must be submitted by the commissioners to the Secretary of the Treasury, approved by him and approved by Congress, so that there is no possibility of any inordinate or extravagant exercise of power. There will be just as many policemen here as Congress provides for and no more.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest a verbal criticism in line 10. There is no occasion for the words "provided, that." The proviso is not a condition upon the preceding matter, or if it is it ought not to be made such. I move to strike out the words "provided, that," and to insert "and," so as to read "and the commissioners of the District of Columbia," &c.

Mr. INGALLS. No objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to insert in line 11, after the word "shall," and before the word "appoint," the words "from time to time." This makes provision for appointing nineteen persons, without any power of removal or change. If you are going to confide it to the power of the commissioners, there should be the power of course to fill vacancies and to make removals, I take it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on section 8 as amended.

The section was agreed to.

The Secretary read section 9.

The section was agreed to.

The Secretary read section 10.

Mr. SARGENT. In line 20 I move to strike out the word "ordinances" and insert "rules." The word "ordinances" has a technical meaning. An ordinance is a municipal law that has a sanction or penalty. I suppose as that power is not given to the commissioners it is not intended to be given to the board of health.

Mr. INGALLS. That was not the intention of the committee. The word "ordinances" has a technical meaning, and of course it does not properly belong here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move in line 4 to strike out the words "continued with" and insert "hereby is abolished and," which is a somewhat radical amendment it must be admitted. Section 10 reads in this way, the first part of it:

The board of health created by "An act to provide a government for the District of Columbia," approved February 21, 1871, shall be continued with the powers it now possesses, and the further powers conferred by this act.

I propose to make it read:

The board of health created, &c., shall be, and hereby is, abolished, and the powers it now possesses, and the further powers conferred by this act—shall be exercised by the Surgeon-General, I am going to move, if you are willing to abolish the board. If the Senate should not be willing to require the Surgeon-General to attend to this business, as he can with his assistants, without any additional expense, then I should move, or hope somebody would, to treat this as you have all the other boards, by putting these powers in the hands of the commissioners. The Senate will see that in respect of every other board under this government we have agreed, so far as agreement can be inferred from our acting on these sections in this way, that they shall be abolished—the Metropolitan police, which, I believe, on the whole, has been a very well-regulated and a very well-exercised function of government here; the board of school trustees, who certainly have, according to my information, done extremely well under the circumstances in which they were situated. We abolish them; we abolish the board of sinking-fund commissioners; we abolish every body except the board of health, which has been during the period of its existence, I have no doubt, a very useful body, but an enormously expensive one, costing some years more than $50,000, and, I believe, for the last year more than $30,000.

It appears to me, in the first place, that it would be extremely invidious, (which we do not wish to be unless it is necessary,) to say that we will sweep out the board of Metropolitan police, which is just as essential to the good order of this community as the board of health can be, that we will sweep out the board of school trustees, who have done their duty well, and a duty so essential to the good order and prosperity of any community in the exercise of their functions, and every other board, and say that this board of health shall stay by an affirmative act of Congress. Now, therefore, without making any criticism upon events of the past, except the one that I believe within the last year or two this board has, so far as I know, done its duties well, (and hence I imply no reproach on it by this present motion,) it certainly does not stand on any higher ground or in any different attitude than the boards we have already agreed to abolish and to consolidate under the single executive direction, in another form, of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Then, in the next place, supposing we were to say that it would be better not to leave this matter to the commissioners of the District, although there is no reason for saying that except one of expense, but to say, as I intend to propose if this first amendment is agreed to, to abolish the board to transfer its powers and duties to the Surgeon-General of the Army of the United States who is located here. His staff here at this present moment of assistant surgeons-general, medical purveyors, surgeons, and so on, is amply adequate to the performance of all the health duties required by this city. They are receiving handsome, and as some people believe, excessive salaries, and in the present state of the condition of the Army of the United States and the happy state of peace that we are in and are likely to be I am glad to hope, they have practically very little to do. This body and staff of persons can attend to this. They are all of them so far as I know, and as we must presume if we did not know it, of the highest skill in their profession, men of affairs, men of experience, men of learning in the very respects that appertain to the health of a community, as they must be if they are properly in their places as belonging to the medical staff of the Army of the United States.

We may in my opinion save more than one-half, perhaps three-quarters, of the expense that is now entailed in respect to salaries and emoluments of the staff and so on, by requiring these gentlemen to attend to this duty, and it is one that they may well be required to attend to as part of the exercise of their duties as a branch of the Government of the United States which has the exclusive control of this District, all of whose governing officials, except the minor ones, are obliged to be here for the performance of their duties.

But I am not now asking the Senate to vote on the double proposition of abolishing the board and requiring the Surgeon-General and his staff to attend to its duties, but only on the proposition, as far as I have moved it, to abolish the board; and then it will be a question for the Senate to determine whether it is better, as in the other case, to require the commissioners of the District, through proper appliances, to attend to these health duties, or to require the Surgeon-General and his staff to attend to them. My present motion only is to provide for the abolition of the board of health.

Mr. WITHERS. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont as indicating, however, a purpose, in the event his motion prevails, to follow it with a motion providing for the delegation of these duties to the Surgeon-General?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, I shall make that motion; and if that should not be agreed to, then the Senate, as in respect of these other powers, should say that the commissioners shall do these duties. That would be a question for consideration afterward as to where the health duties should be lodged; and so I have only made one motion at a time for that reason, to dispose of the first question first.

Mr. HARRIS. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer an amendment as an addition to section 10. The act creating the board of health fixes no official term, and for that reason the committee have instructed me to offer this amendment. I propose that it be read simply for information, so that the Senate may see the exact form that the committee propose to put the section in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 10:

The official term of the present members of the board of health shall expire as follows: one on the 1st day of July, 1878; one on the 1st day of July each year thereafter; and their successors shall be appointed as now provided by law for the term of five years; and the members of the present board shall determine by lot the order in which their official terms shall expire.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont objects to the action of the committee in retaining the board of health because he thinks it would be invidious to abolish the other boards under existing laws and invest the powers now exercised by them in the board of commissioners, and retain the board of health. His argument would be good if he proposed also to invest the powers now exercised by the board of health in the commissioners; but he does not propose to do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do, if I cannot invest the powers in the Surgeon-General.

Mr. INGALLS. But he does not propose as an original proposition to invest the commissioners with the powers now exercised by the board of health; therefore his argument, so far as that portion of it is concerned, falls to the ground.

There is an undoubted reason, apparent to every one, obvious to the most casual inspection, why the duties of the board of health should be exercised by a particular board specially adapted for that purpose. The board of health must necessarily be composed of men professionally skilled, men who have been trained to a particular knowledge of the duties they are called upon to exercise and the interests they are called upon to protect. It is not like the board of police commissioners, or the board of fire commissioners, or the board of school trustees, where any man of ordinary intelligence and fair intellectual capacity can serve faithfully and efficiently; but the board of health has to deal with the sanitary condition and with the regulations that affect the health of the community. Therefore it is essential that these trained men, who are to be specially qualified by education for the discharge of these duties, should have an existence independent of the board of commissioners who discharge the ordinary executive functions of the community.

The Senator from Vermont seems to have a special desire to have this District controlled by the Army of the United States. We are to have one commissioner designated by the President from the engineer corps of the Army to represent the Government in the management of affairs here. He now proposes to turn over the health functions to the Surgeon-General. He might as well logically propose to turn this community into a camp at once, and have it policed by the regular Army, and have all offenses of the citizens here tried by drum-head court-martial. If those people who live here and form this community have any civil rights, if they have any rights as citizens, it seems that a portion of the duties that are to be devolved upon their rulers ought to be discharged by persons from civil life. I cannot understand why it should be thought specially desirable to turn the functions of this board over to the Surgeon-General, and there are many reasons why it should not be done. In the first place, the officers of the Army medical corps are under the control of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. The discipline of the military forces requires that. Here is a specific function proposed to be imposed upon these officers independent of the Commander-in-Chief. I am very much in doubt whether or not, under the regulations controlling the Army, Congress could impose any obligation of this kind that would interfere with the constitutional right of the President to direct these men to go where he pleases and to do what duties he pleases that they shall perform. I doubt very much whether Congress, acting in a purely legislative capacity, can impose incongruous duties upon these men. They are under the control of the Commander-in-Chief, and if we should attempt to assign the Surgeon-General, the medical purveyor, and the other officers of the medical staff to civil duties inconsistent with those required of them by the Commander-in-Chief they could not be exercised, in my belief. I think the provision would be nugatory to that extent, and we ought to do an impossible or an unwise or an inconsistent thing.

With regard to the board of health, as its duties have been exercised and discharged under the present system, I believe that the statements even of the Senator from Vermont will bear me out in the assertion that there is no fault to be found with the administration of that branch of the government. As at present organized the board of health consists of five members, who have an annual salary of $500 each. When assigned to other duties, as they are, one of them being president of the board, one secretary, one treasurer, one registrar of vital statistics, and one the attorney, they have a small additional compensation. There is also a health officer, a chief clerk, a medical sanitary inspector, five sanitary inspectors, a pound-master, and a messenger, and this comprises the entire personnel of the board.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to ask who are the members of the board?

Mr. INGALLS. The president of the board is Dr. T. S. Verdi, the secretary is Dr. C. C. Cox, the treasurer is Mr. John Marbury, jr., a citizen of Georgetown; the registrar is Dr. Bliss, and the attorney is Mr. R. B. Warden, all of them men recognized as persons of great intellectual capacity and of the highest personal character and attainments.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Kansas, as he has it there, what is the aggregate of compensation paid to this official board?

Mr. DORSEY. It is $32,000.

Mr. INGALLS. No, the entire amount appropriated for the last year was $32,000. I will turn to it in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but that appropriation does not cover all the expenses of doing the things that they are required to do, or anything like it.

Mr. INGALLS. What else are they required to do that this does not cover?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was informed not long since and from a very authoritative source, that quite a considerable number of items, the details of which are out of my mind at this moment, were paid out of a different fund, as is sometimes the case in such operations.

Mr. INGALLS. That is very indefinite, Mr. President. If the Senator from Vermont has any accusation to make, he certainly ought to put it in some definite and tangible form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not making any accusation.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator to say that there were expenses that were incurred by this board outside of the appropriations named in their report. I ask him what they are, and he says he is informed, in a nebulous and cloudy way, that there are some other expenses which are not named, that somebody has told him about.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not make the reply that the Senator imputes to me.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I ask the Senator if there are any other expenses than those named, not covered by the appropriations, and, if so, what they are, because I was asked by the Senator from Delaware what the expenses are, and I was proceeding to give the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I apologize for having interrupted my friend, and will make my statement presently.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me, after what he has said about the standing of these men, to call his attention to a report signed by five very highly respectable gentleman?

Mr. INGALLS. I am paying attention to the Senator.

Mr. BECK. The report was made, I observe, on the 26th of June, 1876, and is signed by "A. H. BUCKNER, LAWRENCE T. NEAL, JULIAN HARTRIDGE, E. J. HENKLE, A. E. Stevenson." I assure the Senator I know nothing about the report; but they use this language in regard to the board, and of course I desire to know the facts before I vote:

In the investigation of some of the contracts of the board of health (see testimony of Jerome Bradley, S. R. Scharf, Louis Keiser, and William Painter) it appears that that with the Odorless Excavating Apparatus Company, of Baltimore, was made under circumstances that lead to the suspicion if not to the conviction that improper motives controlled two of the members of the board in awarding this contract. The contract was given to the above-named company as the highest and not the lowest bidder, by which the citizens of the District are taxed 25 per cent. more than they would be under the rejected bid. It runs for three years, and the loss to the people of the District for these three years, it is estimated, will be equal to $10,000 per annum. The two members of the board (Drs. Cox and Bliss) above referred to subsequently to the award received from the Odorless Company certificates of preferred stock in the company guaranteeing 7 per cent. per annum interest on $10,000, which they seem to have disposed of afterward to the president of the company.

We refer to the statements of Drs. Cox and Bliss, to be found in the printed volume of the testimony, for their explanation of this transaction, which the committee are of opinion is far from being satisfactory. Not only ought the contract to be canceled and set aside but your committee would call the attention of the authorities of the District to the propriety of bringing their conduct in this matter before the grand jury and having these officers indicted under section 5501 of the revised laws of the United States.

That seems to be a regular report, signed by five respectable Representatives, about the truth of which I know nothing, but of which I should be very glad to hear whether it is true or not.

Mr. INGALLS. Nor, Mr. President, do I know anything about it.

Mr. BECK. But the Senator having spoken of the high character of these gentlemen, I thought it proper that I should call his attention to this language.

Mr. INGALLS. I repeat that so far as I know and believe the gentlemen named upon that board are of the highest personal respectability. Under the report of that committee, it is very strange if these facts existed, when the grand juries have been in session, and the courts have been open for the punishment of offenders, if allegations as grave as that could be properly sustained, that some citizen of this community was not found bold enough or just enough to have made a complaint and have the matter investigated. To my mind the fact that since those allegations were made these men have continued uninterruptedly to exercise those functions without question from any citizen of this District is a sufficient answer as to the falsity of the allegation.

But I was proceeding to say that the value of a board of health must depend upon its practical results in the community. It is a fact which cannot be denied that, under the management and control and administration of the present board of health, the sanitary condition of this city has been immeasurably improved. The city has been admirably policed; the offal and garbage have been constantly and economically removed; the death rate has been greatly reduced. All the citizens here alike have been protected, until the death rate has been reduced from zymotic or preventable causes far below that of any other large city in this Union. One single illustration of their efficiency occurred in the small-pox epidemic of 1872-'73, when the board was authorized by the Legislature to resort to the most heroic treatment for the suppression of that epidemic, when sixty thousand people were vaccinated free of charge, when they were authorized to isolate and detach infected cases, and when all clothes were burned or otherwise destroyed. Sixty-nine thousand dollars were expended, and in less than fifty days the entire disease was stamped out and eradicated, almost without the knowledge of the people; and yet, with the vast additional expense entailed by this single instance, the entire annual expenses of this board have averaged but a trifle above $50,000. During the past year they have been about $32,000. No allegation is made that the duties imposed upon this board have not been efficiently administered, and the funds properly and judiciously expended. Emergencies affecting the public health frequently arise where it is necessary that there should be immediate action, where it is essential that a board, having this subject specifically under its control, should have the authority to act immediately and efficiently and vigorously. This appears to me to be an additional reason, and one of great import and consequence, why this board should be continued, why it should not be abolished, and why, if it is abolished, it surely should not be turned over to the Army, to the Surgeon-General and his staff, they being subject to the rules and articles of war and under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Vermont that the board of health should be discontinued. The bill as it passed the House, which I hold in my hand, discontinues it. I assume of course that there was some reason for its discontinuance, or the House would not have taken the action it did. I read to the Senator from Kansas from a report made in 1876, less than two years ago, by a committee of the House of Representatives charging members of this board of health with grave and serious misdemeanors. I know nothing about the truth of those charges, but they come from highly respectable authority. The names of the five representative gentlemen who signed the report give it at least that authority, and it is no answer to me to say that the grand juries of this District have not pursued the investigation. I remember when Mr. Columbus Alexander of this city was sought to be incarcerated as a common felon by what was known as the safe-burglary conspiracy, a spawn of some of the Washington rings, a conspiracy that reflected much discredit upon high officials of this city and on the detective force of the United States, as was shown by proof that would have convicted any human being upon earth before any honest tribunal. Yet no man was punished under the régime that we have had here. To say that men are innocent because the grand juries of this district have not indicted them is no answer; that would be to condone offenses such as the false measurements of pavements and as to a thousand things that have been made known as true, beyond all peradventure, perhaps not as bad, but as well established as the safe-burglary conspiracy to which I have referred.

The board of health not only has by this bill the powers given to it which it now possesses but it has powers conferred upon it which conflict directly with the duties and powers of the commissioners of the District, and which cannot be exercised without confiscating without trial, legal proceedings, or appeal the property of a very large number of the poorest people here. Whatever may be the medical qualifications of the board of health, they certainly have not the qualifications necessary to determine when property shall be seized and sold and what shall be done with the possessory rights and titles that the people who now hold it, certainly not without hearing or trial of any sort.

I will read for example from page 17 the bill as reported from the committee, beginning at line 26:

The said board shall have power to require the draining and filling up or reducing to proper grade, as may be necessary, in their judgment, in a sanitary point of view, any lot or lots within said District; and when such necessity is found to have been occasioned by the act or neglect of the owner, the said draining, filling up, or reducing to proper grade may be done under the orders and by the direction of said board; and the expense of said draining, filling up, or reduction shall be certified to the commissioners of said District, who shall cause the same to be assessed upon the property on which said work has been done; and the amount so assessed shall be collected as other taxes are collected in the District of Columbia.

A board of five men, three of them doctors, are authorized to determine these matters without consulting the commissioners, without referring these questions to anybody, what in their opinion is necessary to be done to and with lots all over this city; whether the commissioners think it necessary or not, and against, if you please, the judgment of the commissioners as to the necessity of the work. From their idea in a sanitary point of view, and no matter what may have caused the present condition of the lot, they are authorized and empowered to require the people owning them to fill them up and put them in the condition that they may order to give them the proper grade, without consulting the engineer officer, although they may be ten or twenty feet below it now, and they may impose taxes upon the owners which would amount to confiscation if they fail to obey. The commissioners of the District might enter their protest, and might declare that it should not be done, that it was not necessary to be done, and yet this board of public health can overrule them and are made the absolute masters of all the property in the District that they do not think now complies with their ideas of what the health of this District requires. No such power ought to be given to any such body.

Mr. SARGENT. I call the attention of my friend from Kentucky also to the fact that they are not only to fill up holes where there may be pools where there may be sanitary reasons for it, but they are to reduce to a grade any lot that is above it. They can require tons of earth to be carted off at an enormous expense where there certainly could be no sanitary reasons for it. I should like also to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the power is to be given to this board to provide for admissions to all the hospitals and asylums, and so forth, for which we make appropriations. By statute we provide that the Army and Navy shall be admitted on certain conditions, that the Secretary of the Interior shall admit other persons; but all these officers are to be stripped of their powers and put into the hands of this board of public health.

Mr. BECK. The statement of the Senator from California only proves the wisdom of the motion of the Senator from Vermont in addition to what I was just now saying. I am not sure that they have the power to reduce lots down to a grade.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly not.

Mr. BECK. I am not going to argue that.

Mr. WITHERS. I will call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact that both he and the Senator from California are objecting to the details of the bill which confer powers upon this board; but the question now is whether we are to have a board of health at all or not. Suppose we decide that question, address our arguments to that point, and if the board is abolished it is not necessary to discuss these details at all. If, however, the board is to be retained, then we can go on and adjust the details of the bill and confer such powers upon them only as in the opinion of the Senate are wise and judicious.

Mr. BECK. I believe I have endeavored several times to raise points of order, in my ignorance of the rules of the Senate as to how far a Senator could wander off in discussions in this body and as to how narrowly he was confined to the exact point being considered. I remember a very earnest conversation that I thought was entirely foreign to anything before the Senate, which was carried on between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] and I was told by the President of the Senate that he could not tell what they were going to say, and therefore he could not interfere.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not raise any point against the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I am going to confine myself pretty closely to the subject. The power given by the bill and the idea entertained by this committee as to the authority to be conferred on this board are the very questions which I think enter into the discussion, because the House sent us a bill abolishing the board of public health. The House, I repeat, must have had some reasons for doing it. The Senate committee have seen fit to amend that bill, not only continuing the powers of the board of health, but extending them, and extending them very greatly beyond any powers they ever had before. The board may be useful for some purposes specified among the powers conferred on them. There are some things in the Senate amendments, I confess, that this board is very well qualified to act upon. A few lines preceding the part of the section that I have just read I find this provision:

The said board of health shall also be charged with the care of the sick poor of the said District, furnishing medicines and medical attendance for the same, and with the burial of deceased paupers.

As I understand, one of these gentlemen is a homeopathic physician, he comes with his belladonna and other pellets. Another believes in cundurango and God knows what else. The third I may suppose adheres to calomel and ipecac. If these three gentlemen are permitted to go together as a board among the poor of this District, furnish them with medicines and attend them jointly, we may have very many funerals but there will be very few sick poor after they are through with them. If they furnish them each with their own medicines I think they will dispose of them very effectually. But it is poor economy and worse philanthrophy to dispose of the poor creatures in that sort of style. I think General Barnes or some other well-qualified man selected by the commissioners would see that those people were provided for upon some system that would not be in conflict with all the others. There should be a single head to order and control, and there should be some unity of action when we are trying to relieve the sick instead of a medley of conflicting ideas. With this board as now constituted I think there can be no unity of action. I do not mean to reflect upon those gentlemen; they have their own ideas, but their ideas are very wide apart, and the conflict will be very dangerous to the patient indeed if they should together go into a sick-room. I should not like to have them waiting on a friend of mine, each having equal authority to prescribe.

But I was going on to speak, when Senators interrupted me, of the system of public improvements made under the supervision of the board of public works. If you will go any where to the southwest of the President's house, from the time you strike the street beyond the State Department up to the street where the Observatory stands you will see streets and avenues laid out at great expense, running to the river, elevated far above the natural grade of the lots. You will find that in high water those lots are flooded. They belong to, certainly they are occupied by, very poor people, who are absolutely unable to bring those lots up to grade. The bringing of them up to grade would cost far more than the value of the lots when so elevated. To give three doctors, for they constitute the majority of the board of health, who may have peculiar notions about what is sanitary and what is not sanitary, the power to require everybody who owns a lot that has been thrown below the grade, or, as the Senator from California says, thrown up above grade, to bring it up or down, as they may direct, even against the will of the commissioners, when soil cannot even be had perhaps, in many cases, to bring it up if it is ordered to be elevated, is a power that no body of physicians ought to have. It is a power absolutely in conflict with the power granted to the commissioners. It shows the wisdom of the House, and, as I said of the motion of the Senator from Vermont, if this is to be a uniform system and if the people of this District are to be governed by a uniform code of laws and if Congress intends to do anything really for their benefit, we should not put another board, no matter how distinguished, scientific, professional, or otherwise it may be, in conflict with the commissioners who are authorized to be appointed by this bill, but give the people a chance to hold on to their property and not to be at the mercy of the whims of anybody without appeal to the courts, as is now proposed.

I said in the beginning that it was perhaps a board so organized that it ought to have less to do with property, that it knew less of the practical details and of the management of property than any other board that could be selected. They may be very scientific men in their way, but they should be confined to their profession. The bill as it came from the House comes nearer to my idea of what is required to meet the wants of the people here than the committee's bill. I do not say anything against the mode of selection of the three commissioners, but I would select the engineer officer from the very highest ranks of the Engineer Corps, and the House seemed to desire that to be done. I would have him to be a man, because his duties are very great and important, who has the experience and the ability necessary for the work; one who would command the confidence of the people. I do not know whom the President would appoint. I know several of the older members of the corps who would help to govern this city with honesty, integrity, and ability, such a man as we have now as a superintendent of public buildings and grounds, for example, or such a man as we had before us the other day in the Transportation Committee, although I never saw him before, General Wright, who would take hold of the work, with power and ability to bring order out of chaos in this District. The President may get such a man of the rank of captain or lieutenant. I do not know, but I doubt it.

I am rather opposed to any voting for officers in the present condition of the District while we are paying half the expenses; but I would not object much to a council selected by different wards, so that there would be some men of one side of politics sent from one ward and men of another side sent from another ward; some men who are Catholics and some who are Protestants, some of all sorts of religious views and some without religion, who would advise the commissioners and the committees of Congress about the management of affairs. I would not have a body of men appointed by the President and a delegate elected of the same politics, with the same ideas, charged, as they would be, with being in all sorts of rings. Some, I think, ought to be on one side of politics and others on another. Any other condition would make constant discord. I would give a general hearing to all the people of all classes, of all shades of politics, instead of having a board of health organized independently, conflicting with, cramping, impairing, and injuring the action of the commissioners.

It is known to all of us that grave charges have been made in the last six or eight years relative to all sorts of extravagance in the affairs of this District. I said yesterday that we had given $3,155,417 in 1873, within sixty days, to the first board of public works to aid in making improvements, and the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who likes sharp contrasts, asked me if I knew that we had only given them $6,000,000 since the District was organized, while the District had paid $35,000,000. I did not know it, but I knew that in those three items within sixty days we gave them $3,155,417. I like sharp contrasts, too, and therefore I desire to make a statement now, as I had forgotten it yesterday although I had the finance report before me. Three million one hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars is rather a large sum of money. It only required $2,551,000 in 1796 and $2,883,000 in 1797, the two first years of the administration of John Adams, to pay all the ordinary expenses of this Government including, War, Navy, Indians, pensions, miscellaneous, legislative, executive, and judicial departments. We gave to this city or its managers more money for our share of making streets and pavements in the city of Washington than the average annual expenses of this Government from the day of General Washington's inauguration up to and including the second year of the administration of John Adams. Three million dollars is a pretty large sum of money.

Mr. INGALLS. Will I disturb the Senator if I interject another remark?

Mr. BECK. Not a bit. I have just said that I like sharp contrasts.

Mr. INGALLS. The United States of America have not expended as much money here as they received from the sale of lots here. The Government of the United States is to-day money in pocket from the sales of property in this District and in this city.

Mr. BECK. I did not know that either, but as something has been said about the value of our property, I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that I have consented to the provision requiring Congress to appropriate money to pay one-half of the expenses, and that surely is liberal. It is said the streets and avenues and parks of this city we own. They are owned for the benefit of the people who live here, and the property they own facing those grand parks is more valuable than any other property, and we keep it up and pay for it for their benefit. As I said, I agree to paying pretty liberally to keep up everything connected with the city, but I do want the power and responsibility confined to the commissioners, however selected, and I want no extraneous board, either of health or anything else, to come in and interfere with their powers. I hope the President will succeed in selecting the very best men he can find, regardless of their politics. May be he can find them without politics altogether, so that they can come to this end or to the other end of the Capitol and have justice done to the city, and see that no more combinations are formed such as it is charged have been going on for the last five or six years. I do not mean by that to reflect on the man who was at the head of this great city for many years. I have heard all sorts of things said about Mr. Shepherd. I know nothing personally as to the truth of them, but I know from what little I have seen and know of him, and the work he has done, that he is a very able man, and the works that have been laid out in this city, if carried ont to perfection, will make it the most beautiful city in the world. Whether the money was applied rightfully or wrongfully, or whether he had knowledge of it or not, when I compare the city as it was ten years ago, when I first came to Congress, with what it is now, I am bound to say I would not, with my limited knowledge of such things, undertake to do the work for twice the money that has been either spent upon it or squandered upon it. All these things I have to admit, but I do not want boards injected into this bill with powers that will be either oppressive to the people or that conflict with the rights, duties, and obligations of the commissioners who are now to be appointed.

Mr. WINDOM. I dislike exceedingly to disagree with the Senator from Vermont, who is so generally right upon all questions of this character, but in this case I am compelled to follow the advice of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The health of a city is a subject with which we should deal very carefully and cautiously. If we take into account the experience of this city with the present board and the health organization that preceded it, I think, as has been so well stated by the Senator from Kansas, we shall find sufficient reasons for its continuance.

The Senator from Kentucky who has just taken his seat has traveled over a pretty wide field in his attempts to sustain the motion made by the Senator from Vermont. He is opposed to the continuance of this board, in the first place, because he does not like the character of the men; they have been charged with certain offenses by some committee or other. To this I reply that if the personnel of the board is not right change it, but that certainly is no argument why the organization itself should be abolished. I do not believe the statements made in the report quoted by the Senator from Kentucky. I believe the board is constituted of high-toned, honorable gentlemen, and I have seen no evidence of wrong-doing on their part. But the character of the board has nothing to do with the question one way or the other. If the personnel be not right, I repeat, change it. But do not jeopardize the health of the city because you do not like the men who constitute the existing board.

The second ground of opposition stated by the Senator from Kentucky is that certain provisions of this bill contain powers which are dangerous, and consequently that the board itself ought to be abolished. The logic of that proposition the Senate will appreciate. The powers proposed to be granted by the bill do not touch the question whether this board is of itself desirable and whether it has accomplished results which justify us in continuing it under proper restrictions. The committee may have clothed it with powers that are too broad. If that be so, let us modify the bill and restrict these powers.

The third argument by which the Senator from Kentucky sustains his position is that one member of this board is a homeopathic physician and another an allopathic physician, and consequently their medicines will not agree very well with the patient; therefore this board should be abolished.

The other and fourth argument made by the Senator from Kentucky is that Mr. Shepherd and the members of the board of public works were guilty of great extravagance when they digged this city out of the mud and made it what it now is; therefore the board of health should be abolished. I believe that that sums up the entire argument of the Senator from Kentucky, and it is the best argument I have yet heard why this board should be abolished.

Mr. President, I have never known the question brought before the Senate with reference to appropriations for the board of health that this same argument or one similar to it has not been made. There seems to be in the minds of some Senators a prejudice against this organization, as I know there is on the part of some of the citizens of the District. Whether that prejudice reaches the minds of honorable Senators through the medium of these citizens, I do not know. It is certain that the board of health in dealing with nuisances in this city, in the execution of the powers which have hitherto been conferred upon them, have been compelled to offend a great many people. Now I want to read a little extract showing what this board has accomplished. I read from the report for 1876, and I do so because it so graphically states the exact condition of things before this board was organized.

During these seventy-three years of transition and development—

That is, from the time the District of Columbia was set apart until 1871, when this board was organized—the city has passed through eighteen governmental administrations, and probably forty municipal; yet in 1871 this board of health found a flagrant nuisance known as the Washington Canal, which, in the emphatic words of Professor Henry, was "an open cess-pool, a fruitful source of discomfort and disease, receiving the sewage direct in its midst, and inconsistent with the intelligence of the age." This canal, traversing the city from Rock Creek to the Eastern Branch, passing within a few hundred yards of the White House, the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, through the Agricultural, Smithsonian, and Botanical gardens to the very doors of the Capitol itself, its shores abounding in malarial poison, and the people abandoning its neighborhood as the Romans flee from the night-mantle of death of the Campagna.

There are any number of "old residents" in this city who do not feel at home because they cannot smell that old canal, and they are unhappy, and they go to the Senator from Kentucky and tell him that one member of this board of health is an allopathic physician, and another a homeopathic physician, and therefore the board should be abolished, when after all it is only the absence of the bad odor from the old canal that disturbs them.

It moreover found hundreds of lots below grade, covered with stagnant water, endangering the lives and health of the residents of the neighborhood; hundreds of alleys, receptacles of house offal, giving rise to dangerous effluvia that found its way into the windows of inhabited dwellings; hundreds of hovels, the abode of the poor, with leaky roofs, damp walls, no privy, or water supply, and unfit for human habitation; hills of ashes and filth in open lots, the accumulation of many years; thirty-thousand privy-boxes, many in bad condition or overflowing, and subject to an occasional emptying by a most barbarous and crude system, the operation of which awoke our citizens from their peaceful slumbers to shut out the stench from their sleeping-rooms—

And some of them are not happy because they are not now awakened by the same causes—

The scavenger coming in the dead of night like a thief, afraid to be observed; house offal and garbage accumulated in large quantities in yards, subject to a vicious system of removal that cost the city $25,000 per annum; slaughter-houses strewn among our populated districts that claimed as a raison d' être the time they had been allowed to remain and carry on their filthy work in our midst; no quarantine laws or regulations to prevent the incursion and spread of infectious and contagious diseases; no bureau of vital statistics to record births, deaths, and marriages, and to prevent crime; no control over cemetery-superintendents or undertakers, so that persons were buried with or without a physician's certificate, whether death had occurred from poison or violence, small-pox, yellow fever, or cholera—the dead were put away under the sod and no questions asked, unless glaring and unmistakable evidence of foul play existed; no inspection of food, so that meats from blow to decomposed were sold in open market unobserved; no inspection of marine products, so that thousands of bushels of oysters, clams, and other fish unfit for human food found their way from the shambles of the vender to the consumer's table; domestic animals running at large, imperiling life and destroying ornamentation; thousands of hog and cow pens, the inhabitants of which found comfort and food in our alleys, streets, and parks; and innumerable other nuisances were discovered here, tolerated by the apathy of the citizens or their unsanitary authorities.

Mr. President, this is a picture of old Washington as it existed a few years ago and as it existed very nearly up to the time this board of health was organized. The wonderful change we now see is largely due to the exertions of the very organization which you seek to-day to destroy. What has it done? Has it been expensive? Has it been extravagant? Look for a moment at what this service cost before the organization of this board. I hold in my hand a statement that the expenses of the old organization were $62,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was that organization?

Mr. SARGENT. What was the date of that organization?

Mr. WINDOM. The old sanitary system of this District prior to the organization of the present board of health was composed of ten policemen, called the sanitary police, under the charge of a lieutenant. The expense of sustaining this force was $14,500 per annum. These men were not selected with a view to their scientific acquirements, nor were they instructed or directed by experienced sanitarians. A secretary was employed at a salary of $1,000 per annum; the expense of the removal of dead animals was $1,000 per year. Medicines and medical attendance for the poor cost the District an average of $22,000 per year. Under the administration of the present board of health this service has been performed in a more satisfactory manner at an expense not exceeding $6,500 per annum.

Now I will read the Senator from this report of the board of health more fully:

Sanitary squad of police, composed of ten policemen and a lieutenant, ignorant of sanitary laws and the science of hygiene, and under no advisory sanitary counsel	$13,500
Office and salary per annum of a secretary to a board of health composed of many members, without money or authority whatsoever	1,000
Medical attendance and medicines for the poor, 1871, 1872, and 1873, average per annum	22,000
Removal of garbage, 1872 and 1873, average	25,000
Removal of dead animals	1,000
Total	62,500

That is what it cost; and now what was the service rendered. I have named it. I read further what this report sets forth was the condition under the old régime:

No inspection of food;
No inspection of marine products;
No registration of vital statistics.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by "marine products?"

Mr. WINDOM. I mean fish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not that food?

Mr. THURMAN. What were the years in which the annual expense of the removal of garbage, &c., was $25,000.

Mr. WINDOM. "Removal of garbage 1872 and 1873, average, $25,000."

Mr. THURMAN. Was not this very board in function then?

Mr. WINDOM. I think it was not in organization at that time.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not mean that it was composed of the same persons, but of pretty nearly the same persons. They were created, I think, by the act of the 21st of February, 1871, so that they were in function at the time that those expenses were incurred.

Mr. WINDOM. It is very evident that it was under a different arrangement, because it was an entirely different organization.

Mr. SARGENT. The difference was caused by our cutting down the means to be placed at their disposal. We compelled them to be more economical.

Mr. INGALLS. The present board was organized in April, 1871.

Mr. WINDOM. I quote from the board itself, showing what took place in those years.

Mr. SARGENT. Showing their good operations when we gave them what money they wanted to spend.

Mr. WINDOM. Whatever may be the facts with reference to that, I want to say that so far as the present organization of this board is concerned and its expenditures, it not only challenges comparison with any other health organization in the world in point of success in maintaining the health of cities but in point of economy also.

Mr. BAYARD. May I state to the Senator just one fact? In 1874 when this question came before the Senate the salaries of the board of health then aggregated about $35,000. I do not know what their expenses were, but the salaries were $35,000. That was for a community of about one hundred thousand people. I wrote home to the city where I was born and live now, to ascertain the expense of the board of health of a town which would compare in every respect so far as sanitary arrangement and sanitary condition with Washington, a town of forty-five thousand people, Wilmington, Delaware. I ascertained what had been the expenses of the board of health of that city. They were less than $900 in the year; and I say that the health of the town, the convenience of the citizens, the removal of deleterious substances and objects, is quite efficient and perfectly satisfactory to those people.

Mr. WINDOM. I presume that my friend from Delaware represents a peculiarly healthy city; but if he will take the other cities of the country (and I have a report here of their expenditures) he will find that the expenses of the health organization are far less than any of them. I read, if the Senator will allow me to finish that point, from the same report of the board of health for 1876:

Comparative expenses of boards of health—Memorandum compiled from reports of other health boards.

Philadelphia, expenses for 1874, $337,809.44; population, 750,000; expenses per capita, 45½ cents.

Boston, year ending April 30, 1875, $469,031.91; population, 342,000; expenses per capita, $1.37.

Baltimore, year ending October 31, 1875, $268,855.47; population, 350,000; expenses per capita, 76½ cents.

New York City, year ending 1873, salary account alone, $215,277.04.

Now it is stated by the Senator from Kansas, who I have no doubt has carefully examined this subject, that the expenses are less than $50,000 for the board of health.

Mr. INGALLS. Between thirty-two and thirty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. BAYARD. And their salaries?

Mr. INGALLS. It includes their expenses.

Mr. WINDOM. So that the expenses of this District are even much less per capita under this board of health than even under that of Philadelphia, with a very much larger population. The expenses per capita, where you have a board of health at all, would naturally increase with the increased population of the city; but here we have a city of only one hundred and sixty thousand with a much less per capita expenditure under this board than in Philadelphia with over seven hundred and fifty thousand; and we have a city which may safely challenge comparison with any of them in the efficiency and success of its sanitary regulations.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he is in error about the cost of administering the health department of this city. I have before me now the estimates for the next year and the estimates made by the present board of health. They are as follows:

For general sanitary inspection; to prevent the sale of unwholesome food; to prevent domestic animals from running at large; to secure a full and correct record of vital statistics; for the transportation of offals; to prevent the introduction and spread of infectious and contagious diseases, and for miscellaneous and contingent expenses, $43,055, one-half of which sum, $21,527.50, is required from the funds of the District.

In addition to this, a further sum of $15,000, more or less, will be required for the garbage service, and $1,000 for burial of paupers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have not got it all into that even.

Mr. SARGENT. There is nothing about salaries.

Mr. MERRIMON. Nothing about salaries.

Mr. WINDOM. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. MERRIMON. I read from the report of the board of health.

Mr. WINDOM. Estimating what is necessary for the coming year?

Mr. MERRIMON. For the next year.

Mr. WINDOM. But they did not have anything like that sum last year.

Mr. INGALLS. Thirty-two thousand nine hundred and two dollars and fifty cents was the amount, including that appropriated by Congress and what was paid also from the funds of the District, one-half from each source, and it covered the entire expenses, including salaries, sanitary inspection, condemnation of products, and removal of offal, garbage, and dead animals.

Mr. WINDOM. That was about twenty cents per capita, as against forty-five and a half cents in Philadelphia, which as all have seen has the cheapest health department of any of the large cities. Now, unless some better reason can be given than any I have heard advanced, I earnestly hope the Senate will not jeopardize the health of the city by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and turning this service over to an Army officer who, however worthy and competent, (and I have the utmost respect for General Barnes,) has neither the organization at command, nor the time to perform the duties of the board of health. If it were a mere matter of dollars and cents, we could afford to experiment, but we dare not do so where the lives and health of the people are concerned.

Mr. EATON. I desire to suggest to my friend from Minnesota that if he is right with regard to the amount per capita then even the estimated expenditure makes it very much less per capita than it is in any of the cities he has named.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly; the estimated expenditure is about $60,000, which would be less than forty cents per capita.

Mr. MERRIMON. The health of this city, Mr. President, is a subject, in my judgment, of first-rate importance, and I would regret exceedingly to do anything in the exercise of my office here calculated in any measure to impair the health of the city. This subject has been one of interest to me during the consideration of this bill, and I wish I were able to suggest a remedy for what I conceive to be a very grave evil. I think this board of health is not properly constituted. I think it is a sort of practical despotism set up here by Congress in the District of Columbia. It is invested with powers that no body in a free country like this ought to be allowed to exercise; and, in addition to that, it is extravagant beyond what is reasonable. I doubt exceedingly whether that board, if its authority were questioned, could exercise the powers conferred upon it. I was astonished when I came to examine the subject to see that it was invested in many respects with absolute power over the property of the citizens of the District of Columbia. This bill provides:

The said board shall have power to define, declare, and cause to be removed or abated nuisances injurious to health.

There is no judicial proceeding invoked. These five gentlemen, and for my purpose I do not care whether they are good men or otherwise, go to a house in this city; they examine it, and in their judgment, without any hearing on the part of the person who owns the property, they order the house to be pulled down, and it must be pulled down by the police. Their report, which I have before me, shows that they condemned last year about one hundred and fifty houses, which they called hovels, and the owners of that property had no hearing in court at all. The property was virtually destroyed at their will, under their direction, without any limitation upon the power of these five men.

Then look at the provision to which the Senator from Kentucky called attention a moment ago:

The said board shall have power to require the draining and filling up or reducing to proper grade, as may be necessary, in their judgment, in a sanitary point of view, any lot or lots within said District.

I remember that a case was brought to the attention of the committee, at all events it was brought to my attention, where they directed the owner of a lot to fill it up, and the expense of filling it up was more than the lot was worth.

Mr. THURMAN. After it was filled up?

Mr. MERRIMON. More than the lot was worth after it was filled up. Not only is the owner required under their direction to fill up a lot that they deem injurious to health, but he is required to do it as they direct. He has no option. He is not heard before any court. He is not heard to make opposition to their orders. They are absolute. I remember that I brought to the attention of the board of health when they were before the committee the subject of these high powers, and suggested that the board of health ought to be subject to the commissioners, so that there would be but one head to the government of the District of Columbia. They hooted at the idea, and they said if they were deprived of these high powers their efficiency would be absolutely destroyed; that no board of health could perform its functions properly unless it was vested with these absolute powers. I was not satisfied for those reasons with this part of the bill, and reserved my right to oppose it. I confess, however, and I regret it is so, that I am not able to suggest an adequate remedy for what I regard, as I said in the outset, as an evil. I was quite impressed with the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that the Surgeon-General might take charge of the health of this city, and the more I think of it since he made the suggestion the more I am impressed with the practicability of his suggestion. This District is under the direction and control of the Government of the United States. The Surgeon-General's office is not overburdened with services essential to the comfort and safety of the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. The pension claims are eighteen months behind in the Surgeon-General's Office.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not know that the Surgeon-General had charge of pension claims.

Mr. INGALLS. He has charge of the records on which the pensions are granted, and the pensions are eighteen months behind in his office.

Mr. MERRIMON. He has a class of clerks who attend to that work. I understand that there are assistant surgeons and subordinates who could easily discharge these duties and who are very learned men and well adapted to this service. If that is true, I am very sure, looking at it, I confess, rather hastily, that that is the best solution of this difficulty which I have seen. I am satisfied that the powers conferred upon this board in a country like this are monstrous. The idea that this board of health can go to my house and declare that it is a nuisance, and that I shall not be heard, that I shall have no opportunity to go into the courts and contest their judgment, is monstrous and shocking to me.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question on that point?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will.

Mr. WINDOM. For the sake of argument, suppose the Senator's house to be an actual nuisance and the laws are unchanged and these powers are conferred on the Surgeon-General, would he not be compelled to abate the nuisance, or else the nuisance would remain and would poison the air of the city and breed disease and death?

Mr. MERRIMON. My answer to that is this: that in providing in the first place for the ascertainment of nuisances, and then for the abatement of nuisances, the citizen who is affected thereby ought to have some opportunity by a provision of law to be heard.

Mr. WINDOM. But does the Senator understand that that is an argument in favor of abolishing the board, or is it only an argument against the details of the section?

Mr. MERRIMON. I am making an argument against this provision of the bill, not on one point but on various points.

Mr. WINDOM. It would be good on that point.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to call his attention to an obsolete document called the Constitution of the United States, article 5 of the amendments, in these words:

No person shall be * * deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is the subject that was pestering me. I remembered that provision of the Constitution. It is an instrument that I love very much. When I found that this high power was conferred upon this board, I thought about the Constitution, and I was affected adversely to the board.

Then there is another subject in connection with this clause of the bill that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate. This board are charged with the administration, in a large measure, of the charities of this District. It is important that Congress shall take cognizance of that subject and act wisely upon it. The subject of charities in the District is becoming one of very great moment to the Government of the United States, and indirectly to the people of the United States. Nearly 6 per cent. of those who enjoy the benefits of the public charities do not live in the city of Washington at all; they are paupers, tramps, vagabonds, from Virginia and Maryland and every other State in the Union, who come hurrying into Washington, and as soon as they come here they are entitled to the benefits of these charities.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to have the Senator point out the authority for the board of health having anything to do with charities. I was not aware that they had anything to do with charities in this District.

Mr. MERRIMON. I thought I saw a provision here that they should have the direction of charities. By this tenth section they are—

To make rules and regulations for all hospitals used exclusively for the isolation and treatment of persons afflicted with infectious or contagious diseases; to provide for admission to hospitals, asylums, alms-houses, and infirmaries.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a summary on this subject, which shows how interesting it is:

WASHINGTON, November 10, 1877.

GEORGE W. RIGGS, Esq., Chairman, &c.:

DEAR SIR: I regret that the committee on charities are able to present but a partial report.

This is a subcommittee of the committee of one hundred of the citizens of this District.

You desired a reliable statement, showing what proportion of beneficiaries from funds appropriated by Congress for charitable and benevolent purposes are resident of the District and what are non-resident.

The report of the National Soldiers and Sailors' Orphan Home shows 24 beneficiaries: resident of the District, 15; non-resident, 9.

The Providence Hospital, from November 1, 1876, to November 1, 1877, treated 930 patients: resident of the District, 279; non-resident, 651.

The Children's Hospital, according to their report of 1877, had 1,331 patients: resident of the District, 586; non-resident, 745.

Freedman's Hospital, total inmates, 277: resident, 89; non-resident, 188.

Home for Aged Women and Children, inmates, 115: resident, 25; non-resident, 90.

The Women's Christian Association, which is supported wholly by private contributions, during the year ending December 31, 1876, had 146 inmates: of these, 47 were from the District; the others came from twelve different States of the Union.

From these figures, it appears that 58 per cent. of those receiving aid from Congress are non-resident.

Absence of one of our committee from the city prevents a report from the organizations not included in the above.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WM. STICKNEY,
Chairman Committee on Charities.

If Congress shall go on making appropriations every year and without making any definite regulations touching the admission of persons to the benefit of these charities, it will not be long until thousands and tens of thousands will crowd here in order to get the benefit of them.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator if one-half the cost of maintaining those non-residents is not to be borne by the local inhabitants.

Mr. MERRIMON. I believe that the Senator is correct in that suggestion.

I do not know where we get the power to become general almoners for the people of the United States. It is not the business of this Government to take care of the poor; it is the business of the several State governments; and stricter regulations ought to be provided to prevent paupers and tramps and vagabonds from crowding into this city and over-running it. If this evil is tolerated, if it is allowed for a long while to prevail, the time will come when the Government itself will be in danger from such a city as will surround this Capitol.

There is another subject that is interesting. I was going to make the remark I shall make now under another head, but I may as well do it now, and not trouble the Senate hereafter about it. I was astonished to find that citizenship of the District of Columbia has never been defined by law. I do not suppose there is a lawyer in the District of Columbia to-day who can tell technically who is a citizen of the District. Everybody who comes into the District of Columbia is a citizen in some sense. How far he is entitled to the benefits of what pertains properly to the city government, I do not suppose anybody can tell. I propose a remedy for this evil—for it seems to me that citizenship ought to be defined—by at the proper time offering this amendment:

All persons who now are or may hereafter reside permanently in the District of Columbia and have no other place of fixed abode, and none others, shall be deemed citizens thereof.

If that should be held to be citizenship, a large portion of this population will not be here to claim the benefits of such appropriations as Congress ought naturally and justly to make for the benefit of this city.

Mr. THURMAN. The word "persons" there should be changed to "citizens of the United States."

Mr. MERRIMON. That is a very proper suggestion. But there is another subject in connection with this, and bearing upon it directly, to which I will advert. The public-school system of this District is one of the best in the Union. I doubt if there is a public-school system in any of the States superior to it; none, perhaps, unless we may except the school system of Connecticut. There are in the District thirty thousand children. Two-fifths of the children who attend the public schools are not the children of citizens, of persons who can be called citizens of the District of Columbia at all, and they are not tax-payers; they do not pay a dollar into the treasury of the District for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the schools. Any one who will look at the school statistics will see that the numbers are increasing every year unnaturally. It is a fact that a number of citizens in my town may to-day lease a house in this city, send their children here, put a matron in charge of them, and educate their children free of charge, at the expense of the people of the District of Columbia: or, as provided by this bill, one-half would be paid by the people of the District, and the other half by the Government. Not only might that be done in the case I have mentioned, but it might be done by persons anywhere in the Union. This evil is increasing every year. I maintain that Congress ought to put an end to it, and that the man who is not a citizen of the District of Columbia ought not to be allowed to send his children to the public schools here free of charge. To head off that evil I have prepared this amendment:

Only the children of citizens of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to attend the public schools of the same free of charge; but persons within the age prescribed for pupils attending such schools may attend the same, first paying reasonable tuition fees, to be fixed by the trustees of the public schools.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What constitutes citizenship in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MERRIMON. I have just undertaken to define it by law. I understand that twenty-five or thirty members of Congress send their children to school in this city now. What right have they to send their children to school here? The Government is paying each of them $5,000 a year for his services, and yet such a person is to have the benefit of educating his children here. He pays no taxes here, not a dollar; and upon what reasonable ground can he be allowed to send his children to the public schools here?

Again, all the employés of the Government here, the Army officers and the Navy officers, who wish to do so, send their children to the public schools and educate them free; and yet we know that the Government pays these officers and employés and pays them promptly. By what right, by what authority do they send their children to the public schools here free of charge? Let no one suppose that I am hostile to popular education. I do not believe that popular education has a warmer friend in this country than myself; but I wish to see those pay for this popular education who ought to do so.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What is the condition upon which a child is admitted to a public school in North Carolina? How long must a person reside in North Carolina before he can send his child to school there?

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not recollect the details of the provision.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But must he pay any tax at all? From my knowledge of the public-school system in the States of the South, there is no condition imposed, and the inhabitant of any State, no matter what time he resides within its territorial jurisdiction, may send his child to the common school there. I do not know how it is in other States of the Union.

Mr. PADDOCK. In other States it is the same.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there any State in which that is not so?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. MERRIMON. That may be all very proper for the States; I do not know that I should want to abridge the provisions of the law in the several States one jot; but where does Congress get the authority to provide public schools in this city to be supported by the munificence of the Government and by the taxes paid by the people of the District of Columbia, to educate all the children who come in here from all the States? Even if such a power existed, is it not pefectly manifest that it cannot operate perfectly and well, if carried on for a long time?

My purpose was simply to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate. It is a very interesting subject, and it is a very important one. The expenses of the public schools are increasing tremendously every year. They want half a million dollars in the public schools. They want $400,000 now to build new school-houses. There are six thousand children in this District now attending school who do not attend school in any regular school-house at all. Many of them are being educated in shanties, and the number is increasing every year, as I said a moment ago, unnaturally. These immense sums will have to be provided for, and in every year in an enlarged measure. I maintain that Congress ought to pay serious attention to this subject, and we ought to provide by law what class of people shall be entitled to the benefit of public charities, and as well what class of children shall be admitted free into the public schools. I maintain that Virginia, and Maryland, and West Virginia, and North Carolina have no right to send their poor, to send that class of their people that are unable to contribute to support themselves by their labor, into the District of Columbia to the end that the people here and the people of the United States shall support them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I cannot let things go by, seeing that I made the motion, without saying a word or two about this business.

The Senator from Kansas says, if I understand him, that there is a certain inconsistency in the argument I have made in support of my motion; that is that I wish to transfer these powers to the Surgeon-General and that is just as invidious to the old other boards as it is to leave this as it stands. I do not care to make any comment upon that, because I fail to see the connection between the two ideas.

The point I undertook to make upon that was that here were various other boards in this District equally important to the welfare of the community and whose conduct had never been the subject of criticism or suspicion, that this bill provides for the abolishment of, and it retains only as a distinct and independent—and I beg Senators to mark the word "independent"—organization this board of health. They are entirely independent of the governing power in this District, the commissioners. The care of the schools, of the police, of everything else that enters into the welfare of the community and the safety and comfort of the persons who are obliged to be here, is confided to this single executive authority; but in this particular single excepted instance, the board of health, (whose expenditures in previous years until Congress reduced the appropriation so that there could not be such expenditures were enormous,) is to be preserved.

Now, upon what principle can that be maintained? In all the communities in New England that I know anything about, in some cities—I will not say all cities, but some cities—the governing authority, the selectmen of the town as they are called in New England, the supervisors of parishes and townships as they may be called in other sections of the country, as the responsible executive authorities of the community in which they are, are charged with the duties of preserving and protecting the health of the inhabitants. And yet here it is proposed, in spite of all this scheme of bringing the executive duty of governing this District and taking care of its welfare under one responsible head, to say in respect of this board that it shall be an independent and irresponsible head in the sense of its relations to the rest of the powers to be exercised in this District. I submit, Mr. President, with considerable confidence, that that is entirely illogical; it cannot be maintained; there is no reason for it at all.

In the next place, I repeat what I stated before, that if economy is as it ought to be, one of the objects of this new legislation, there can be a great saving whether you put the execution of this duty into the charge of the commissioners, or whether you put it, as I think it ought to be for economy, into the charge of the Surgeon-General, not as an independent authority but merely as a functionary to carry out existing laws and regulations, whose accounts and expenditures are to be audited in the same way that others are, going through the approval of the commissioners and the Auditors of the Treasury, &c. If you do that, as I think ought to be done, or if instead of that you intrust it with the commissioners, you will make a saving as I believe from some study and examination of the subject, of a great many thousands of dollars in a year.

All this, of course, has no relation at all to the question as to whether the present board of health has done its duties well or ill, any more than the question in relation to these other boards is affected by what they have done well or ill.

But now, to go a little further, this board of health has reported, as read by the Senator from Minnesota, a comparison of its expenses with what they were before in this way:

> Let us compare the expenses for sanitary work during the old inefficient régime with the present successful one.

Of course that is very modest; but I will not remark upon that.

Sanitary squad of police, composed of ten policemen and a lieutenant, ignorant of sanitary laws and the science of hygiene, and under no advisory sanitary counsel	$13,500
Office and salary per annum of a secretary to a board of health composed of many members, without money or authority whatsoever	1,000
Medical attendance and medicines for the poor, 1871, 1872, and 1873, average per annum	22,000

Why they did not state each year might be interesting to inquire if we had the time.

Removal of garbage, 1872 and 1873 average	25,000
Removal of dead animals	1,000
Total	62,500

No inspection of food;
No inspection of marine products;
No registration of vital statistics, &c.

Now, what is the fact, Mr. President? In the year 1871 when the government of the District of Columbia which preceded the present commissioners was established, this board of health was established; and yet in order to show Congress how preferable their operations were to those of somebody else, they make up a table which includes for two or three years a part of their own operations with previous expenses in order to show how extravagant they were! That is not a very fair way of stating things.

It has been said by my friend from Minnesota that they have reduced these expenses enormously even since they began themselves. The expenses have been reduced, but they did not reduce them. The thing had got so bad, as I well remember and as other Senators who were here will remember, that after discussion in the appropriation bills their estimates of expenditures, when compared with what had been made before, were reduced by one-half or perhaps more—I have not looked at the exact figures, and therefore I cannot state precisely—and inasmuch as they were obliged thereby to limit their expenditures by act of Congress they did it, and then they come to you in 1876 and 1877 and say "Behold how economical we have been; how we have reduced your expenses!" when until they were reduced by the strong hand of the law, they were not reduced at all, and whatever merit there is is in Congress in refusing to appropriate money to be thus expended, instead of in any action of this board.

The personnel of the board is a matter of no account here; the statements that are made on the streets and in these reports to Congress and in the resolution of the House of Representatives, which the Senator from Kentucky did not read, upon the report that he read, unanimously adopted without a division, sending the evidence and the report of the committee to the law officers of this District and requesting them to take the proper steps to bring the matter to an investigation—notwithstanding all that, the real question is what is the true policy for the future? You have here a municipal corporation that requires to have its health attended to. Is there any more reason for having an independent and separate tribunal or executive department for that than there is for any of the other various important interests of this District? There is not any more; and, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. ARMSTRONG] suggests, it is doubtful whether there is so much.

In all of the New England towns I think I am safe in saying—perhaps I am mistaken, but certainly in the towns of the State from which I come—the executive authorities of the town or city are charged with the duty of protecting the health of its inhabitants, and according to the nature of the case they, responsible to their own constituents, either enlarge or diminish the expenditures through the proper agencies. Now if you turn over this independent tribunal, this independent paramount executive authority, which as has been stated comes in conflict in many points with the other powers that you have conferred upon the commissioners, either to the commissioners themselves or to the Surgeon-General of the United States Army, merely executing, subject to their approval, the functions of the health office, then in my judgment you will have made a great improvement, and in my clear opinion you will have saved to the Treasury of the United States that has to pay one-half of the expenses and to the tax-payers of this District who are to pay the other half, a great many thousand dollars in a year.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, when I was on my feet before, the question was asked me by the Senator from Vermont as to what the former sanitary service in this city was. Without any time to examine the question, I read an extract from a report of the board of health made in 1876, without fully understanding it, and the Senator from Vermont has since quoted from it arguing that the board of health had been guilty of misleading the Senate in making the comparison between the two items found on pages 12 and 13 of the report. There is no comparison in this report of the sums total of these two statements, the one which purports to be the statement of the old, inefficient régime of $62,500, and the other under the present régime, or the one that was in existence at that time, of $65,400; but the items are compared.

In the first place under the old régime, as stated here, there was a "sanitary squad of police, composed of ten policemen and a lieutenant, ignorant of sanitary laws and the science of hygiene, and under no advisory sanitary counsel," at an expense of "$13,500." That expense has been entirely dispensed with, I believe superseded by the other organization. Then, again—

> Medical attendance for the poor 1871, 1872, and 1873, average per annum $22,000.
> Removal of garbage 1872 and 1873, average $25,000.

This has been criticised as being improperly stated because these items of expense were incurred since the present board came into existence. That is true; but they were not incurred, as I am informed, by this board of health. Up to and until after the year 1873 these expenditures were made under the city government and the board of public works and not by the board of health; so that the comparison is, after all, a fair one. The expense of medical attendance for the years named, averaging $22,000, is compared on the following page with the "care of the sick, poor, and medicines, $8,000," showing that the present board saved some $14,000 on that item, as I now understand it. The removal of garbage 1872 and 1873 averaged $25,000, and as shown on the following page $15,000, showing a total of $10,000 saved on that item.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me just call the attention of my friend, if he will pardon my interruption, to his own comparison.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 12 the salaries provided for are put at $13,500 only. Now will he look to the next page and foot them up there:

> Board of health as at present constituted, composed of five members—three physicians, one lawyer, one merchant:

Salary of each, per annum, $2,000	$10,000
1 health officer	2,500
1 medical sanitary inspector	1,500
1 chief clerk	1,800
That is $15,800.
5 sanitary inspectors, at $1,200 each	6,000
3 food inspectors, at $1,200 each	3,600
1 pound master	1,200
Making $26,600.
4 clerks at $1,200 each, (health office and registration service)	4,800
Messenger and janitor service	900

A total of $32,300 salaries standing on their own tables, expended by them for salaries or paid to them for salaries against $14,500 before.

Mr. WINDOM. Thirteen thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, if you put in $1,000 for the secretary, it is $14,500. This was in the report of 1876.

Mr. WINDOM. There is no attempt to compare the salaries in the two tables at all.

Mr. INGALLS. I have the list of salaries for the present year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am talking about the thing on which my friend from Minnesota is pressing the attention of the Senate, the report of this board as to what they said they had done, and they have doubled the salaries upon their own comparison.

Mr. WINDOM. I am asking the attention of the Senate upon this point for this purpose, and this only, to show that there is no attempt on the part of the board to disguise the facts or to deceive anybody. They state what the salaries paid to these policemen were, and what the various items of expense were, and on the next page they state all the salaries now paid. Certainly there is no attempt to deceive; and that is all the purpose for which I made this reference to it at this time.

As to the total expenditure, I have shown how it compares with other cities, and this year it is about one-half what it was in the years I have mentioned. The Senator from Vermont says it is because we cut down the appropriations. That is true, and the report for this year shows that sickness in the city has materially increased because of our failure to make the necessary appropriations, so that I do not desire to make the comparison with the present year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How is that? What sickness has increased for want of an appropriation?

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator asked me a question. I will read the answer to it if I can turn to it; I am very certain that I saw it in this year's report to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. While the Senator is looking for that, if it will not disturb him, I should like to call his attention to the fact that in 1873, the year when he states those things were done under the board of public works and not by the board of health, we appropriated $39,300, nearly $40,000, for the board of health, independent of the salaries paid at that time; and that was about the annual appropriation we made several years before that for the board of health, as will be seen on page 540.

Mr. DORSEY. The board of health report expenditures for the year were $62,500.

Mr. WINDOM. There has been no attempt on the part of the board of health to conceal any of the expenditures; they show them in all their reports; and you may take even the extravagant expenditures which the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from California pointed out, and then I challenge comparison with any other city on the continent to produce equal economical sanitary conditions.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator's argument tended to show that during those years of higher expenditure than now, it was by some other organization than this board of health. I wanted to show the Senator that he was mistaken there. The Senator did say it was the board of public works that had charge of the matter. The board of public works had nothing to do with the matter at all.

Mr. WINDOM. The board of public works had charge of these two items, and the Senator's statement does not disprove it——

Mr. SARGENT. That only adds to it.

Mr. INGALLS. The extraordinary expenditures of 1872 and 1873 were caused by the small-pox epidemic, reaching $69,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Which was met by a deficiency appropriation not included in the ordinary annual appropriation bills that I quoted from.

Mr. WINDOM. I have been asked to quote parts of the report which I last referred to. On page 5 of the last report of the board of health I find—

> The mortality of the District of Columbia has, as stated above, sensibly decreased during the last fiscal year, but by referring to the report of the registrar of vital statistics it will be noticed that the mortality from certain zymotic or preventable diseases, such as diphtheria, scarlet and malarial fevers, has increased.
> As the office of sanitarians is to reduce, if not to totally efface, this very mortality, it is proper that this board should state the reasons for the increase. It can hardly be asserted that climatic causes have been more prolific of disease this year than the previous one, nor that malaria-generating localities have become more extensive. In my opinion it is due to the unreasonable reduction of sanitary force imposed upon the board by the inadequate appropriation made by Congress. Formerly the area of the District was divided into ten sanitary districts, each having a sanitary inspector to constantly watch its healthful condition. Congress, eighteen months ago notwithstanding the earnest remonstrances of the board, reduced that force to three inspectors, a number totally inadequate to perform the work with efficiency.

And yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding this reduction I still say that the results of this expenditure are better than in any other city; that the health of this city will compare favorably with any other, while its expenses in this regard are far less.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now Mr. President I must ask the indulgence of the Senate on this point for one moment. The idea of pressing upon Congress in this report for 1877 which now first appears on this scene—we have been standing on 1876 before—that the increase of diseases in this town for the last year has been occasioned by the want of appropriations, is perfectly absurd, with all respect to these gentlemen. Everybody who reads the public newspapers or knows anything about his own locality, knows perfectly well that all over this country, certainly all over the northern portion of it, in rural towns that have no marshes and no cess-pools and have no cities, and where everything is almost in a state of nature, this class of zymotic diseases, as they are called, has increased to an enormous degree, and under conditions that have been precisely the same that they have been in years before, so far as the visible aspects of nature and the visible condition of houses and streets and so on are concerned. It is just so here. These gentlemen had put the city in a certain condition before; the streets were paved so and so; dead animals were carried away as they are now; there have been no new marshes built up; and yet the diseases have increased, and these gentlemen come to Congress and say it is for the want of money; money would stop this epidemic! Mr. President, that is cutting it a little too fine, I must say.

Mr. WINDOM. All I want to say in answer to the Senator's statement is that doctors disagree. The doctors who made this report and our very worthy doctor from Vermont do not seem to agree as to the causes of ill-health here. I prefer to trust the regularly educated physicians, whether allopathic or homeopathic. I suspect they have investigated the question more than my friend from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But common sense is not confined to the medical profession alone, and public information is not either.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not detain the Senate longer on this subject; but I do think we are tampering with a very serious matter when we undertake to deny to a city of one hundred and sixty-five thousand people a proper sanitary supervision. I do believe that this opposition, not on the part of the Senator from Vermont, but that actuates many not in this body but in the city, arises simply from that feeling that I mentioned a little while ago, the feeling of dissatisfaction with everything that is new; and so long as you have doctors in this board you will have any quantity of doctors outside who will find fault with their operations, no matter what they may be.

I think to turn this whole matter over to the Surgeon-General would be exceedingly unwise. He has no organization by which he can take charge of the sanitary regulations of this city. Already he is behind two and a half and three years in the duties which properly belong to his office. Pensions cannot be paid for three years to come because he has not the force to examine the claims that are presented there. It is said that he has supernumerary physicians outside. Well, for one I am not willing to turn over the health of this city to the casual attention of the supernumerary physicians whose duty does not lie in this direction, who will regard it as merely a secondary matter, who will devote attention to the health of this city when they have nothing else to do, and when they feel like it. I prefer to have a reliable board that we can hold responsible. I do not believe we have any right to impose this duty on the Surgeon-General. I presume he and his officers would undertake it as best they can with the force they have; but that it will be another failure I have but very little doubt, and I am not willing to risk the lives and the health of the people of this city to gratify the prejudice of any one outside of this Chamber.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments; but I think it my duty to express my surprise, in this nineteenth century and in the Senate of the United States, to hear a proposition gravely debated to abolish a board of health in a city of one hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants. I had thought that if there was any one thing which was thoroughly established in the civilized world, it was the importance to every large community of having a commission of some sort to perform the functions which appertain to this board of health; in other words, an organization which should take charge of the sanitary condition of the public in that city.

As to the objections which have been urged to the personnel of this board as at present constituted, I have nothing to say. I know nothing about them except the fact, if it be a fact, that their official records show that they have worked to some purpose in improving the health of this community, and that the death-rate, since they have assumed the functions which they now discharge, has been very materially reduced. That is the first consideration with me. I am not here to inquire whether they are allopathists or homeopathists or belong to any other school of medicine. I am not here to say whether the powers with which they have been vested are too extensive and that the exercise of them has been too arbitrary. I look to the result, for I know the fact that every member of the Senate is as vitally interested in the preservation of the health of this city and in securing the means of promoting and preserving the health of this city as any citizen in the city.

It seems to me indispensable for our own security, to say nothing of the interests of all the inhabitants of this city, that we shall have a board of health to take charge of this department. If the details of the bill now under consideration are objectionable, correct them. If the personnel who now constitute the board are objectionable, make provision to have men appointed in another way or by a different person so as to change the personnel if that constitutes the only objection.

My friend from Kentucky argued that this board must of necessity be ineffective and ought to be abolished because three physicians constitute a majority of the board. It is the first time in my experience that I have ever heard such an objection as that urged to a board of health, that a majority of it was composed of men belonging to a profession whose studies from their early manhood to mature age are devoted to the consideration of precisely the questions which come under the action of this board. The substitution of an engineer officer, or of a board of which he is a part, it seems to me, would be a poor substitution for a board composed of physicians, even although those physicians represent different schools in medicine. I tell you that the principles of hygiene and those sanitary laws which are now generally recognized by all men of science in all parts of the world, are held alike by all scientific men, no matter what school of medicine they belong to.

Mr. President, I could say much more, but knowing the impatience of the Senate to secure a final vote on this bill and dispose of it in some way or other, I will close my remarks with the general propositions I have advanced.

Mr. MATTHEWS. The subject is too important a one, I think, Mr President to be passed over without a thorough discussion, irrespective of the question of time. We can afford to give all the time to it that is essential to a thorough understanding of it. The proposition, as I understand, is to so amend the tenth section of this bill as to abolish the board of health, which has been known to the law of this District since 1871, and to transfer the duties of that board under existing law to the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or to the control of the commissioners of the District.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Or the control of the commissioners of the District. I am opposed, Mr. President, to the amendment. I should think it a very injurious step to the very best and highest interests of the people of this District; and I propose briefly to give my reasons for that opinion.

Gentlemen on the floor of the Senate have alluded to the experience of the towns in New England in respect to sanitary matters. I know nothing personally or by other information in respect to that; but I should be very much surprised if I should be told that I was in error when I said that there is not a city in the United States containing a population of fifty thousand souls that did not have an organization with the characteristics of this which it is sought to abolish; that is, an organization entirely separate from the other municipal organization and government of the town, independent to a very great extent, having very large powers and very large discretion in the exercise of those powers. In the city with which I am most familiar, the largest city in the State of Ohio, there has been almost from time immemorial to me a board of health as a supervising and quasi-legislative authority, exercising the power to define the occasions and contingencies of their executive action, and controlling the expenditures, and also under them an executive officer, called a health officer; and my observation and knowledge of the operations of that part of the government is that it requires the entire time, not of one, but of many men, to give the proper attention to this highest interest of the people.

The vindication of the independent authority of such a board grows out of the very nature of the jurisdiction they are constituted to exercise, for it is a special function that requires special knowledge and professional experience—the knowledge of disease and, more than that, the knowledge of the causes of disease. Now, the science of preventive medicine is a modern science and a new science and a progressive science, and one that bids fair in the achievements which it promises in anticipating the causes of premature death and preventing the operation actively of those causes which are hurtful to health—I say the achievements which it promises in those directions bid fair to put to the blush all the sarcasm and all the irony that ever have been poured forth on the sciolism and the ignorance of the practice of medicine.

It may be that the actual administration of drugs may be left to the controversies between schools of medicine; and we need care very little to which the palm is to be awarded. I remember when convalescing some years ago from a severe and protracted attack of rheumatic fever, when I was just well enough to begin to study what had been written on the subject, I got possession of the most recent authority in medicine on the subject and read carefully the various modes of treatments recommended by the highest authorities in every school of medicine, and was a little discomfited as I disconcerted my physician when I ascertained that the result and conclusion and sum of the whole matter was that forty days and patience after all were the main reliance of the patient, and that no matter what the particular course of either medicine or regimen adopted, it generally came out about even; so that, according to a series of experiments in a celebrated hospital in Paris where in a series of cases nothing was administered at all but something only that had the appearance and color of drugs, the patient got well as rapidly and with as few ill consequences as those who had been put through all the tortures of science.

The faculty of medicine, at last, and recently only, have directed their attention to the promotion of the well-being of the race through their special knowledge in the cultivation of the science of preventive medicine; and the sanitary science which teaches the knowledge of the causes and the remedies affecting the diseases and the health of people congregated in large cities, is, I venture to say, almost the most important study of the age. For that purpose the experience of the country in the legislation in regard to municipal associations has led to the establishment of boards of health in cities of the size which I have described, I think, almost without exception. Why, what a clumsy and awkward arrangement it would be to put the consideration and treatment of those matters in the hands of persons, no matter how well qualified for their specific duties they may be, who are elected or appointed for the purpose of the ordinary municipal government of the place, the oversight of the police and of the fire department, the regulation of the streets and of the taxes, and the general government by ordinances and regulations of the town! The matter of the health, the matter of the life and the death of the men, and the women, and the children, the matter of birth and burial, the matter affecting in any way the physicial comfort and well-being of the people, is a matter that can be intelligently regulated only by those who have made a special study of the subject; and certainly it would be an abandonment of the first principles of every scientific attempt at legislation to throw this matter back into the hands of persons entirely uninformed and unskilled on this subject.

Now, in reference to the personnel of the present board of health in this District, I regard that as entirely immaterial in a consideration of the question of the system under which they are acting. I know little, but what I know I feel called upon to speak. I do know one member of that board, formerly a citizen of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, a lawyer by profession, not a medical man, and yet one who has made medicine in its elements and its details the study of his life, who is to-day as well qualified to speak on every question of sanitary science as the average physician of the country. I mean Judge Warden, a man who is willing to devote the larger part of his time upon a pitiful salary, just from the love of the thing itself and the desire to do good, for a more disinterested man was never organized.

Above all other cities, Mr. President, the city of Washington needs and ought to have the most skilled and best organized system for the prevention of disease of all cities in the United States, because, in the first place, it ought to be the model and the example for all other cities in every element of good government; but, more than that, there are special causes in existence here. The very improvements which have made it the beautiful city that it is have perhaps also bred some of the diseases which are specific to it; and other causes growing out of the fact of its being the national capital under the control of Congress give it at least claims upon us for the best government in that respect without regard to expense, having in regard always honesty in expenditure and wise economy.

Now, shall we abandon the experience of other cities and throw ourselves back upon practices which were in vogue only before sanitary science was known to exist? The alternative is either to keep a board of health organized specifically for the performance of this function and composed of select men qualified for the duty or in the first place to give it to the general body of the law-administering power, the commissioners selected without any reference to any such qualification, men of administration, men of executive ability, men of general knowledge, but not men who are able to detect in the air or in the earth the secret sources of disease and know how by a study of modern science to apply the remedy, or else, as it is said, to give it to the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Is it supposed that the Surgeon-General of the Army is occupying now a sinecure? Has he nothing to do. Has he no labors of his own? Are there no labors, and troubles, and responsibilities affixed to the tenure of his office, having the oversight of the sanitary interests of the entire Army of the United States, regulating the conduct of a whole corps of Army surgeons scattered over the whole country and stationed in five hundred different posts perhaps? Why, what time, what attention could that officer, and that officer without aid, without organization, without assistance, give to this great subject? The sanitary interests of this District would require the time of a man qualified for the discharges of the duties of that position all the hours of the day and every day in the week. You had better create a health officer at once, require him to have certain qualifications and act under the authority of the commissioners. But certainly if you impose this duty along with his existing duties upon the Surgeon-General of the Army, without reflecting upon the present or any future incumbent of that position, I will venture to say that you are without any system for the preservation of the public health at all.

Criticism has been made upon the extravagance and wastefulness of the board of health. Mr. President, that is a question of administration; it does not affect the system. It is not shown that extravagance and wastefulness are inherent in this system. If it has existed it has been the fault of the men who have been extravagant and wasteful or the fault of those regulations, not inherent in the system itself, by which such things could be. We do not destroy a thing simply because its power may be abused. And right here I take leave to say that I think the criticism of the honorable Senator from North Carolina upon the language of this bill, investing what seems to be this unlimited power upon the board of health to define and to declare what shall constitute nuisances, is not just. The language of the bill, if it becomes a law, must be taken subject to the general principles of the law. The law does not abolish the Constitution; it does not enable this board to deprive any citizen of his property without due process of law. Neither is it unexampled. I remember a case in the court of common pleas in England of Cooper vs. The Board of Works for the Wandsworth district, where, under the metropolis local-management act of a district in London, power was given to a board to tear down a house the erection of which was begun by the owner without giving a certain number of days' notice—seven days' notice in writing to the board. In this case the proprietor gave only five days' notice, and thereupon the board went to work to tear down his house, claiming that by the language of the statute they had that which the Senator from North Carolina describes as absolute and arbitrary power. But the court held that the beneficent and gracious provisions of the common law supplemented the statute, and the statute was to be construed in reference to them. So, although they had apparently this authority they could only exercise it after giving notice and an opportunity of being heard; and thereupon an action was entertained for damages for doing an illegal act, because it was done without giving opportunity and notice.

Mr. MERRIMON. But my objection here was that there was no provision for notice being required to be given.

Mr. MATTHEWS. But the decision I refer to says that, although the statute does not require notice to be given, the superior law does, as in old Dr. Bently's case in 1 Strange, where the attempt was to deprive him of his dignity in the university without a hearing, and without notice, and the doctrine was laid down to this effect in 1 Strange, 567:

The objection for want of notice can never be got over. The laws of God and man both give the party an opportunity to make his defense, if he has any. I remember to have heard it observed by a very learned man upon such an occasion that even God himself did not pass sentence upon Adam before he was called upon to make his defense: Adam, (says God,) where art thou? Hast thou not eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldest not eat! And the same question was put to Eve also. Per cur, ulterius concilium.

Mr. MERRIMON. If I understand the position the Senator occupies, it seems to me with all respect that it is untenable. Let me put this case: I am a citizen of the District of Columbia; the board of health visit a house which I own, and in their judgment it is a nuisance; they condemn it as a nuisance. I want to take issue with them; I say it is not a nuisance; that their judgment is arbitrary. Where is the remedy provided by this bill or where is there any provision for a remedy in any existing law that I should have in that case?

Mr. MATTHEWS. My answer to the Senator from North Carolina is that their saying a thing is so does not make it so, unless the law makes it so; and if the law does not make it a nuisance, he can appeal to the law as against them, and by the preventive writ of injunction prevent them from enforcing their action against his property.

Mr. MERRIMON. But this bill gives them power to say it is a nuisance, and there is no limitation on that power——

Mr. MATTHEWS. The law gives them power to declare a thing to be a nuisance, but it does not give them power to define what constitutes a nuisance.

Mr. MERRIMON. My friend has certainly not read the act. It not only gives them powor to declare what shall be a nuisance, but gives them power to abate it as a nuisance.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Then the answer is that this board is simply the ordinary legislative body in which that power resides which declares the law in the case. If the law is declared contrary to fundamental principles, which they cannot override, then the remedy exists, because there still subsists a law which they cannot affect. The power to declare what shall constitute a nuisance is a legislative power, which belongs somewhere, and I understand the proposition is simply to transfer that from this board to another board, and then the argument would apply. Does the Senator insist that the law of nuisances shall be created only by act of Congress? If so, then an act of Congress can always be passed which shall declare what and what only shall constitute nuisances, and the board would be governed by that. So the arbitrariness of the power is always subject to the correction; but on the supposition that this section of the bill needs correction in that particular, that furnishes, as I contend, no argument against the constitution of the body which is to administer this law, if passed, by enforcing the decisions of the law against those who violate it. We must have some machinery, some organization, some authority which shall enforce laws made and to be made for the preservation of the health of the community. You must put it in the hands of one man or of some men. If you put it into the hands of a board specially organized for that specific purpose, and having no other duties to perform, in my judgment you have lodged it where it can be more safely and wisely administered than if you lodge it elsewhere; because if you lodge it with a board that has other duties to perform you run the risk of maladministration, mismanagement, mistakes, and errors far greater than are likely to be committed under such a system. While, therefore, I do not argue for the section as it stands, unamended, I do argue strenuously for the preservation of this feature in the administration locally of the affairs of the District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, in line 4, of section 10, to strike out "continued with" and insert "and hereby is abolished and."

Mr. MATTHEWS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. If I must put myself on the record on this question I will say just this: I shall vote against the amendment, and solely for the reason that if the extraordinary powers, which it seems to me are to be vested in some tribunal by the proposed bill, are to be vested anywhere, the larger the tribunal, the more numerous it is, the less likely I think it is to work disastrously. I know nothing about the merits of the present board of health. I know but very little, and only in a general way, of the merits of the Surgeon-General; but I know he is but one man, and here are five, and I think that five men would be likely to bother this game more than one; and inasmuch as I am opposed to clothing anybody or anything with the powers specified in this section I shall vote to keep the matter in the largest number of men.

Mr. SARGENT. If a bill had been reported conferring upon the board of health the powers which they heretofore have exercised, I would not have voted for an amendment like that offered by the Senator from Vermont, because I believe under the pruning that has been made by Congress the amount of expenditures is reasonable and the amount of good which they do is fairly commensurate with the amount of money spent for it. But I find in this bill a most extraordinary extension of the powers of this board, and I am led to believe that this does not spring from the spontaneous action of the committee, but that the force comes, as it does in all such cases, from the board or bureau whose powers are to be enlarged. My experience upon a committee of this body where we have to deal with Departments and bureaus is that all extensions of power and greater expenditures of money and new objects of activity are suggested by those who are to expend the money or who are to exercise the powers. I may be mistaken in supposing in this case the general rule holds good; but if it does, it seems to me it is one reason, and a strong one in the minds of Senators, why they will favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, and it may be another case of > Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,

> And falls on the other.

If this provision stopped on line 5, after the word "possesses," and then had in addition merely the concluding clause providing for reports, I should have no objection to it. That which follows is "and the further powers conferred by this act," &c. I believe the powers conferred by the statute already are contained in the following lines, namely:

The said board shall have power to define, declare, and cause to be removed or abated nuisances injurious to health; to provide for and regulate the collection, removal, and transportation of garbage, house offal, and dead animals in and from the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in said District, and their immediate and more densely populated suburbs, and to provide, by contract or otherwise, for the proper performance of such service.

These, with some inspection of marine products, &c., constitute pretty much all the powers of the board at present.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from California is this provision authorizing them to fill up any lot in the city which they please and charge the expense to the owner the present law?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; it is one of the things I object to; but I will come to that in a moment.

I object to the first thing that follows after this. It may be that I misunderstand the meaning of lines 13, 14, 15, and part of 16. I may not understand the bearing of those lines which look somewhat innocent there, but if I do understand them—and I have a right to put the construction upon them from my information that members of the board of health have published pamphlets upon the subject. I understand that these mean that the French system of espionage and license to a certain pursuit, condemned by the morality of mankind everywhere as immoral, is to be introduced in this District under the cover of this provision, a system as I said immoral, a system un-American, a system unjust in that it makes a discrimination between the sexes and is to the disadvantage of the weaker sex, a system tried in Saint Louis for a few years and abolished for the reasons I have given. If this does not mean that, what does it mean in connection with the provision that "they shall have power to make such ordinances and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect any lawful powers of the board;" and

To make such rules and regulations for all hospitals used exclusively for the isolation and treatment of persons afflicted with infectious or contagious diseases.

If that means what the "contagious diseases act" means as elsewhere enacted, what does it mean?

Further, I object to the additional power given to this board:

To provide for admission to hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and infirmaries, for the benefit of which appropriations are made of public moneys.

The Hospital for the Insane is supported by appropriations of public money. It is a refuge for the insane of the Navy and the Army and the insane of the District of Columbia. The insane of the Navy are admitted upon the certificate of the Secretary of the Navy, of the Army upon the certificate of the Secretary of War, those of the District of Columbia upon the certificate of the Secretary of the Interior; and in every case there is required to be judicial process, a judge presiding, and competent physicians determining the question of the insanity of the individual, as is required in all the States, and as there should be in behalf of the liberty of the citizen, for there have been gross outrages in the history of the world and of civilization in the confinement of persons on the allegation of insanity when they were not insane at all, and hearts have been broken and estates have been plundered to carry out the infamous work of those who would be prevented by such provisions as we have in this District and we have in the States generally against these attempts against the liberty and property of the citizen.

Now it is proposed to wipe all this away and put all in the board of health.

Take the Providence Hospital, another instance, where the medical service of the hospital costs not one cent, it being freely rendered by physicians in turn, and where we make a provision for so many beds for transient paupers, and have done for years. We make appropriation for it. Under this loose provision here, this board of health is to have the power of prescribing who shall be admitted into that hospital. Is that fair or is it just? And so with reference to the Freedmen's Hospital, which is now under the Secretary of the Interior, where the responsibility for the accounts is lodged in the same hands as the power of admission, where the power to control expenditures goes with the power to incur them.

Take the Women's Lying-in Hospital, which belonged to a private corporation, and for which, under the order of the Senate for several years, I have acted as a trustee, and therefore I speak with some knowledge of the institution, of its benefits, of the admirable manner in which it is conducted. This is an institution which was originally organized by a private corporation got up by benevolent individuals for the benefit of a very suffering class. Gradually the Government gave them some help on condition that they transfer all their property to the United States, and they did transfer the property, which at this time probably has reached somewhere about a value of from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars by the increase in the value of property, and also by some additions which the Government has made to it, and by the expenditures the Government has made upon the building for improvements. The institution is well managed under a charter granted by Congress prescribing the terms upon which persons shall be admitted and retained there; but all the laws governing the institution are to be swept aside in order that the board of health may exercise this supervision.

Are they aiming to control all the institutions which are now supported in whole or in part by Government funds? If so, then I object to it most strenuously; and whether they aim at it or not, I object to it because our laws are framed for the efficiency and success of these institutions. We have already struck out the words making them a legislative body, giving them power to pass ordinances, as this bill was reported, but the board of health are also—

Charged with the care of the sick poor of the said District, furnishing medicines and medical attendance for the same, and with the burial of deceased paupers.

Whether that is an enlargement of their present powers I do not know, and I make no criticism upon it. Now they are to have the power:

To require the draining and filling up or reducing to proper grade, as may be necessary, in their judgment, in a sanitary point of view, any lot or lots within said District; and when such necessity is found to have been occasioned by the act or neglect of the owner, the said draining, filling up, or reducing to proper grade may be done under the orders and by the direction of said board; and the expense of such draining, filling up, or reduction shall be certified to the commissioners of said District, who shall cause the same to be assessed upon the property on which said work has been done; and the amount so assessed shall be collected as other taxes are collected in the District of Columbia.

They are to have power to contract for filling up or cutting down anything that is above or below the grade. How much do you suppose their expenses will be in order to execute this power conferred upon them? Are they a board, with their medical experience, however great it may be, who have the peculiar business faculty of determining upon the expense of moving a cubic yard of earth?

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator allow me? I think if the section is not stricken out the committee are prepared to suggest amendments on the points the Senator objects to, which will entirely meet his approbation. I do not understand that the committee are defending some of the points that the Senator has raised objections to. I believe that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has already prepared an amendment obviating some of the objections.

Mr. SARGENT. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, as I heard it read, does not obviate the objections I have made.

Mr. DORSEY. Some of the committee are prepared, if the section is not stricken out, to offer amendments to obviate the difficulties the Senator from California suggests.

Mr. SARGENT. The only way it can be done is to strike out all after the word "possesses" in line 5 down to and including the word "Columbia" in line 38. If the committee are satisfied that the section needs revision in the respects I have mentioned, I will not take up the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. ARMSTRONG.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) In the hope that we may be able to reform the section, I will vote "nay."

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MATTHEWS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MCDONALD.]

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bayard,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Oglesby,
Beck,	Davis of Illinois,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Maxey,	Thurman.
Butler,	Eustis,	Merrimon,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Morgan,

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Conkling,	Howe,	Teller,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	Ingalls,	Voorhees,
Bailey,	Eaton,	McMillan,	Wadleigh,
Blaine,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Windom,
Bruce,	Hamlin,	Rollins,	Withers.
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Sargent,
Christiancy,	Hoar,	Saunders,

ABSENT—32.

Armstrong,	Dennis,	Kirkwood,	Patterson,
Barnum,	Garland,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Booth,	Gordon,	McCreery,	Randolph,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McDonald,	Ransom,
Chaffee,	Hill,	McPherson,	Sharon,
Conover,	Johnston,	Matthews,	Spencer,
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Nevada,	Mitchell,	Wallace,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Paddock,	Whyte.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to strike out all after the word "possesses," in line 5 of the section, down to and including the word "Columbia," in line 38.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest to the Senator from California that he need not exclude the end of line 5, what follows "possesses," to the word "and," because there may be some power conferred by this act not conferred by former acts.

Mr. SARGENT. I think I will submit the amendment in the form I did in the first place. I move to strike out all after the word "possesses," in line 5, down to and including the word "Columbia," in line 38.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from California yield to a suggestion? It is manifest that this bill cannot be completed this evening. It is growing late. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VOORHEES. As this section is retained in the bill, it has to be carefully considered; there are powers provided here which ought to be looked into narrowly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair will lay before the Senate some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 3625) relating to soldiers while in the civil service of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3879) for the relief of certain pensioners;

A bill (H. R. No. 4969) to repeal section 4717 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4974) to amend section 4702 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4976) to increase the pension of certain pensioned soldiers and sailors who have lost both their hands or both their feet or the sight of both eyes in the service of the country; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4981) relating to claim agents and attorneys in pension cases.

The bill (H. R. No. 1164) for the relief of Peter G. Mills, his heirs and assigns, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 4988) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute superintendents of mints or assayers in assay offices assistant treasurers of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Pending the motion to adjourn I ask leave to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1319) to amend section 2 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875, and making further provision in reference to the removal of causes from State courts to the circuit court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 813) for the relief of the administratrix of Joseph Wheaton, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

THE FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print extra copies of the message of the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberations of the fishery commission, have instructed me to report the same back with an amendment and to ask for its present consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 1, to strike out the words "the House of Representatives concurring."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 extra copies of the message of the President transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberations of the fishery commission, with accompanying documents, and that 500 copies of the same shall be for the use of the State Department, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That 75 copies of the testimony taken before the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard relative to the bill of Captain Eads be printed for the use of the committee.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DORSEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 25, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CHEYENNE AND BLACK HILLS RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to report, with amendments, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, for present consideration, the bill (S. No. 655) to incorporate the Cheyenne and Black Hills Railroad and Telegraph Company.

Mr. BURCHARD. I must object to taking up any bill of this kind for consideration, though I would not object if it could be passed without debate. If taken up for consideration, it might occupy an hour or two to the exclusion of other business.

Mr. EDEN. I am compelled to object, because I am preparing some amendments that I wish to offer.

FRAUDS UPON POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. By request I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There being no objection, the resolution the title of which was read, as follows, was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

A resolution directing the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to investigate the practicability of preventing frauds upon the postal service.

CLAIM OF CARLOS BUTTERFIELD.

Mr. BRIDGES, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with a favorable recommendation, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) requiring the Secretary of State to furnish information to Congress in reference to the claim of Carlos Butterfield against the Government of Denmark.

The bill was read. It requires the Secretary of State, if not incompatible with the public service and interests of the United States, to furnish to Congress a statement of the claim of Carlos Butterfield & Co., now represented by the said Butterfield, against the government of Denmark, for depredations committed by officers of said government against the property of said Carlos Butterfield, at the island of Saint Thomas, in the years 1854 and 1855, and what progress, if any, has been made in the settlement of the claim, together with a copy of all correspondence with the authorities and government of Denmark on the subject of the claim.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIDGES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROCEEDS OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

Mr. GOODE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Education and Labor, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 3542) to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the public Calendar, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

PETER G. MILLS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands for passage at this time the bill (H. R. No. 1164) for the relief of Peter G. Mills, his heirs, and assigns.

The bill was read. It provides that the entry by Peter G. Mills of the west half of the northwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 6, township 102, range 43, in the State of Minnesota, be made valid to him, his heirs and assigns.

Mr. DUNNELL. This bill has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Public Lands. A soldier in his life-time made an entry of this land, and after his death the widow in proving up the claim discovered that there was a clerical error in his discharge from the service. He was discharged as a member of regiment ten, when he was a member of regiment four.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table House resolution No. 152, to enable the joint commission to carry into effect the act of Congress providing for the completion of the Washington Monument, and to move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the conference asked for on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. FOSTER, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. GOODE.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. PHELPS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back favorably the following bills; and the accompanying reports were ordered to be printed and the bills recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider:

A bill (H. R. No. 4155) authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund to W. B. Farrar, of Whitfield County, Georgia, illegal taxes collected from him in the year 1877;

A bill (H. R. No. 2047) to authorize the payment of certain United States notes destroyed by fire, belonging to Rogers, Richardson & Co., of Warren, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 128) for the relief of W. J. Pollock, late collector of internal revenue for the district of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 1997) for the relief of William R. Wilner, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Maryland; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of Thomas Kearney, collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi.

ASSISTANT TREASURERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4988) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute superintendents of mints and assayers assistant treasurers of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute any superintendent of a mint or assayer of an assay office an assistant treasurer of the United States, without additional compensation, to receive gold coin and bullion on deposit for the purposes provided for in section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move, by unanimous consent, that the bankrupt bill be taken from the Speaker's table with a view to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law.

Mr. WADDELL. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. WADDELL. Then I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time a bill (S. No. 72) for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham.

Mr. WADDELL. I object until we have had a morning hour.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask my friend from North Carolina not to object to this bill.

Mr. WADDELL. I do object to reports coming here out of order from committees when I have been trying to make reports from my Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which has not been called for four months, and I have not yet been able to do so. If we are to have reports from committees let them come in regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina make a general objection?

Mr. WADDELL. I certainly do, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business reported from the Committee on Commerce, the title of which will be read.

Mr. CONGER. If we begin to go around with unanimous consent, it ought to be allowed to go all the way through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes an absolute objection.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be understood, then, there shall be no more unanimous consent unless it shall go around; that it shall not go through one side without reaching us.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has acted without reference to either side, recognizing gentlemen on both sides.

Mr. CONGER. I only ask that the next time we have unanimous consent it shall go through when it is once begun.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I wish to inquire whether the report from the Committee on Naval Expenditures was not made the special order for to-day; and, if so, I only wish to make a request with a view that it shall not lose its place upon the Calendar, and that is, it shall go over as the special order until Thursday of next week. I do not wish to press it to-day, and do not wish that it shall lose its place.

The SPEAKER. It cannot take precedence of any prior special order not reached up to the present time. It is a continuing special order, as the Chair is informed, and will not lose its place.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I do not lose anything by it not being taken up to-day, then?

The SPEAKER. You do not.

The Clerk read the title of the bill coming over as unfinished business, as follows:

The bill (H. R. No. 3547) to regulate interstate commerce and prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers.

Mr. CONGER. Is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It is. That is the unfinished business. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Pending that I have endeavored to get the Speaker's eye to recognize me for a motion to lay aside the unfinished business and to go into the Committee of the Whole on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. This comes up as the unfinished business under the rule. The gentleman from New York, if he desires to reach the object he states, will vote in the negative on the question of consideration.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is it not in order for the gentleman from New York to move to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York might have made that motion, but he did not.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It was owing to my inexperience that I did not make that motion at the proper time. I desired to make that motion.

Mr. WADDELL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House shall now refuse to consider the unfinished business, would it be in order then to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Army appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. It would.

The question being taken on considering the unfinished business, it was decided in the negative—ayes 28, noes not counted.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, in order to have it printed and recommitted, a bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to all claims growing out of treaties between the United States and Indian tribes, and the laws appertaining thereto.

Mr. CONGER. I was asking a similar privilege, and was cut off by a demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, there were—ayes 119, noes 18.

Mr. DUNNELL. I make the point that a quorum has not voted. [After a pause.] I withdraw the point as to a quorum if the gentleman from New York will agree to remain in Committee of the Whole till we finish the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. So far as I have any control of the matter I shall be glad if the House will remain in Committee of the Whole until the bill is finished.

Mr. ATKINS. The bill has not been delayed on this side of the House. It is from that side that the delay has come.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the committee to determine.

So further count not being demanded, the motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the pending amendment, which is offered by the gentleman from New York to come in as section 14.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments and the heads of the various staff departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of July next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit, from any cause whatever, except on account of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness, and the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported, and such officer shall not be reappointed; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer an opportunity to appear and show cause against it. In the event of the inability to act, or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I withdraw the amendment and ask the Clerk to read section 15.

The Clerk read section 15, as follows:

SEC. 15. That the President is hereby authorized to transfer the surplus of officers from the regiments of calvary and infantry that may be consolidated, and from the several staff departments, to the list of supernumeraries; and all vacancies now existing, or that may occur, in the cavalry, artillery, infantry, or staff departments, by reason of such transfer or from other causes, shall be filled in due proportion by the supernumerary officers, having reference to rank, seniority, and fitness. And if any supernumerary officers shall remain after the 1st day of January next, they may be honorably mustered out of the service, with one year's extra pay and allowances, or assigned to such service, military or civil, as the President may direct.

Mr. HALE. Is not that subject to the same point of order as the previous sections?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I admit that the section is subject to the point of order. If the Chair rules it out I propose to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I offer as a new section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the President is hereby authorized to transfer the surplus of officers from the regiments of cavalry and infantry that may be consolidated, and from the several staff departments, to the list of supernumeraries; and all vacancies now existing, or that may occur, in the cavalry, artillery, infantry, or staff departments, by reason of such transfer or from other causes, shall be filled in due proportion by the supernumerary officers, having reference to rank, seniority, and fitness; and the President is hereby authorized and required to place upon the retired list or to muster out of service officers equal in number to the officers who may be upon the supernumerary list on the 1st day of July, 1879. He shall place upon the retired list all officers who may be unfit for duty by reason of injuries incurred or diseases contracted in the line of duty; but the number so retired shall not exceed one hundred in addition to the present retired list. In order that the President may properly select the officers to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out, the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of September next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit from any cause whatever for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, and setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of October next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals on the active list, to which board said lists shall be referred for examination; and the said board shall report to the President such officers as they shall recommend to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of the service, and the President shall thereupon grant leave of absence to such officers and cause them to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of service on the 1st day of July, 1879. And if the number so recommended to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of service shall not be equal to the number of officers remaining on the supernumerary list on the 1st day of January, 1879, the President shall forthwith transmit to Congress at its next session a list of the officers in excess of the number to be retired and to be mustered out for such further action as shall be deemed necessary. In the event of the inability to act or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio reserves all points of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This section, which in fact takes the place of sections 13 and 14, is not in its provisions as liberal to the officers of the Army as the act originally drawn. I regret it. The act was drawn on the theory that a large number of officers would prefer to retire from the Army on the very liberal allowances provided in the bill. But that section has gone out under the point of order.

There are, it is well known, in the Army a large number of officers who ought to go upon the retired list, but who cannot be placed there in consequence of the limitation to three hundred now existing by law. There are other officers who ought not to remain in the Army. Now the object of this amendment is to provide for all those cases upon as equitable a basis as the rules laid down by the Chair under the points of order raised by the gentleman from Maine will permit.

As regards this whole question I desire to say to the House that the Army appropriation bill was not confided to me by my own choice. It was assigned to me, and as a matter of duty I undertook to investigate whether any economy could be effected. I found that the Army was organized in such a manner that no man of business could continue to do business under such an organization without being ruined. It therefore was my duty to suggest such measures of reorganization and retrenchment as would effect economy.

Now the economy in this bill is introduced in two forms: first, by the consolidation of regiments and, secondly, by the reduction of men. The reduction of men is a minor question. I confess when I approached that branch of the subject it was with the conviction that we ought to have twenty-five thousand men in the Army, and it was only after investigation that I came to the conclusion that twenty thousand men would be adequate for such service as the Army ought to be called upon to perform. On that matter this committee has already overruled the Committee on Appropriations, but upon the question of the consolidation of regiments, by which two-thirds of the saving is effected, the Committee on Appropriations was sustained by this committee.

Now, that consolidation will leave two hundred or three hundred officers out of active service who must be provided for. This section provides that some of them shall be placed on the supernumerary list and others shall be discharged and that all appointments to fill vacancies must be made from the supernumerary list; but the provision I now introduce requires and allows the President to muster out during the coming year a number of officers equivalent to the number that are thus placed on the supernumerary list, and to make up those retired to the extent of one hundred, and others are to be mustered out upon the report of the board that they are not fit to be officers. Now this may not absorb all the number. There may be meritorious officers left on the supernumerary list on the 1st of January who have not been appointed to the vacancies caused by the retirements and muster-out of officers. Those officers ought not to be driven out of the Army. I am not in favor of driving them out of it. I do not know how many there will be, but if there be one or twenty or fifty, I hold that in good faith the Government is bound to make provision for them, and hence the concluding clause of the amendment requires the President to report the names remaining on the supernumerary list in order that Congress may do them justice, as I have no doubt both sides of the House will be willing to do.

Mr. HALE. This, then, is the gentleman's idea: that if any officers go out of the service under this section such provision as may be proper to be made for them can be made hereafter, when we have seen how the provision will work.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That is my idea.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not make any point of order upon this amendment. I am opposed to it, but I think that under the ruling of the Chair made yesterday it is not liable to the point of order.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 95, noes 69.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD, and Mr. HEWITT of New York, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 85.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read section 18, as follows:

That the general officers may select from the Army and shall be entitled to aides-de-camp, as follows: The General of the Army, four; the Lieutenant-General, three; major-generals, two each; and brigadier-generals, one each. Aides-de-camp to the Lieutenant-General and major-generals shall be taken from officers not above the rank of major and aides-de-camp to brigadier-generals from the first and second lieutenants: Provided further, That no officer shall be detailed to any staff appointment or other situation the duties of which will detach him from his company, regiment, or corps, until he has served at least five years with the regiment or corps to which he properly belongs: And provided further, That aides-de-camp to the General and Lieutenant-General shall not attain, by virtue of appointment as such, a grade or rank beyond that next above their rank at the date of such appointment.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out that section of the bill. It looks like a blow at certain officers of the Army, and I think that it ought to be referred to the board with the rest. I do not care to take up the time of the committee with any argument.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to occupy the floor for one moment only. It seems to me that a portion of the section is good enough, but that portion of it in the thirteenth line, the proviso "that aides-de-camp to the General and Lieutenant-General shall not attain, by virtue of appointment as such, a grade or rank beyond that next above their rank at the date of such appointment" appears to me to be intended or will be construed by the country as a direct blow at the General and Lieutenant-General of the Army. I presume that in one sense of the word the aides-de-camp that these generals are entitled to are ornamental only. But the rank was created or rather revived by a special statute for the purpose of conferring on distinguished officers these places. Under the present law the General is entitled to six aides-de-camp, with the rank of colonel, and the Lieutenant-General to four, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. If this bill becomes a law, a captain on the General's staff who now receives the pay of a colonel would only receive that of a major. I do not know but that that might be right enough, but it seems to me that it would be impossible to construe this section otherwise than as a blow at the two most distinguished men in the Army of the United States.

Mr. BRAGG. If I understand this section it is not a blow aimed at any man, whether he be distinguished or otherwise. It is a section which is indirectly not only in the interest of economy but in the interests of efficiency, and it prevents partiality. Under the present law the General of the Army can select six aides-de-camp of any rank, no matter whether they have served three months or thirty years. They become colonels and wait upon him at his office as his aides-de-camp and draw the full pay of colonel, while men who have borne the heat of battle at the front are left to perform their duties in the line, drawing pay at a much lower grade. That in my judgment is a sufficient answer as to the pay of an aide-de-camp. As to the necessity of six aides-de-camp for a general, it seems to me that it can scarcely be urged by any one that six aides-de-camp are necessary. The General of the Army has his headquarters in time of peace here in Washington. This bill proposes to give him four aides-de-camp and it provides that when they are appointed they shall only draw the pay of one grade above that which they held in the line. Now those four are certainly sufficient to discharge all the duties required of aides-de-camp in time of peace and if that be so, then we have by this bill relieved ourselves of the expense of maintaining two additional aides-de-camp. I maintain that four aides-de-camp are entirely sufficient, and by the provisions of this bill the sum of $2,500 is appropriated in addition for the expense of clerk hire in the office of the General.

Now I had supposed that in time of peace the only business which an aide-de-camp would have to perform would be to act as the military secretary of his chief. But by this appropriation bill, upon the estimate of the Department, we have given $2,500 to pay the expenses of the clerical force in the office of the General of the Army. So that the four aides-de-camp in effect will have nothing to do except to attend upon the General as members of his military family.

The question was upon the motion to strike out section 18; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 100.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to offer an amendment, to add to the section the following:

Provided also, That the provisions of this section shall not apply in time of war.

Mr. BANNING. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I supposed there would be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARSH. I would like to inquire what provision of law would apply in time of war?

Mr. KEIFER. This section, if it becomes a law, will repeal the sections of the Revised Statutes upon the subject to which this relates.

Mr. CHALMERS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] that he should add to his amendment the words "when the Commanding General himself is required to be in the field."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If the amendment is allowed to stand in the language used by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] the word "war" may mean an Indian war; and surely the gentleman does not mean to include "Indian wars." If he would say "foreign war," there will be no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. There can be an Indian war in time of peace; nobody calls an Indian war a state of war.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to put in the word "foreign" before the word "war."

Mr. KEIFER. That is not necessary.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Has the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] been accepted?

Mr. KEIFER. Let that amendment be again stated; I want to understand it.

The amendment was read, to add the words "when the Commanding General himself is required to be in the field."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. If that amendment is adopted it will do.

The amendment of Mr. CHALMERS was then adopted.

The Clerk read section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That no officer of the Army below the rank of colonel shall hereafter be promoted to a higher grade than that now held by him until he shall have been examined by a board of three officers, senior to him in rank, appointed for that purpose by the Secretary of War, under direction of the President, and shall have been adjudged by such board duly qualified for promotion; and should the officer fail at such examination, he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be re-examined, and upon a second failure, shall be, by the President, discharged from the Army: Provided, That at least two of the officers constituting the examining boards provided for in this section shall, in all cases, be selected from the same arm, corps, or department of the service as that to which the officer to be examined shall belong.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order upon that section that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. I will not argue it, because I suppose that point of order is pretty apparent.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have no disposition to contest the point of order, under the rulings of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the section is ruled out.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

SEC. 21. That hereafter all vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled by appointment from the graduates of the Military Academy, and by the promotion of meritorious non-commissioned officers of the Army.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend the section just read by adding the words "and also from able-bodied honorably discharged officers and soldiers of the United States Army."

Mr. BANNING. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. Does that include volunteers?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman behind you [Mr. KEIFER] will be better able to state what it includes.

Mr. KEIFER. In order to make it perfectly clear, I will move to amend the amendment by inserting before the words "officers and soldiers," the words "regular and volunteer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now suggest that this section, as amended, be stricken out, for it leaves the law exactly as it now is. As amended, this section makes absolutely no change whatever in the law.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does the law now limit appointments to those who have served in the Army; or are appointments open to those in civil life?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think it makes the slightest difference.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It does make considerable difference.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make the point of order that this section changes existing law and is not in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. EDEN. That point of order is certainly too late, the section having been considered and amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is too late.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there is objection, I withdraw the motion to strike out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "officers," in the fourth line, the words "and privates;" so that it will read "by the promotion of meritorious non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army." The amendment already adopted makes honorably discharged privates, both regular and volunteer, eligible to appointment. It appears to me that privates who are serving in the regular Army should also be eligible to appointment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

SEC. 25. That when an officer has served forty-five years as a commissioned officer, or has served as an enlisted man and commissioned officer in the aggregate forty-five years, or has attained the age of sixty-five years, he shall be placed upon the retired list.

Mr. HALE. This section changes existing law, and is clearly not in the interest of economy.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Under the rulings of the Chair, there is no doubt that the point of order is well taken if insisted upon.

Mr. HALE. I insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the section is ruled out.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] withhold his assent for a moment?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will withdraw it. I supposed that the point of order was well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will reserve his decision, if gentlemen desire to speak upon the point of order.

Mr. HALE. As I made the point of order I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to let me first state the grounds upon which I make it.

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. This section provides for additional expenses beyond what the law now provides for. Whenever an officer is retired he begins to draw pay upon the retired list, and somebody following him upon the active list succeeds to his old place and draws his old pay. Therefore the old salary is drawn by some other officer, while the retired officer begins to get the additional pay of a retired officer. In that way the section is an increase of expenditures rather than a retrenchment.

Mr. BRAGG. I submit that the reasoning of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] is not correct. It does not necessarily follow that the places of these officers who are retired are to be supplied by others. There is no provision in this section that the vacancies shall be filled as the retirements occur. On the contrary, other sections of the bill provide against filling a large class of vacancies which are created. The retirement of an officer reduces, so far as he is concerned, the pay which he is to receive, because when retired he gets only 75 per cent. of the pay which he would otherwise receive, which would be full pay proper and all the additional allowances of the grade in which he was serving. Therefore, upon the face of the section a reduction of expenses is provided; and whether or not the contingency may arise which will authorize the filling of a vacancy so that another officer may draw the pay which the retired officer drew before retirement, is not apparent upon the face of the section.

Mr. HALE. The provision already adopted with reference to retirements and supernumeraries applies only to cases of consolidations of regiments; but this is a general provision, applying to all officers; that is, it retires them earlier than they now retire. It increases the retired list, and leaves still the old active list remaining, so far as regards anybody outside of the consolidated regiments.

The gentleman says we have provided what the retired list shall be; but we are now legislating, in effect, to increase the retired list; we are making radical change of the law; therefore the retired list will be increased.

Mr. BRAGG. I can answer the gentleman on this point with his argument of yesterday. Although this bill provides that the time upon which men may be retired shall be forty-five years, including their service as enlisted men, non constat that there are any such, just as the gentleman urged yesterday, that it did not appear that any of those men were going to be mustered out, and therefore the proposition was not in the line of retrenchment and reform. The Chair sustained this reasoning yesterday, and I believe he ought to sustain it to-day.

Mr. BANNING. This is a saving of 25 per cent. We have already provided that no new appointments or promotions shall be made "in any of the said departments of military service;" so that no promotions can be made to the places from which these men are retired.

Mr. HALE. Where have we provided that? There is no such provision in any law yet passed.

Mr. BANNING. That is the bill as we have passed it here.

Mr. HALE. We are talking now not of any bill before the House or which may have passed the House but about the laws that exist now. The fact that something has been done in other sections or another bill does not make a law. The Chair must rule upon what is existing law; and the existing law does not retire these men at the ages provided here; and when they retire they get retired pay, and under existing law somebody else goes into their places.

Mr. BANNING. In addition to what I have already stated, the law as it now stands provides that when the head of the Department of Military Justice, who is a brigadier-general and who will be retired under this provision, shall be retired his place shall not be filled. So that there will be economy in that direction under existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The very fact that members have been obliged to resort to argument in undertaking to demonstrate to the Chair that this section would or would not retrench expenditures, is a sufficient reason to justify the Chair in sustaining the point of order and ruling out the provision. Under the rule the retrenchment which will make a change of existing law admissible upon an appropriation bill must appear on the face of the provision, and ought not to be so uncertain as to require arguments to be submitted on the one side or the other. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That hereafter women shall not be allowed to accompany troops as laundresses: Provided, That any such laundress, being the wife of a soldier, as is now allowed to accompany troops, may, in the discretion of the regimental commander, be retained until the expiration of such soldier's present term of enlistment.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out this section. I hope the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the Committee of the Whole, will see that it is a rather small kind of economy to strike at these poor women, four of whom under the present law may accompany each troop or company of soldiers. The law now permits the drawing of just one ration for each of these women; and if the provision now pending is in the direction of cutting down the Army, it seems to me that its necessity or propriety is not very obvious. If this section be adopted there will no provision for the employment of any person to do the washing necessary for the soldiers. I hope gentlemen on the other side who usually plead on behalf of "poor soldiers" and "poor" women and "poor" people generally will vote to strike out this section.

There is one other suggestion that occurs to me. I admit that it is a little difficult to construe this section; and I would like the gentleman in charge of the bill to tell us whether or not it will admit of this construction—that it will allow laundresses to accompany each troop or company of soldiers, provided they will marry soldiers.

I think perhaps that is the fair construction of the section, that if they will submit to marry soldiers they may still accompany the troops.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I think the gentleman from Ohio is quite as able to construe marriage as the chairman of the sub-committee.

Mr. BANNING. One word, Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken. I wish to read the opinion of General Sherman on this subject. The General of the Army advises that this be done, and all other Army officers advise it be done, that thereby they will get rid of a class now injurious to the service. The bill provides that none shall be taken up until their husbands' term of service shall have expired. General Marcy, Inspector-General of the Army, recommends very earnestly that this be done as it will be a saving of over $200,000. This section makes a reduction of that much.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 86.

So the committee refused to strike the section out.

The Clerk read the twenty-seventh section, as follows:

SEC. 27. That the grade of company wagoner in the Army is hereby abolished, and the enlisted men now holding that position will be classed as privates.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on that section. I do not see where it reduces expenditures. I make the point only because we have no right to declare by law that a man who enlisted in one capacity shall be held as enlisted in another and quite a different capacity. I make the point of order that this does not retrench expenditures, but merely changes the name of company wagoner to that of an enlisted private soldier. On that score it changes the law, and, not reducing expenditures, is out of order.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, this is done upon the recommendation of the Department and of many Army officers. It is thought that it will be of a great saving to the service. It will give one additional enlisted man to every company. I do not know if it reduces expenditures, but I hope objection will be withdrawn and the section will be allowed to stand for the good of the service.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think it is just to a man who enlisted as company wagoner to be put into the ranks as a private soldier. This does that, and for that reason I avail myself of my right to raise the question of order that the section may be ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point of order well taken, and the section is ruled out.

The Clerk read section 28, as follows:

SEC. 28. That all acts and parts of acts authorizing adjutants and quartermasters to be extra lieutenants be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That the officers now holding said positions shall not be displaced from the grades of first or second lieutenants, respectively, as now held, but assigned, without prejudice to their rank, to the first vacancies occurring among the lieutenants of their respective grades.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment being offered to that section, the Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read section 29, as follows:

SEC. 29. That hereafter, in time of peace, all military headquarters, except Army headquarters, shall be established and maintained at points where the Government own buildings or barracks, within the several departments and divisions, and in such buildings or barracks, and not otherwise. And in no case shall rents be paid or allowed for any military headquarters.

Mr. HARRISON rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to reserve the point of order on that section, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to move to strike that section out. I think it is liable to the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order and I will state it. The establishment of Army headquarters as provided in this section does not carry on its face any retrenchment, but on the contrary may lead to great and wasteful extravagance. If we are compelled to have headquarters established wherever we have buildings already it might increase transportation and communication to places where the Army is needed far more than around the headquarters. It does not appear at all by the bill that our Army headquarters established where we now have posts will conduce to economy. I therefore make the point of order that it changes the law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, Mr. Chairman, the logic by which these points of order have been supported is utterly and totally incomprehensible to me. It may be because of natural obtuseness or because I am suffering from a severe cold in my head. [Laughter.] I am astonished to hear a man say that Army headquarters have anything to do with transportation.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not Army headquarters.

Mr. BRAGG. Or department headquarters. The supplies of the Army are not bought at Army headquarters. The purchasing officers buy at New York, Boston, Chicago, and Saint Louis. They buy irrespective of where Army headquarters are. The gentleman understands that perfectly well.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman pleases, I do not refer so much to transportation of supplies as to the fact of transportation of officers and mileage resulting from that. By being constantly compelled to send them off, if you establish headquarters at the old post where the Government now owns buildings, which are now far away from active operations, you would be constantly increasing the cost of mileage in thus sending them from point to point. It would, besides, be a great inconvenience in administration. There would be an increase of mileage far beyond any possible saving.

Mr. BRAGG. I submit there is nothing at all in that point. The gentleman from Ohio is sufficiently familiar with the manner of doing business on reflection to know that it does not apply here at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. I presume that the last two lines of the section would be in order, that which prohibits the payment of rent, but that is disconnected from the remaining portion of the section, and I make my point of order on the first five lines which certainly are liable to the point that it changes the law without retrenching expenditures.

Mr. BRAGG. I am astonished to see the gentleman weaken so soon on his proposition. Does he suppose that the headquarters at Saint Paul would send to Boston to buy goods? I apprehend the goods are bought by purchasing agents irrespective of the places where headquarters are stationed. The purchasing agent in Chicago, the quartermaster who buys all the goods there, has his office and place distinct and separate from Army headquarters.

I desire to say further, that if points of order have got so fine that you can make the point of order on one part of a section without regarding the section as a whole, they are reduced to a fineness of point that I think even the chairman of the committee will not be able to see them in that light.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not require any light but very pale moonlight to make points of order on this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me to conclude my remarks?

Mr. GARFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had got through.

Mr. BRAGG. The reason this is in the interest of economy is twofold. The Government pays to-day $66,000 for the offices that are used by the general and other staffs in the several cities of the Union. They pay in the city of New York where there are barracks in the harbor——

Mr. FOSTER. But they are occupied.

Mr. BRAGG. Not occupied in such a manner but that they can be at once converted into use, and the officers say they would prefer to go there. They pay in Chicago for General Sheridan's headquarters in the neighborhood of $10,000; they pay $500 a month for the use of one floor of the Union building; and the quartermaster who purchases and the commissary who purchases do not room there at all. The object is to make the General and his staff live in Government buildings, and that will save on this bill $66,000 a year.

The gentleman from Chicago is fearful this may interfere with purchases in Chicago, or that it will be in the interest of Saint Louis. There is nothing in that. The man who buys is disconnected with headquarters. He is the business man of the department, who buys where he can buy the cheapest and where there are the best facilities of transportation.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will find on examination that if this provision is enacted into law it will require a very large expenditure of money to make the Government buildings the quarters for these officers to occupy. I apprehend there is not to-day a single building owned in the United States as officers' quarters but what is now occupied.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] suggests that probably the last two lines of the section are not subject to the point of order. I think, sir, that even that clause is entirely subject to the point of order. If in Chicago and New York too much rent is paid, cut down the rent; make the officers rent less costly buildings. But if you say they cannot have their quarters in any but governmental buildings you will be forced to send the Army to headquarters where there are buildings, where there are barracks, when probably it is not a fit place for them. The result would be we would soon be required to build or repair barracks in other places.

Now, it certainly does not show retrenchment when you say they shall not rent. If they have got to have a building and cannot rent, then they must build or they must buy. It may be largely in the interest of economy to rent and it may be largely tending toward extravagance to be forced to build or to buy.

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KNOTT. Is the gentleman aware of any provision of law that prevents an Army officer from renting at his own expense a building if he is not satisfied with the Government building?

Mr. HARRISON. He may rent at his own expense. But that is not what I am talking about. It says here:

In no case shall rents be paid or allowed for any military headquarters.

Mr. EDEN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. I ask my colleague if when we come to the sundry civil bill he will recollect what he now states, that it is a great deal cheaper to rent than to build?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, I am a business man; and when you can show me there is economy in building then I am for building; but I am not one of those who always cry "economy!" "economy!" when there is simply an appearance of but no real economy at the bottom.

Mr. COOK. The whole amount paid by the Government for the rent of officers' quarters last year was $272,902. The whole rent paid in the city of Washington was $65,400. I have a statement here taken from information furnished by the Departments as to the rent, showing this enormous amount. In New York they pay $46,000. The statement shows the amount that is paid in every city for rents. And in many of these places there are public buildings, barracks, grounds, and offices that could be occupied by the officers of the Army and their families where the most enormous rents are paid. The $65,000 paid in Washington City would rent any hotel in this city, not for one year merely, but perhaps for two or three years at the present decline in value. Why, sir, it would be cheaper to rent Willard's Hotel and put them all together.

Mr. McCOOK. I have talked with a good many Army officers upon the proposition now before the House, and I never heard any officer in the Army, no matter what his rank or grade may be, who has not said that he would cheerfully and willingly, at any point that he was detailed to, take the quarters assigned to him under the regulations of the Army in preference to the present system.

In the city of Washington, where the butterflies of fashion fly around, whom gentlemen talk about, when you compute the exact amount they have to pay for commutation of their quarters, a colonel could much better take the five rooms to which he would be entitled at a barracks or fort, and would go to them cheerfully, because then nothing would be expected of him but to live in his quarters quietly like any other soldier; but so long as the Government neglects to erect barracks that these officers are entitled to and should receive, they should receive the full amount of commutation, if that expression is a proper one, for quarters. Take the case of the city of New York. There are no barracks there. There are sixty or eighty officers there on duty who are absolutely indispensable to discharge the duties of the headquarters of the Army of the Atlantic, which General Hancock commands. Under this law you would send General Hancock to Governor's Island, which is nothing but a recruiting station, or down to Fort Hamilton, where there are no quarters sufficient for the purpose. If gentlemen really want economy and to cut off all this so-called extravagance of paying for quarters, let them bring in a bill for the erection of barracks in the different places where it is essential to have officers.

Sir, while I do not claim especially to speak for the Army, and while I do not wish to be considered as the champion of the Army, I will pledge my word that there is not one officer in the Army, from the General down, who would not rather occupy quarters in Government buildings in quiet and peace and not be annoyed by these constant investigations as to his private fortune, where he buys his coal, and how he disposes of his oats. These men are entitled to all the consideration possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to suggest that this argument has drifted into the merits of the question, and the Chair desires to hear members now solely upon the question of order. The Chair will afterward hear their arguments on the question whether this section should be retained or not.

Mr. FINLEY. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that section 29 does not retrench expenditures and does change the law.

Mr. BRAGG. It is understood that the Chair in deciding the point of order upon one section cannot take into consideration any other section. Now upon the section that is now pending the Chair cannot inquire whether there are barracks at the stations where the Army officers are detailed, and then the section as it stands shows, as is proved by official reports, that it will reduce the expenses of the department headquarters $66,000. That is a perfect answer to the point of order.

Mr. BANNING. I have an authority on this subject as to whether this law reduces expenses or not, which I think is valuable and I wish to read it; and I hope gentlemen on the other side who think that this is an attack upon the Army will listen to it. The Committee on Military Affairs, with a view to reduce expenditures, asked this question of the General of the Army:

Could not the expenses of the military division headquarters and department headquarters be materially reduced without detriment to the service?

General Sherman answered:

Yes, by requiring them to select a military post within their commands as their headquarters.

He says that this will result in a reduction. They pay now for rent for headquarters in New York $25,000, in Chicago $10,000, and in other cities large amounts, and the General of the Army is of opinion that it will not be detrimental to require military headquarters to be established at places where the United States own buildings or quarters.

Now, one word as to the building of barracks. There is nothing whatever in the argument in regard to that, although it is not a matter for consideration now. We have sixty-one posts that Army officers say are not required for military purposes, and at Newport there are unoccupied buildings belonging to the Government suitable for quarters for officers of the highest rank. The point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. In considering a point of order the Chair cannot take into consideration the effect of a particular enactment as to whether it would prove detrimental to the public service or not. That is not a question for the Chair, but for the House to decide. It seems to the Chair perfectly clear that a provision which would require Army officers to use Government buildings for headquarters is a retrenchment of expenditures. It might be detrimental to the service, but that is not a question for the Chair to decide. This section prohibits the payment of rent for officers' quarters under any circumstances, and it therefore does retrench expenditures, for under the existing law the expenditures are very great for this very purpose. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the section be stricken out.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be very difficult to execute this law if it should become one. Take the case of the general in New York. It would be impossible for him to discharge the duties of his position if he were compelled to move to Governor's Island or to Fort Hamilton. Take the case of the engineer at Toledo; I do not think that there are Government barracks within a hundred miles of him. How is he to make his headquarters in Government buildings? It seems to me to be an utter absurdity. The same argument will apply to all engineers who have charge of river and harbor improvements and the whole thing appears to me to be utterly absurd.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? There is but one engineer headquarters, and it is in Washington. This section applies to departmental and division headquarters.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not say that; it says "military headquarters."

Mr. HARRISON. If we are to have an army at all, we want to have it for use, and we want the officers of the Army to be where they will be of most benefit to the Army and to the country. This section provides that no rents shall be allowed or paid for military headquarters, regardless of the fact whether the Government has barracks or not at places most suitable for headquarters; and therefore it requires military headquarters to be established where the Government happens to have barracks. Now that may be policy, but it seems to me it is exceedingly doubtful policy. Let the Army bill be so framed that extravagant prices shall not be paid for military headquarters. I do not object to that; I am in favor of economy. But let the headquarters be established where in the opinion of the military authorities they will be most effective.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BANNING. Does not the General of the Army favor the establishment of all headquarters in Government barracks? And is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] better able to say where headquarters should be than General Sherman?

Mr. HARRISON. No; but I am willing to leave it to General Sherman.

Mr. BANNING. Here is his opinion upon the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let him carry out his opinion, without our interfering with it. He has authority to establish these headquarters where he pleases. The Army is under the control of its head; and if General Sherman wants headquarters established at Leavenworth or Rock Island or anywhere else, let him give orders to that effect.

Why are military headquarters established at New York or Chicago? Because it is believed by the General of the Army that it is for the best interest of the service to have them there. Therefore when the gentleman quotes General Sherman, I would say that on general principles, believing General Sherman competent to determine the matter, military headquarters should be where he says.

If you establish the principle of building barracks and Government buildings where military headquarters are established, it will inevitably result in a great expenditure to the Government. Military headquarters are now established at Chicago, where the Lieutenant-General of the Army is in communication with every part of the United States by means of railroads that diverge from that city in every direction, as the nerves from the brain. Is it proposed to send him to some isolated place without means of communication, and to which you will have to build a railroad or establish a telegraph line? Let the General of the Army exercise his discretion in the matter, and let Congress say to him that he must cut down his expenses; that he shall not hire rooms in elegant gilt-corniced buildings, but he must get them in buildings that are commodious, and which can be had at cheap rates in cities as well as elsewhere. You can rent a commodious building in the city of Chicago to-day at a less price than it would take to paint and whitewash your barracks at Leavenworth. If you require your headquarters to be established at some fort or some place where the Government has some buildings or barracks, it will result in an increased expense to the Government and will not be of benefit to the Army.

The question was upon the motion to strike out section 29.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SCHLEICHER] desires to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I will offer the amendment after the vote is taken on striking out the section. If the section is stricken out it will do away with the necessity of my amendment.

Mr. BANNING. I want to explain. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] says that General Sherman has the fixing of these headquarters. He has not the fixing of these headquarters. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] He says that they should be removed from the cities. The Secretary of War and the President establish the headquarters, and one of them is in Chicago to be sure. Now what is the necessity for that? Is there any war there?

Mr. HARRISON. I will tell the gentleman why. It is because you can save $150,000 a year in the one item of purchasing supplies.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Chairman, [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I have no doubt that is the difficulty with the gentleman. If headquarters are retained at Chicago there will be rent paid for buildings and money paid out for supplies which would not be paid there if headquarters were not established there. That is the trouble with the gentleman. But the General of the Army says the headquarters should not be there; that they should be taken away from there and taken away from New York, and that the general officers should be kept with the troops, where they are needed.

Mr. McCOOK. Where does the General of the Army make that statement about headquarters in New York?

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. HARRISON, to strike out section 29; and upon a division there were—ayes 81, noes 97.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. McCOOK called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. HARRISON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 80, noes 92.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move to amend the section by adding to it the following;

Provided, That this section shall not apply to military headquarters of troops in Texas or on the Indian frontier.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I would like to add "or anywhere else." [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I have no argument to make against the provision of the section in regard to headquarters where the troops are not in active service. But where the troops are in active service the location of headquarters should be directed by the military commander. In addition to that, I will say that in times of peace the question of headquarters is not to be determined by the same rules that would apply in time of war. In time of war the rules of peace do not apply.

Now, sir, in Texas there are no Government buildings whatever except in San Antonio, where the buildings are used for quartermaster and commissary stores; and if they were used for officers' headquarters it would be necessary to pitch those stores into the street. An officer there, if not allowed to rent headquarters, would have to keep them under the shade of a tree in good weather and under an umbrella in bad weather. I understand that the gentleman managing this bill is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, and I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs also assents to it.

Mr. BANNING. I understood the gentleman from Texas to say that there were no quarters in Texas; if that be the case, I think the amendment ought to be assented to.

Mr. MARSH. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BANNING] knows very well that there are barracks in Texas, the Ringold Barracks and others.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SCHLEICHER, there were—ayes 75, noes 42; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCHLEICHER and Mr. MARSH were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 45, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That the officers of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their respective designations:

The General, $13,500 a year;
The Lieutenant-General, $11,000 a year;
A major-general, $7,500 a year;
A brigadier-general, $5,500 a year;
A colonel, $3,500 a year;
A lieutenant-colonel, $3,000 a year;
A major, $2,500 a year;
A captain, (mounted,) $2,000 a year;
A captain, (not mounted,) $1,800 a year;
An adjutant, $1,800 a year;
A regimental quartermaster, $1,800 a year;
A first lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,600 a year;
A first lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,500 a year;
A second lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,500 a year;
A second lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,400 a year
A chaplain, $1,500 a year;
A storekeeper, $1,800 a year.

The pay fixed and provided for in this section for the several grades respectively named shall be in full for all pay and allowances of every kind and nature heretofore given or allowed by law or Army regulations, except as hereinafter provided in this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, Mr. REAGAN, Mr. HALE, and others addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] representing the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to reserve any point of order until I see what the gentleman from New York proposes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to amend by adding after the word "year," at the end of the clause fixing the pay of storekeepers, the words "except the storekeeper at the armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, who shall receive the pay and allowances of a major."

I will briefly explain this amendment. In the bill we propose to reduce the salary of the military storekeepers, including of course the one at Springfield. There are many millions of dollars' worth of Government property at the Springfield armory, and this property is in the custody of the military storekeeper, who has been there for many years and who has now the rank of major. It would be unjust to reduce him to a level with the other storekeepers who have very minor duties to perform. The object of the amendment is to protect him from injustice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by striking out all after line 2 down to and including line 12, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

The General, $10,000 a year;
The Lieutenant-General, $8,000 a year;
A major-general, $6,000 a year;
A brigadier-general, $4,500 a year;
A colonel, $3,000 a year;
A lieutenant-colonel, $2,700 a year;
A major, $2,400 a year.

Mr. Chairman, I am always in favor of giving a just and proper compensation to all public officers; but I believe that the compensation paid to different classes of officers ought to be regulated by something like equity, having reference to the service they are to perform. I assume it to be a fact that the pay authorized by this bill is disproportionate to the compensation of any other employés of the United States Government or of any of the States. If this be true, (and I assert that it is true,) then it is unjust and improper to pay such salaries. So far as my knowledge extends, no officers of any army in the world are paid as much as this bill proposes to pay ours. This bill proposes to give the General of the Army $13,500. In addition to this he is allowed his rations, his quarters, his fuel.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Oh, no; those allowances are all cut off.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; then he will receive $13,500 a year. The Lieutenant-General, under this bill, is to have $11,000 a year. Now, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who is obliged to do in one year more work than both of these military officers do in three years, and who occupies a far more responsible position, receives less than the lieutenant-general. A major-general, under this bill, will receive $7,500, and a brigadier-general $5,500. In other words, a brigadier-general receives more compensation than a THURMAN, a CONKLING, a BAYARD, or an EDMUNDS receives as a Senator of the United States; yet no one will assert that all the brigadier-generals put together do as much work in any one year in time of peace as any one of these great Senators. No one will affirm that there is any comparison between the importance of the duties devolving upon a Senator and those performed by a brigadier-general in time of peace. I assume, therefore, that such discriminations in the compensation of public servants are unjust and odious to public criticism.

Consider the salaries of the governors of the various States of the Union. In very few of the States does the governor get as much as $5,000; the majority of such officers receive only $4,000 or less. I am of course speaking of these as somewhat analogous cases. Is the governor of a State entitled to less compensation than a brigadier-general, when we consider the services performed by each?

In the English army the general receives $10,043, while we propose to give, under this bill, $13,500. The lieutenant-general in the British army receives $6,693, while we propose to give $11,000 to an officer holding the corresponding position. A major-general in the English army receives $3,344; we propose to give to an officer of the same rank $7,500. A brigadier-general in the English army receives $2,516; we propose to give $5,500.

What is the compensation of officers of the Prussian army, which carried its banners successfully into the city of Paris? We find that a general in the Prussian army receives $2,900 a year; a lieutenant-general, $2,900; a major-general, $2,115; a brigadier-general, $1,885; and so on down to majors, who receive $674.25.

Now compare the pay of our Army officers with the pay of British officers, who, I think, are the highest-paid military officers in the world except our own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RIDDLE. I take the floor, and yield my time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I am obliged to my friend from Tennessee for his courtesy.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, it will not be assumed when I submit these remarks, I do so in hostility to the Army or any officer in it. I feel as much the necessity of an efficient Army as any one does. I feel as great a desire to have efficient officers properly paid as any one does; but when I offered these amendments I had some reference to the duty which I owe to a portion of people I represent upon this floor. I have some reference to that exercise of discretion and right reason which devolves upon every one who is charged with the management of the expenditure of money drawn by taxation from the people. It is a specialty of our system that we are to have no privileged class. If the present compensation with allowance to Army officers does not constitute them a privileged class, then I do not know what name to call them.

I would do nothing unjust to any officer of the Army, but in times like these when we see the entire country suffering under the extreme financial depression and embarassment, it seems to me this is not the time for the Representatives of the people to indulge in any fanciful ideas of extravagant salaries to particular officers of the General Government. It is very easy for us to indulge fancy and sentimental ideas of extravagance at the expense of others if we choose to do so, but it is quite otherwise than fanciful or sentimental to the people already overburdened, who have to foot the bills. The time is when we should bring every expenditure of this Government down to a just and reasonable basis. I am animated only by a desire to see the compensation of these officers fixed at a proper rate, and if there is any reason existing why they should be as proposed in this bill, I should like to hear that reason. If there exists any good reason why the high pay of these officers should not be reduced to the amount mentioned in my amendment, I would be very glad to hear it.

Mr. McCOOK. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. REAGAN. In a moment. Mr. Chairman, if there exists one reason why the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States should receive a much lower rate of compensation than the General or Lieutenant-General of the Army, I should like to know it. If there exists any reason why a brigadier-general should in time of peace be paid more than a member of the Senate or House of Representatives, I should like to know it. If there is any reason why a certain Army officer in the nature of things should get a higher compensation than the governor or chief-justice of a State, I should like to know it. If there exists, on the contrary, no such reason, why, then, shall we continue to make such extravagant rates of pay and allowance to these Army officers, extravagant in proportion to the service required to be rendered by them, and as compared with the pay and services rendered by other officers of this Government.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish simply to ask the gentleman from Texas if there is any reason why we should retain our own salary at the present figure of $5,000 a year and kick and cuff the Army around by attempting to reduce their pay?

Mr. REAGAN. I am sorry the gentleman from New York asks such a question as that. The men who represent the people in the Senate and House of Representatives, whose votes affect to the utmost the vital interests of this whole country, whose votes here may influence the welfare of this whole country, are to have their pay put down to $5,000, and the gentleman from New York asks us to give $13,500 a year to the General; and $11,000 a year to the Lieutenant-General; and $7,500 to major-generals; and $5,500 to brigadier-generals, who discharge merely the administrative duty of executing orders issued to them by the authority of the War Department, paying enormous salaries as compared with the salaries paid to the civil officers of this Government, and this the gentleman from New York calls "kicking and cuffing the Army about." The only injustice here is injustice to the tax-payer in this Congress allowing such high compensation to these Army officers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COX, of New York, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 3121) for the relief of Numis H. Coverdale;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 151) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Society of the Sons of St. George, established at Philadelphia, the sum of $1,440.25 in gold, being the amount paid by the society upon a colossal statue of St. George and the Dragon;

An act (H. R. No. 3080) granting a pension to Warren F. Wood;

An act (H. R. No. 1815) granting a pension to Florence V. Moore;

An act (H. R. No. 3113) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily H. Lyford;

An act (H. R. No. 3107) granting a pension to Louisa J. Guthrie and others;

An act (H. R. No. 2028) granting a pension to Isabella Cassidy;

An act (H. R. No. 1949) granting a pension to Benjamin C. Webster;

An act (H. R. No. 439) granting a pension to Jonathan R. Pilman;

An act (H. R. No. 97) granting a pension to William A. Miller;

An act (H. R. No. 941) granting a pension to George Grove;

An act (H. R. No. 3569) granting a pension to Ovid H. Clark;

An act (H. R. No. 532) granting a pension to John Frey;

An act (H. R. No. 3730) granting a pension to Elizabeth Reese, widow of John Reese, a deceased soldier;

An act (H. R. No. 3114) providing for an increase of pension to Charles H. Day;

An act (H. R. No. 531) restoring the name of Thomas W. Brown to the pension-roll;

An act (H. R. No. 300) for the relief of Dudley A. Fish, of Bucyrus, Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 8) for the relief of Othniel P. Hollis, of the Soldiers' Home, Augusta, Maine;

An act (H. R. No. 388) for the relief of William Roylston, late private Company D, First Regiment Tennessee Light Artillery;

An act (H. R. No. 3731) granting a pension to Rebecca T. Scott, widow of Major John B. Scott, late of the United States Army;

An act (H. R. No. 3098) granting a pension to Joseph L. Young, late a private Company C, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 490) granting a pension to Rose Miller, widow of Reason F. Miller, deceased, late a private in Company E, One hundred and twenty-third Illinois Infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 3570) granting an increase of pension to John Murphy, late private in Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 3824) to authorize the survey of the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, in the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 3568) granting a pension to Mary T. Thompson, widow of William Thompson, late second lieutenant Company E, Twelfth New York Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1975) granting a pension to William Stafford, of South Yarmouth, Massachusetts;

An act (H. R. No. 1809) granting a pension to William Shultis, late of Company K, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 524) granting a pension to Lemuel Lawrence, late second lieutenant Company B, Sixth Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2026) granting a pension to Miss Julia S. W. Evans, widow of Itenry D. Evans, late first lieutenant Company B, Thirteenth Missouri Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 3105) granting a pension to Ruth Isabella Naylor, widow of Captain Charles Naylor, of the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers in the Mexican war;

An act (H. R. No. 3115) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Totten, widow of the late Commodore Benjamin J. Totten, United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 3123) extending the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997 of the Revised Statutes, inclusive, to the port of Bath, in the State of Maine; and

An act (H. R. No. 251) for the relief of James J. Waring, of Savannah, Georgia.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the argument of the gentleman from Texas at all it is that he compares the salaries paid in this country with the salaries paid to British officers, and he goes on further to say that a CONKLING, an EDMUNDS, and a THURMAN get no more than a brigadier-general in the Army. Let me put it in another way, that a REAGAN, and a FOSTER, and a FINLEY, and a SPRINGER get as much pay as a brigadier-general. Let us put it in that way.

Mr. BANNING. But you do not get it, for you only get $5,000 and a brigadier-general gets $5,500, while the Lieutenant-General gets more than twice as much and the General nearly three times as much.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me carry out the parallel. A member of the English Parliament gets nothing at all. He gets no pay whatever; but as I am told by a friend near me he has on the contrary to pay for his seat. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas should make an attack upon the salaries of the General and Lieutenant-General of the Army. No one contends the salary is not a large one, but the compensation was fixed for distinguished services rendered in putting down the rebellion by those distinguished officers. It was for that reason. We do not need these officers at all. There is no necessity for General or Lieutenant-General, and their offices expire at the death of the present incumbents. We gave them this compensation for their distinguished services during the war and nothing else.

Mr. BANNING. Does the gentleman know that the General's salary has been reduced since it was first given?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not.

Mr. BANNING. Then the gentleman has not examined the matter carefully.

Mr. FOSTER. The salary has not been touched, but the allowances have been; and the difference is not much. And I am sorry that a gentleman who was connected with the confederate government should move to reduce the salaries especially of these two officers.

In 1860 the members of this House received $3,000 a year. In 1878 we received $5,000. I have not heard the gentleman from Texas, or any other economist on this floor, offer to reduce the salaries of members of this House. But when it comes to departmental clerks, to officers of the Government, and especially of the Army, then at once these gentlemen become economical and want to reduce their salaries. I tell the gentleman from Texas the people of this country will consider this all cant unless you take hold of your own salaries and reduce them and then go at the rest.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the gentleman if he is not less particular as to the salaries of Congressmen since the redistricting of Ohio?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman, after putting his question, should not go away. I desire him to come back within the bar. I want to tell the gentleman from Illinois that my district is not stolen yet.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer a pro forma amendment.

The gentleman from Ohio took occasion to say he regretted I should propose any modification of the salaries of Army officers, especially of the General and Lieutenant-General, inasmuch as I was somewhat connected with the confederate government. Why, sir, I stand here upon this floor as a Representative of the people, under the same constitution and laws as any other Representative upon this floor, and my people having the same interests and rights, and being under the same constitution and laws as those who are represented by the gentleman from Ohio, and as their Representative I have just the same sort of rights and privileges upon this floor that he has. If I do not make this motion, or some one else on this side, it is not very likely to be done by that gentleman and those who act with him.

If salaries are out of all proportion and unreasonable is it an offense against political principle or personal duty that I should rise in my place and ask that a wrong be corrected, that an unreasonable thing be converted to a reasonable thing? I trust that gentlemen have a better and higher ground for meeting me than by taunting me with having been a confederate. That is not a good reply, sir, to reason.

I stand here under the Constitution and the laws, representing a portion of the American people, charged upon my oath to discharge my duty under the Constitution and laws as I understand it. That I expect, sir, to do regardless of the taunts of gentlemen who have no better argument than to refer to such things as this when reforms, just and necessary reforms in the interest of the Government and the people of the United States, are proposed.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the officers of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their repective designations: The General, $12,000 a year; the Lieutenant-General, $8,000 a year; a major-general, $6,000 a year; a brigadier-general, $5,000 a year; a colonel, $3,500 a year; a lieutenant-colonel, $3,000 a year; a major, $2,600 a year; a captain, (mounted,) $1,800 a year; a captain, (not mounted,) $1,620 a year.

An adjutant, the pay of his grade mounted.

A regimental quartermaster, the pay of his grade mounted.

A first lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,500 a year.

A first lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,400 a year.

A second lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,400 a year.

A second lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,300 a year

A chaplain, $1,400 a year.

An ordnance storekeeper, $1,800 a year.

The pay fixed and provided for in this section for the several grades respectively named shall be in full for all pay and allowances of every kind and nature heretofore given or allowed by law or Army regulations, except as hereinafter provided in this act.

Mr. BRAGG. The substitute which I offer provides the pay as agreed upon by the majority of the Military Committee. I offer it as the action of the majority of the Military Committee.

Mr. REAGAN. As this amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin comes with the indorsement of the Military Committee, I accept it as a substitute for mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in the consideration of appropriation bills the clauses are invariably treated as sections; that is, each clause is separately considered. It is usual to submit an amendment to each clause as presented. The Chair will first put the question on the amendment to the first clause of the bill as accepted by the gentleman from Texas. The Clerk will read the pending clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the officers of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their respective designations:

The General, $13,500 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposes to strike out "$13,500" and insert "$12,000."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I hope that the salaries fixed in the bill will be adopted by the House. It was stated by a gentleman who spoke a few moments ago, and it has been several times stated in the course of the debate on this bill, that the salaries of officers of the Army of the United States are higher than those of officers of any other army in the world. This, sir, is a great mistake. Their salaries are not higher than those in a good many other armies as I will show by a reference to the figures which I find in Upton's work on the Armies of the World. He states:

The following tables show the pay and allowances of the commander-in-chief in India, and also the principal staff officers:

Commander-in-chief	100,000 rupees, equal to	$50,800 00
Military secretary	18,000 rupees, equal to	9,000 00
Adjutant-general	36,000 rupees, equal to	18,009 00
Deputy adjutant-general	22,560 rupees, equal to	11,280 00
Assistant adjutant-general	15,725 rupees, equal to	7,862 50
Quartermaster-general	30,000 rupees, equal to	15,000 00
Inspector-general of artillery	28,024 rupees, equal to	14,012 00
General commanding division	38,564 rupees, equal to	19,284 00

Officers of the staff corps receive the following monthly pay:

Lieutenant-colonel	827 rupees, 14 annas, equal to	$413 92
Major	640 rupees, 14 annas, equal to	320 42
Captain	374 rupees, 1 annas, 6 pices, equal to	187 04
Lieutenant	225 rupees, 12 annas, equal to	112 86

The above is the pay proper of officers employed and unemployed.

In addition nearly every appointment in India carries with it staff pay and allowances equal and frequently exceeding the officers' pay proper.

A colonel commanding a brigade of horse artillery receives 1,358 rupees per month, and command allowance of 400; making $879 per month.

A lieutenant-colonel commanding a regiment of British cavalry receives 1,037 rupees per month, with a command allowance of 400 rupees; equal to $718.50.

A lieutenant-colonel commanding a regiment of British infantry receives 1,002 rupees per month, and a command allowance of 400 rupees; equal to $701.

The commandant of a regiment of native cavalry receives 640 rupees, 14 annas per month, and a command allowance of 700 rupees; equal to $670.

The monthly pay of a commandant of a native infantry regiment is $620 42.

The following table shows, in rupees, annas, and pices—the currency of India—the monthly pay and allowances of a native regiment of infantry:

The pay of a private upon his first enlistment in our Army only amounts to $14.20 per month. Now, sir, it has been said that the officers of the Navy are not as well paid as the officers of the Army. A communication has been sent to me which I will have read, accompanied by a table furnishing the figures and showing the difference between the pay of Army and Navy officers.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1878.

DEAR GENERAL: In Mr. HEWITT'S speech on introducing the Army appropriation bill, May 18, 1878, he submits two tables, which are to be found on page 20 of the RECORD of May 21, showing the comparative pay of the Navy and Army according to relative rank.

In the table of Army pay he gives pay and allowances. In the Navy table the allowances are omitted. This is a very unfair statement of the case and gives the impression that Navy officers receive no allowances.

I have taken the trouble to inquire into the matter, and as a result of my inquiries submit herewith a table which shows the highest pay and allowances of officers of the Navy.

This is as fair a statement of the Navy pay and allowances as is that of the Army as given by Mr. HEWITT.

The accuracy of my statement can, I believe, be substantiated by numerous witnesses acquainted with the facts.

It is notorious that the quarters of Navy officers at their stations, ashore and afloat, are far superior to those of the Army. I am informed at all northern yards their quarters are heated by steam at the expense of the United States; that gas is supplied in the same manner.

The following statement has been furnished me, showing the pay and allowances of a commodore in command of a navy-yard:

Pay	$4,000 00
Quarters	1,000 00
Fuel	308 00
Furniture	1,000 00
Lights	40 00
One steward	498 00
One cook	438 00
Two waiters	392 00
One lodge-boy	156 00
One coxswain	487 50
Ten men for boats' crew	1,860 00
One gardener	1,000 00
Total	11,369 50

The matter of prize money is very important, and should be taken into consideration. It would be useful to Congress and to the country to know just how much prize-money has been paid to Navy officers. This information can doubtless be obtained by calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to report each officer by names and rank who has received prize money since 1860, and the amount.

During the war, when gold was at a premium of 200 to 240, Army officers received pay in currency, at the same time all Navy officers outside of the United States received their pay in gold.

These are some of the considerations which should, I think, receive due weight in comparing the pay and allowances of the two services.

Hon. A. S. WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. This communication is accompanied by the following statement of the comparative organizations and pay of the Army and the Navy:

Gentlemen in stating that the officers of the Navy were not as well paid as those of the Army neglected to include in the pay of the naval officers their allowances. I have here also a table containing the statement of the pay of the Marine Corps, in the bill which recently passed this House without objection, which I submit for the consideration of the House, as follows:

Rank.	Number.	Marine Corps.	Army.
Colonel	2	$4,500	$3,500
Lieutenant-colonel	2	4,000	3,000

Total	80

Section 1612 Revised Statutes gives the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of like grade in the infantry of the Army. Not an officer of this corps has seen sea service in his present rank above the grade of captain.

RETIRED NAVY OFFICERS.

1 brigadier-general	$4,125
2 lieutenant-colonel	3,000
3 majors, each	2,500
1 assistant quartermaster	2,100
3 captains, each	1,485
1 first lieutenant	1,125
2 second lieutenants, each	1,050

I can see no reason why the officers of the Marine Corps, who spend nine-tenths of their time in the barracks and send only one-tenth of their men upon sea duty, should have larger pay than officers of corresponding rank in the regular Army. I do not want to say anything against the present pay of the Marine Corps; I do not think it is too high, but I do not see why if we reduce the pay of the Army the pay of the Marine Corps should not be reduced correspondingly. The officers of the Army are willing to have their pay reduced corresponding to any reduction that may be made in the pay of civil officers, or officers of other arms of service, but they do object to having the Army made the butt in this House for the reduction of pay when no other reduction is thought of in other branches of service.

Mr. BANNING. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Michigan says that the Army officers object to this reduction. Now, sir, I hold in my hand the testimony of the first officer in the Army of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. The gentleman did not understand me to say that they objected to a reduction of pay. I said that they had no objection to a reduction corresponding to the reduction in the salaries of civil officers.

Mr. BANNING. I hold in my hand the testimony of the first officer in the Army, taken February 4, 1876. The question was put to him:

What reduction, if any, can be made in the pay of the officers of the Army, without detriment to the efficiency of the service?

He answered:

I think the present salary bill for the Army is just and liberal, that is, supposing it to be of lasting duration and it will not be materially altered until the currency comes to the gold standard, when all salaries could be reduced from 15 to 20 per cent.

That was the testimony of General Sherman. It was upon that testimony that the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress reported a bill reducing the salaries as the bill of General Bragg now reduces them, because the House by the passage of the silver bill and other wise legislation this session have made a "greenback" equal to a gold dollar.

Mr. FOSTER. We have.

Mr. BANNING. We have made them equal, and my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] insists upon giving General Sherman more than he thought he was entitled to under that bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us see about that.

Mr. BANNING. My colleague must wait; please sit down. If we were to reduce his salary as he said then it might be done, supposing that a gold dollar and a greenback became equal, we should reduce it to $9,133 instead of $13,000, to which we now propose to reduce it.

Mr. FOSTER. He did not mean that.

Mr. BANNING. I will not let my colleague be guilty of saying that a distinguished officer of the Army ever said what he did not mean.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the General of the Army said himself that his salary might be reduced 15 or 20 per cent., and also the salaries of all the officers of the Army when the greenback and the gold dollar became equal in value. Why should my colleague object to a reduction now? The gentleman says that these offices were created in the nature of pensions to these distinguished officers and that we expect no service from them.

Mr. Chairman, I say these salaries we are now paying these officers, $18,000, and $13,000, and $10,000, and $9,000, are too high, when labor is going without employment, when men are hungry; when, according to a distinguished gentleman from New York, thousands and tens of thousands go to bed hungry every night or would do so but for the charity of the good men of the land; it is all wrong to pay such salaries and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not reduce your own salary?

Mr. BANNING. Sir, my salary is $2,500 less than you fixed it in the Congress before I came here. When I came here I made haste to reduce it. Now, if you want to reduce it, as you are going out of Congress, it is a good time to do it, and I will help you.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall have company.

Mr. BANNING. Ah, you will have company! You thought that a long time ago.

Mr. FOSTER. I have had company all the time.

Mr. BANNING. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that these salaries are too large; they are out of all proportion. They were established when the currency of the country was 30, 40, or 50 per cent. less valuable than it is now. Gentlemen have no right to stand up here and resist the reduction of these large salaries at a time when the purchasing power of the money that they receive is twice what it was when these salaries were established. They ought to be reduced now, and the gentleman who rises in his place and shakes the bloody shirt in the face of a man proposing to reduce these salaries because he served in the confederacy, it appears to me, resorts to an argument that ought to be forgotten. The country is tired of that; they have heard of the bloody shirt often enough and long enough.

Mr. HANNA. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANNING. There is no argument in the bloody shirt any more. What the people want is a reduction of expenditure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. The present salary of the General of the Army, including allowances, is $17,700 a year; the salary proper is $13,500. I agreed in the Committee on Appropriations that the allowance for forage should be stricken out. According to this bill the reduction of the salary of the General of the Army is about 17 per cent., just about the reduction that General Sherman said ought to be applied to the salaries of officers when he gave the testimony to which my colleague refers.

I did not refer to the bloody-shirt business for the purpose of provoking any such reply as my colleague [Mr. BANNING] has seen fit to make. But I want to say this in his presence, that General Sherman has been treated as the savior of his country, so to speak. The allowances which we make to General Sherman are very small compared with the allowances made by Great Britain and other countries to their generals who have rendered no more distinguished services than were rendered by General Sherman.

As I have already said, we do not need a General of the Army or a Lieutenant-General. But to these men who have rendered such distinguished services to their country we have given large salaries for that service. It is a tribute of a grateful country to these men for their distinguished services. Therefore I stated that I regretted that a gentleman who fought on the other side should make this motion to reduce their salaries.

It does seem to me that there is something in the argument which I have tried to urge here that if gentlemen on the other side are so fond of economy then it would be well for them to take hold of their own salaries and reduce them. I press that argument home to them. The people cannot appreciate this cutting and paring down of the compensation of Army officers and of the clerks in our Departments unless members will take hold of their own salaries and reduce them. Your salaries to-day are 66 per cent. greater than were the salaries of members of Congress in 1860.

Mr. TUCKER. Did not the House in the last Congress pass a bill reducing the salaries of members of Congress?

Mr. FOSTER. They passed a bill proposing to reduce the salaries 10 per cent.

Mr. TUCKER. Then have we not endeavored to do the very thing which you say that we ought to do?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the very easiest House to be forced to give up anything that I have ever seen in my life. I remember distinctly that you could not get the yeas and nays on that proposition. My friend from Kentucky, Mr. KNOTT, would not rise to order the yeas and nays; my friend, Mr. MORRISON, would not rise; even COX would not rise. [Great laughter.] Why, sir, it was the most beautiful piece of forcing that I ever witnessed in this Capitol. Even my friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] was the easiest man forced to take his large salary. You could not get the yeas and nays out of that side of the House, although they had one hundred and ninety-two members.

Mr. TUCKER. What does the gentleman say with regard to me?

Mr. FOSTER. I say that you were the easiest man forced to take your high salary that I ever saw in my life.

Mr. TUCKER. I do not know how I was forced.

Mr. FOSTER. You were forced to take your $5,000 a year.

Mr. TUCKER. I voted to reduce my salary.

Mr. FOSTER. But you did not rise to order the yeas and nays on the question.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman say that I did not rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think you did.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. FOSTER. There were only twenty-eight rising. Did the gentleman rise?

Mr. TUCKER. I do not remember.

Mr. FOSTER. My impression is that you did not rise.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am sorry that my voice is in such condition that it is difficult for me to make myself heard; but I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, that when he seeks to check economy by throwing a taunt into the face of any member of this House who feels constrained by his oath of office and his duty to his constituents to offer an amendment in the direction of economy, he commits an offense against good manners, against courtesy, and against comity which it is very hard to palliate.

This proposition to reduce the pay of the General of the Army was made long ago, before the "confederates," as the gentleman terms them, were so strong in this House. It was made by a gallant Union officer, who thought that the pay of the General of the Army was too high, and who made a vigorous effort to have it cut down to the sum of $12,000 a year, which is the sum proposed by the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

I ask the Clerk to read some extracts I have marked in a speech made in the Forty-first Congress by General Logan, on the subject of the reduction of the pay of the General of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Now, in our bill we propose to pay the General of the Army $12,000. Some members who have spoken to me this morning say that we must not cut down the pay of the General of the Army. Well, if Congress does not want to cut down the pay of the General, Congress need not do it; but I would just as soon cut down the pay of one officer of this Government as of another, if that pay is too much. He lives in his own house, which was presented to him, and draws for commutation of his quarters, fuel added, $3,420. The tax-payers will want to understand how this is that they pay so much rent to a man for living in his own house. Now will any man tell me why the General of your Army, and that Army only thirty-seven thousand strong, should receive $19,000 and upward a year, when the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, who has to sit upon the bench day after day and month after month, and labor as hard as a man can, gets only $6,500 and the associate justices $6,000? Your Speaker of the House gets only $8,000, and the Vice-President, who is the next highest officer to the President of the United States, only gets $8,000 a year. The Secretary of War commands the General in theory and only gets less than half the salary.

Now, if you will tell me why a man who does not rank as high, so far as office is concerned, as the Vice-President of the United States, shall receive $19,000 and upward a year while the Vice-President receives but $8,000, I would be glad you would do so; for I can see no good reason for it. It seems to me that $12,000 a year is a fair salary for any man in this country who holds any office lower than President. It is a higher salary than is now given to any officer of the Government except the President.

General Sherman is a man for whom I have always entertained the highest respect as a military man. I am willing he should have all the credit to which he is entitled. But because I am willing to give him credit as a great general, that is no reason why I should tax the wooden-legged and one-armed men, and the widows and orphans of this country, to pay him more than double that which is paid to the Chief-Justice or the Vice-President, when he does not hold so high an office as they do. But if you undertake to touch his salary the little papers down here in the city will pitch into you and say that you want to attack a brave general. Now, I do not want to do any such thing. But I say that the tax-payers are having an attack made on them; and you must look to it that they are not burdened to death for the benefit of a few individuals who ought to be satisfied with their honors and a competency without asking to be surfeited with riches.

Mr. EDEN obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. HEWITT, of New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The remarks just read by the Clerk show that before the gentleman from Texas conceived the ideas which he has submitted to the House General Logan had enunciated on this floor views so nearly like those that the gentleman from Texas has expressed to-day that the latter gentleman might almost be accused of plagiarism.

In view of this statement, how does it happen that the Committee on Appropriations have come into this House with a bill proposing that the pay of the General of the Army be let alone? I will state the reason. Gentlemen will remember that in my opening remarks on this bill I said we did not propose to change the pay proper of the Army, but we did intend to touch the allowances so as to bring the aggregate pay back to the rate which existed in 1860. By the table appended to my remarks it will be found that in 1860 the Lieutenant-General (for we then had no officer known as General) received in the aggregate $14,956.48. Under the provisions of this bill, with the allowance which remains to the General, he will receive $15,000, being only $43 more than was paid to General Scott in 1860.

In 1860 the rate paid to a major-general was $8,698.68. Under this bill the rate paid to a major-general is $8,148, being three or four hundred dollars less than in 1860. A brigadier-general received in 1860 $6,342.40. Under this bill such an officer will get $6,040—only a little less than in 1860.

So, going through the entire list, this bill, as constructed by the Committee on Appropriations, brings the pay of the officers of the Army down to the pay in 1860—a little below, but not much. It seems to me as a just man, that when gold had come back to par, when supplies had come down to the rates which prevailed in 1860, all that we ought to do, all that this country would require us to do, was to bring back the pay of the Army to the rates which existed in 1860, before paper money had inflated the currency and before these unhappy divisions began.

Now, I appeal to gentlemen upon all sides of the House not to allow their passions to be evoked in this discussion, but to try to do justice. If these rates were just in 1860, they are just now. It seems to me we can be guided by a higher reason than by appeals to the "bloody shirt" and to the passions of men. It would better become my friends on the other side, whose interest perhaps I have been protecting to some extent, to address themselves to this subject on the ground of principles, and not upon the ground of prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on the amendment to the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BANNING. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I shall not support the pending amendment for the reason that so far as I have knowledge of the sentiment prevailing throughout the States of the North there is no disposition or desire on the part of anybody to reduce the pay of the General of the Army. I admit that according to our American ideas the salary may be a little large; but it was not with reference to any such consideration that the salary was fixed. It was, as has been well said, on account of the distinguished services rendered by General Sherman to the country; and I think that if the present pay of the General of the Army be attacked and reduced it will be found that the country will not approve the reduction.

There are places where reductions can be made and where they ought to be made, but in this instance by general consent, I believe, the whole country almost unanimously will vote to leave it where it is. I will never consent that the salary of the General or Lieutenant-General shall be cut down at this time, because, as has been said, when these gentlemen die the respective offices which they fill will become vacant, and it is a mere mark of veneration and respect which the people have bestowed on these generals that their pay and rank have been fixed as they are now. As one of the very humble members who followed both of those distinguished officers during the recent war I am perfectly willing to bear my share of the extra burden to leave their salaries at the present rate. I believe that is the general feeling of all.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, when I interrupted the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and used the expression "kicking and cuffing the Army around," I am sure he will acquit me of saying anything personal or offensive to him. And if my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] in speaking and pointing in this direction would seem to suggest that at any time on this floor I have flaunted in his or any other gentleman's face "the bloody shirt," he is very much mistaken.

In regard to the pay of the General of the Army which is provided for in the clause we are now discussing, gentlemen will remember that this committee have in a preceding portion of the bill reduced the staff of the General of the Army both in number and pay. That was reduction No. 1. They come now, in the second place, with a proposition to reduce the pay and allowance of the General of the Army from what it now is. It seems to be a pretty large compensation, amounting I think at present to $17,700, but it is trifling in comparison to the services he has rendered. General Sherman is so well known that it is not necessary for me to enter into any eulogy of him or his services. But I come from the city of New York to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] has referred, where he said many thousands of men are suffering, which by the way I do not believe—I say that I have the honor to represent, as best I may, a district in that city, and I never want to come back to this House if I am to come with the understanding I will ever cast my vote for any reduction of the pay of the General or Lieutenant-General of the Army or the pay of Major-General Hancock. I say that distinctly, and if necessary I will say it to my constituents; and I am profoundly indifferent as to the result to myself, for on this question my convictions are so strong that I cannot surrender them.

But let us look for one moment to the history of this title of General as well as the title of Lieutenant-General. The original act creating the grade of Lieutenant-General was passed May 28, 1798, under the administration of John Adams and in anticipation of hostilities with France. It was conferred upon George Washington as "Commander-in-Chief of all armies raised or to be raised," but this was superseded by act of March 3, 1799, which directed that the Commander-in-Chief should be commissioned by the style of "General." The commission, I believe, was actually issued, but as the war was confined to one or two engagements at sea between frigates the command was not actually exercised by Washington, who died December 14, 1799, about nine months after it had been created.

The grade of Lieutenant-General was revived by act of Congress approved February 15, 1855, and in the language of the statute was "for the purpose of acknowledging the eminent services of a major-general in Mexico, to take rank from the date of such services." This grade was conferred upon Winfield Scott by brevet from the capitulation of Vera Cruz in 1847. Under that brevet assignment, Mr. Chairman, General Scott received up to the date of his death, May 29, 1866, pay amounting annually to $13,771.20, not including anything he may have received from the Quartermaster's Department, which I have been unable to obtain. In addition to this regular annual pay of $13,771.20 he received on the 13th of March, 1857, $30,401.06, under the construction of certain acts increasing his allowance for forage from March, 1849, to February, 1857, and increase for rations from July, 1856 to February, 1857.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCOOK. I thank the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after the death of General Scott the grade was again revived in 1864, as General Grant was commissioned Lieutenant-General March 2, 1864, and General the 25th of July, 1866; General Sherman being made Lieutenant-General the same day; and March 4, 1869, upon the inauguration of Grant as President, he became full General.

Section 1094 Revised Statutes says—

> That when a vacancy occurs in the office of General or Lieutenant General such office shall cease, and all enactments creating or regulating such offices shall, respectively, be held to be repealed.

This being the case, and the offices being created as a recognition of eminent services, we are justified in examining the claims of those holding them when the emoluments are sought to be reduced or when anything in connection with them is brought into discussion. Whatever place may be assigned by the impartial historian to Washington as a great captain, no American, at least, can be found to dispute his title to pre-eminence.

His successor, General Scott, was the hero of two wars. On the Canadian frontier he displayed his ability as a commander, and on the march from the Gulf to the City of Mexico, in our first formidable invasion of a foreign territory, he won the plaudits of the world. Whatever his faults, he was a great soldier and an unflinching patriot, and the country which he served so long and so faithfully will never forget him.

His successors, both of whom attained to the grade created for the Father of his Country, and revived after the suppression of our rebellion, are still living, and the time has not yet come, perhaps, when full justice can be done to them and their services.

One became the leader of a great party, and for eight years occupied the chair of Washington; his equal in military rank and, in my judgment, not inferior to him in patriotism, simplicity of character, and devotion to what he believed to be his duty and the best interests of the country.

The genius and talents of the other are recognized at home and abroad, and it is no exaggeration to say that General Sherman stands to-day in the front rank of the world's generals. His services to the country cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, and any suggestion looking to his humiliation or to depriving him of the pay he now receives will be considered as a blow at him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose when I say what I propose, it will be suggested that I am attempting to draw some parallel between a monarchical and a republican form of government; but I know but one man in the history of the English-speaking people on the earth who, in a military point of view, at all compares with General Sherman. I refer to Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington.

I believe to-day any man who will read carefully his military history during the late war will come to the deliberate conclusion that had it not been for the genius, the courage, and the gallantry of that man, backed by his magnificent Army, the campaign to Atlanta in the presence of such gallant followers as those under Johnston would have proved a failure. I am very sure that military historians on the other side will concede that his campaign to Atlanta and his march to the sea were the boldest in conception and the best in execution of the war.

There is this difference, however, between General Sir Arthur Wellesley and General Sherman: one commanded the British army against a hereditary enemy; the other commanded an American army against an American army. General Wellesley maintained the honor of the flag and the dignity of the empire on a foreign soil and never was compelled to strike at men of his own blood in civil war. General Sherman had to strike at men of his own blood. He is not to be blamed for it or punished for it, and I hope and believe there is not a man in the United States who fought on the other side who entertains towards him a particle of ill-will. But I believe if this clause passes, the country will conclude that the purpose is to humiliate both Sherman and Sheridan.

Mr. SPARKS. I desire to interrupt the gentleman. He does not object, as I understand, to the bill on this point, only to the amendment.

Mr. McCOOK. I am objecting to the amendment and I object to the bill also.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On what ground as regards the General of the Army?

Mr. McCOOK. It reduces his present pay.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The amendment in the bill, $13,500, is your rate, the rate fixed by a republican Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] a question. Does he think the services of the General of the Army are worth nearly thrice as much as his own?

Mr. McCOOK. Unquestionably.

Mr. FINLEY. I merely wanted to know how the gentleman rated his own services.

Mr. McCOOK. When interrupted I was stating in conclusion that it is because I honestly believe the introduction of a bill of this character for the reorganization of the Army is calculated to excite prejudices and passions that had better be allayed, that so far as I am concerned I urge the reference of the whole matter to a commission. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1272) to amend section 4127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the judicial powers and functions of consuls;

A bill (S. No. 986) for the relief of William S. Morris, William S. Mann, Charles A. Oakman, George W. Hillman, the Union Transfer Company, all of Philadelphia, the Union Transfer Company of Baltimore, Maryland, and John R. Graham, late of Philadelphia, now of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. No. 380) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Toledo, Ohio.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 3369) to provide for the publication of notices of contest under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States; and

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution (H. R. No 178) to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, in reference to immigration to this country from China.

The message further announced that the Senate agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House to bind 500 copies of the geological and geographical atlas of Colorado and portions of adjacent territory.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment, which is that of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, section 30, strike out "$13,500" and insert "$12,000;" so that it will read:

That the officers of the Army shall be entitled to the pay herein stated after their respective designations:

The General, $12,000 a year.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose by unanimous consent the vote could be taken on the whole amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule requires that the bill shall be considered by clauses. The Chair will put the question separately on the amendments offered to the various clauses of the section.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to state that the question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. I understood that it was upon my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] was accepted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and became the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BANNING. But the vote is really on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 53, noes 84.

Mr. FINLEY. A quorum has not voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK.]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 86.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask unanimous consent that a vote on this amendment be allowed in the House.

Mr REAGAN. If that is agreed to I will not ask for further count.

Mr. BURCHARD. The committee cannot give unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. PRICE. There is a quorum in the House. Let gentlemen vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that unanimous consent is asked that there shall be a vote upon this in the House. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. There is evidently a quorum in the hall. Gentlemen will please vote.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 94.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "$11,000," and insert "$8,000;" so that it will read:

The Lieutenant-General, $8,000 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "$7,500" and insert "$6,000;" so that it will read:

A major-general, $6,000 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "$5,500" and insert "$5,000;" so that it will read:

A brigadier-general, $5,000 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, to strike out the words "twenty-five hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "twenty-six hundred;" so that it will read:

A major, $2,600 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 14 and 15, to strike out the words "eighteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "sixteen hundred and twenty;" so that it will read:

A captain, not mounted, $1,620 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, to strike out the words "eighteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "the pay of his grade, mounted;" so that it will read:

An adjutant, the pay of his grade, mounted, a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 18 and 19, to strike out the words "eighteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "the pay of his grade, mounted;" so that it will read:

A regimental quartermaster, the pay of his grade, mounted, a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 20, to strike out the words "six hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "fifteen hundred;" so that it will read:

A first lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,500 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 22 and 23, to strike out the words "fifteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "fourteen hundred;" so that it will read:

A first lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,400 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, to strike out the words "fifteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "fourteen hundred;" so that it will read:

A second lieutenant, (mounted,) $1,400 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 26, to strike out the words "fourteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "thirteen hundred;" so that it will read:

A second lieutenant, (not mounted,) $1,300 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 28, to strike out the words "fifteen hundred" and to insert in lieu thereof "fourteen hundred;" so that it will read:

A chaplain, $1,400 a year.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 31. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including officers having assimilated rank or pay, except chaplains, 10 per cent. of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service: Provided, That the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed 40 per cent. on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law, and shall not in any case amount to more than $800 per annum.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend that section by striking out in the third line the words "except chaplains;" so that it will read:

There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including officers having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent. of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service, &c.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope that will be done.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There will be no opposition to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to amend that section by adding after the word "service," in the fifth line, the following:

And on and after the passage of this act, all officers of the Army of the United States, who have served as officers in the volunteer force during the war of the rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, shall be, and are hereby, credited with the full time they may have served as such enlisted men in computing their services for longevity pay.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order upon that amendment. It is new legislation and is not certainly in the interest of economy. [After a pause.] At the suggestion of friends, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I am obliged to the soldier from Ohio for raising the point of order, for it shows him in his true colors.

Mr. FOSTER. I have withdrawn the point of order.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if the section should not be perfected before we pass from it. There are many officers in the Army holding less rank than they held in the volunteer army, and perhaps the amendment ought to provide that their longevity pay shall not be greater than that of the rank they now hold.

Mr. BRAGG. They do not. The longevity pay applies to the rank a man now holds.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend the section by striking out, in line

8, the word "eight," and insert in lieu thereof "ten." The effect of the present provision of the bill is simply to take off $200 of longevity pay from a very few officers, and by restoring it to ten we leave it where the law now fixes it.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 81.

Mr. FOSTER. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FOSTER, and Mr. HEWITT of New York, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 82.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 32. Fuel may be furnished to the officers of the Army by the Quartermaster's Department, for the actual use of such officers only, at the rate of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, or at an equivalent rate for other kinds of fuel, according to the regulations now in existence; and forage in kind may be furnished to the officers of the Army, by the Quartermaster's Department, only for horses owned and actually kept by such officers in the performance of their official military duties when on duty with troops in the field or at such military posts on the frontier as may be from time to time designated by the Secretary of War, and not otherwise as follows:

To the General, five horses;
To the Lieutenant-General, four horses;
To a major-general, three horses;
To a brigadier-general, three horses;
To a colonel, two horses;
To a lieutenant-colonel, two horses;
To a major, two horses;
To a captain, (mounted,) two horses;
To a lieutenant, (mounted,) two horses;
To an adjutant, two horses;
To a regimental quartermaster, two horses.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend that section by striking out, in line 3, the word "three" and inserting in lieu thereof "two;" so that it will read:

Fuel may be furnished to officers of the Army by the Quartermaster's Department, for the actual use of such officers only, at the rate of $2 per cord for standard oak wood.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read as follows:

SEC. 33. That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States, officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is now allowed to such grade by the rules and regulations of the Army: Provided, That at places where there are no public quarters, commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding $9 per room per month, and the commutation for quarters allowed to the General shall be at the rate of $125 per month and to the Lieutenant-General at the rate of $54 per month.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out, in line 10, the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve;" so that it will read:

That at places where there are no public quarters, commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding $12 per month.

I have one word to say about that amendment. This section affects about 10 per cent. of the Army, or perhaps one-eighth of the officers of the Army. The present provision of the law gives these officers $18 per room, and this bill proposes to give them $9 per room. Even if the amendment be adopted, it is much less than rooms can be rented for, and I think it an extreme hardship upon officers of the Army to make this severe reduction in quarters, and therefore I propose to fix it at $12 per room.

Mr. BANNING. I hold in my hand a copy of the Army Regulations for 1863, in which the commutation for rooms is fixed at the rate of $8, $9, and $12 a month, according to the places where rooms are rented. As I said awhile ago, that was before greenbacks became so valuable as they now are. We all know that rents are cheaper now than they have been for a number of years.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they one-half cheaper?

Mr. BANNING. I believe they are more than one-half cheaper in all our cities.

Mr. O'NEILL and others. Oh, no; that is a mistake.

Mr. BANNING. If that is a mistake, then it was a mistake to place the commutation for room rent at $18 per month; that was too high. The sum of $9 per month for each room will obtain for an officer five rooms with a kitchen, or six rooms with a kitchen; quarters that ought to be sufficient for him. Those who have inquired into this matter know that, from the allowances for quarters, officers of the Army are enabled not only to obtain quarters at a hotel, but to pay for their board and all other living expenses.

The object of this section is to secure for these officers quarters sufficient for them to live in. The amount fixed in the bill will be more than sufficient. If I did not believe so, or if any gentleman could in any way convince me that such was not the case, I would be glad to vote for a larger sum.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks there is a house in this city fit for a colonel to live in, which can be rented for $45 a month?

Mr. BANNING. I think there are houses in this city that can be rented for that sum. There are houses here in which even members of Congress live that rent for a less sum than that.

Mr. FOSTER. Allow me to state what will be the effect of this section. Right here in this city an officer will be enabled to go down to the barracks and obtain quarters and have a good house to live in, without any cost whatever to him. But I venture to say that no officer living in the city is able to obtain a house fit for him to live in for $36 or $40 a month.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. FOSTER, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if you want to drive at the Army, go it.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to amend the section by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

No contract surgeon shall be employed, except for duty with troops at military stations or in the field, and not then until after all commissioned surgeons in the Army shall have been first assigned to such duty.

Mr. DIBRELL. There are now 149 military posts. We have 175 regular commissioned surgeons, besides 21 staff surgeons. We have 88 contract surgeons. In this bill we appropriate $180,000 for the pay of contract surgeons. We have no use for them, and this amendment provides that they shall not be employed except for troops in the field.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL.]

Mr. McCOOK. Will it be in order for me to move an amendment to the section after the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] has been voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. Further amendments will then be in order.

Mr. BANNING. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment of Mr. DIBRELL was then agreed to.

Mr. McCOOK. I move to amend the section by striking out "$125" and inserting "$250," in line 12; and also to strike out, in line 14, "$54" and to insert "$100;" so that it will read:

And the commutation for quarters allowed to the General shall be at the rate of $250 per month, and to the Lieutenant-General at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. McCOOK] to the fact that he is now striking at the General of the Army. The General of the Army now receives $300 a month; and the gentleman is proposing to reduce it to $250. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOOK. I am increasing the amount proposed in this section, and thereby trying to soften the blow which you are aiming at the General of the Army.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call attention for a moment to an error which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] made in his speech the other day, and which is likely to be misunderstood in regard to everything relating to allowances as well as pay. The gentleman said originally that his own opinion was that the pay of officers of the Army was not greater than the pay of the officers of the Navy; but that on further study he had come to the conclusion that he had been in error.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg to correct the gentleman from Ohio. I made no such statement as regards the original pay.

Mr. GARFIELD. I said with regard to the present pay, not with regard to the original pay.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman used the words "original pay."

Mr. GARFIELD. I said that "originally his opinion" had been that the pay of the Navy was greater than the pay of the Army; but that on reflection he was satisfied that he was in error.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARFIELD. And the gentleman from New York gave a table to show that the pay of officers of the Army was greater relatively than the pay of officers of the Navy. Those tables will be found on page 3543 of the RECORD.

I desire now to call the attention of this committee to a capital error which the gentleman has fallen into in regard to that matter. He gives the pay and allowances of the officers of the Army and compares that with the pay proper of officers of the Navy. He does not take into account the allowances of officers of the Navy, except the single matter of rations, and that is not by any means an adequate statement of the pay and allowances of the Navy.

On that and another matter connected with the gentleman's speech, I make two points for the information of the House, not supposing it will change anybody's opinion, but merely that the truth of the matter may appear upon the record.

In the first place, as to the number of officers relatively in the Army and the Navy, the officers of high rank in the Navy far exceed in number those of corresponding rank in the Army. I have here a table carefully prepared showing the number of officers in proportion to the size of the enlisted force of the Army and the Navy.

When a man goes into the Navy his opportunities for promotion are almost twice as great as they are in the Army; for instance, it takes almost twice as long for a man to reach the position of colonel in the Army as it does for one going into the Navy to reach a corresponding place there. This of course is one capital consideration in comparing these two branches of the service.

As to pay and allowances of the Navy, it should be remembered that officers of the Navy are not only furnished with quarters but with fuel, furniture, and lights; besides this, they receive a ration a day. They are also provided with a waiter. While the laws relating to the Army forbid that a private soldier shall be detailed as a waiter for the use of an officer, enlisted men in the Navy are permitted to perform such service. The higher grades of naval officers are also allowed a steward. In addition to this, servants in the Navy are allowed rations. If all these things are taken into the account, the total of pay and allowances for the Navy is far greater than the total of pay and allowances for the Army.

A careful statement of this whole subject has been prepared by a gentleman in every way competent to make it, and I ask that it may be printed in connection with my remarks for the information of the House. The table of my friend from New York was misleading in the fact that with the single exception of rations it left out all these items of allowance to officers of the Navy, whereas in reference to the Army every item of pay and allowance was included. The comparison was therefore unfair.

Before submitting the statement to which I have referred I will call attention to another point, that officers of the Navy are also entitled to prize money which in many instances during the late war amounted to far more than their pay. Officers of the Army have no similar allowance, though the captures made by the Army far exceed in value those made by the Navy. I do not suggest these things to intimate that the pay of naval officers is too high but to show that relatively to naval pay Army pay is not too high.

ARMY AND NAVY COMPARED.

The offices of General and Lieutenant-General, Admiral and Vice-Admiral, need not be considered, as they become obsolete when vacated by the incumbents.

Table exhibiting a comparison of the number of officers of the line of the two services.

Present organization of the Army.		What the organization of the Army would be if placed on an equal footing with the Navy.		Present organization of the Navy.		What the organization of the Navy would be if placed on an equal footing with the Army.
Rank.	Number.	Rank.	Number.	Rank.	Number.	Rank.	Number.
Enlisted men	25,000	Enlisted men	25,000	Enlisted men	7,500	Enlisted men	7,500
Major-generals	3	Major-generals	36	Rear-admirals	12	Rear-admirals	1
Brigadier-generals	6	Brigadier-generals	75	Commodores	25	Commodores	3
Colonels	40	Colonels	150	Captains	50	Captains	13
Lieutenant-colonels	40	Lieutenant-colonels	270	Commanders	99	Commanders	13
Majors	70	Majors	240	Lieutenant-commanders	86	Lieutenant-Commanders	24
Captains	430	Captains	840	Lieutenants	280	Lieutenants	144
First lieutenants	530	First lieutenants	300	Masters	100	Masters	100
Second lieutenants	445	Second lieutenants	300	Ensigns	73	Ensigns	145

An examination of this table shows that the Navy has an immense number of officers of high rank as compared with the number in the lower grades and in the Army; that, commencing with seventy-three ensigns at the bottom, there are twelve rear admirals at the top; that in the Army with four hundred and forty-five second lieutenants at the bottom of the list, there are only three major-generals at the top; that the chances for attaining the rank of rear admiral in the Navy are as 1 to 6—to attain a corresponding rank in the Army the chances are as 1 to 148.

An examination of the dates of commissions of officers of corresponding grades in the Army and Navy will show remarkably rapid promotion in the Navy as compared with the Army. Taking the date of entry into the Military Academy as the date of entry into service, in order to conform to a like custom in the Navy, it will be seen that all officers of the Navy of date prior to June 1, 1861, are lieutenant-commanders and rank with majors; while in the Army will be found officers like Thomas Wilson and Livingston, who entered in 1849; Brotherton and Langdon, who entered in 1850; Graham in 1851, and Loder in 1852, ranking with lieutenants in the Navy.

Mr. HEWITT submitted, in his speech of the 18th instant, two tables under the heading "Comparison of the pay of the Navy and Army, according to relative rank," &c. These tables show a comparison of the pay of officers of the Navy and the pay and allowances of officers of the Army. The value of the allowances received by officers of the Navy is wholly omitted from that statement. In order to supply the omission the following statement has been prepared, from which it will be seen that the highest pay and allowances received by officers of the Navy exceed by considerable amounts the pay and allowances of officers of corresponding grades in the Army. The actual money value of the highest pay and allowances per annum of the officers of the Navy is as follows:

Pay of the Navy.

Grades.	Pay.	Money value of allowances furnished in kind.						Total pay and allowances.
		Quarters, fuel, furniture, and lights.	One ration per day.	One man waiter.	One steward.	One cook.	Servants' rations.
Rear-admiral	$6,000 00	$3,000 00	$109 50	$186 00	$498 00	$438 00	$328 50	$10,560 00
Commodore	5,000 00	2,500 00	109 50	186 00	498 00	438 00	328 50	9,060 00
Captain	4,500 00	2,500 00	109 50	186 00	438 00	378 00	328 50	8,440 00
Commander	3,500 00	2,000 00	109 50	186 00	438 00	378 00	328 50	6,940 00
Lieutenant-commander	3,000 00	2,000 00	109 50	147 75		100 00		5,357 25
Lieutenant	2,600 00	1,336 00	109 50	147 75		100 00		4,293 25
Master	2,000 00	1,044 00	109 50	147 75		100 00		3,401 25
Ensign	1,400 00	1,044 00	109 50	147 75		100 00		2,801 25

The quarters of officers of the Navy are supplied with furniture generally of an expensive kind, to include everything except bed and table linen, china, and glass. The officers of the Army are never supplied with furniture by the Government. China and glass are furnished on board ship by the Government, which charges from 3 to 5 per cent. on cost for use and requires pay for breakage.

The quarters of officers of the Navy are lighted by the Government; those of officers of the Army are not.

Officers of the Navy are supplied with enlisted men as stewards, cooks, and waiters at the public expense; officers of the Army are not, and in addition they are prohibited by law from making use of an enlisted man as a servant.

Officers of the Navy are supplied with coxswains, boats, and boats' crews to transport them on duty at the expense of the Government. Officers of the Army purchase their own horses and equipments. The Government simply feeds their horses.

The officers of the Navy have received many millions of dollars in prize money during the last war. It is estimated that one admiral's share amounted to $250,000. The interest on this sum at 6 per cent. amounts to $15,000, the virtual increase of his annual pay. Many other officers have received large sums in prize money. No Army officer has received one cent in prize money, although the captures made by the Army greatly exceed in value those made by the Navy.

There are three staff corps in the Navy, having 38 officers of the grade of colonel; 43 officers of the rank of lieutenant-colonel; 140 officers of the rank of major. All this for a force of only 7,500 men, while for the Army of 25,000 men there are ten staff corps, having 7 brigadier-generals, 23 colonels, 32 lieutenant-colonels, 72 majors.

Major Park, who entered the service in 1845, and Warren in 1848, rank as majors; while of officers of the Navy who entered the service after they did, 15 rank as colonels, and 87 as lieutenant-colonels, there being only 90 in the latter grade.

Major Howe, of the artillery, entered the service in 1837. Of officers of the Navy who entered that year 9 rank with brigadier-generals, and of those who entered after that year 8 rank with brigadier-generals, 50 with colonels, and 90 with lieutenant-colonels.

Majors Beckwith and Stewart, of the artillery, entered in 1838. Of those who entered the Navy in that and the following years, 8 rank with brigadier-generals, 50 with colonels, and 90 with lieutenant-colonels.

Major Andrews entered in 1841. Of those who entered the Navy during that and subsequent years, 34 rank with colonels, and 87 as lieutenant-colonels.

Majors Hamilton, Best, and Gibson entered the service in 1843. Of those who entered the Navy in that and subsequent years, 15 rank as colonels and 87 as lieutenant-colonels.

Majors De Russy, Piper, and Mendenhall entered the service in 1847. Of those who entered the Navy in that and subsequent years, 9 rank as colonels and 87 as lieutenant-colonels.

The Navy Registers of 1875 and 1876 show that no commodores were at sea. They have shore stations, such as navy-yards, &c., and rank with brigadier-generals.

The annual pay and allowances of one of these commodores in command of a navy-yard are as follows:

Pay	$4,000 00
Quarters	1,080 00
Fuel	308 00
Furniture	1,080 00
Lights	40 00
One steward	498 00
One cook	438 00
Two waiters	392 00
One lodge-boy	186 00
One coxswain	487 50
Ten men for boats' crew	1,860 00
One gardener	1,000 00
Total	11,369 50

In order to equalize the pay and allowances of officers of the Army and Navy, it would be necessary to reduce the number of officers to 1 rear-admiral, 2 commodores, 13 captains, 13 commanders, 144 lieutenants, 190 masters, and 145 ensigns. To make a corresponding reduction in the staff corps, to prohibit by law the use of any enlisted man or Government employé as a servant; to require them to pay their cooks, stewards, and waiters, and the cost of lights from their own salaries; to prohibit the purchase at expense of the Government of any furniture for quarters, mess-rooms, bed-rooms, &c., and cut off prize money and rations.

The Navy would then have the advantage to the extent of the prize money already received.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] whether naval officers have servants, lights, and fuel anywhere except at sea; and has not a naval officer to provide quarters for his family out of his pay?

Mr. GARFIELD. Ah, quarters for the officer's family are another thing.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly; but the Army officer has quarters for his family.

Mr. CLYMER. Naval officers are not allowed quarters except when stationed at navy-yards, and there are only seventeen navy-yards in the country.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCCOOK, it was not agreed to.

Mr. MAISH. I move to amend by inserting as an additional section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the promotion of commissioned officers shall be lineal through all grades up to and including the grade of colonel of cavalry, artillery, and infantry of the Army, and not by regiments: Provided, That in case of a voluntary transfer of an officer from one arm of the service to another to a position below his lineal rank, he shall thereafter be entitled to such promotion, and such only, as pertains to the position thus accepted by him

That the subalterns of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, promoted from second lieutenants to first lieutenants, and from first lieutenants to captains, during each half year, shall be assigned, by the Secretary of War, on or before the next succeeding 1st day of January and July of each year, to such vacancies as may have occurred in the grades to which they shall have been promoted in their arms of the service during that period, and in such manner as shall incur least expense for transportation: Provided, That each and every officer so assigned shall retain the rank to which he is entitled.

Mr. MARSH. I make a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. I would like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] explain this amendment, there is so much of it.

Mr. MARSH. I have made a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MAISH. I would like to hear the gentleman state it.

Mr. MARSH. It changes existing law, and does not provide for any retrenchment.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman tell us wherein it changes existing law?

Mr. MARSH. If the gentleman cannot see that without my telling him, he will have to go without the knowledge.

Mr. BANNING. I will read the gentleman the law as it now is:

Promotions in the line shall be made through the whole Army——

Mr. BURCHARD. If it does not change existing law, why put it in?

Mr. BANNING. We want to renew its enactment, and then see whether we can get the Adjutant-General to obey it.

Mr. MAISH. I would like to hear the gentleman from Illinois explain wherein the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. BURCHARD. The amendment on its face purports to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If this proposed section does not change existing law, then it is simply unnecessary; if it does change existing law, then, as it does not retrench expenditures, it is not in order. The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. MAISH. I hope my friend from Illinois will withdraw his objection. This proposition is so eminently just that he ought not to oppose it.

Mr. MARSH. I cannot withdraw the point of order. I am not sure that the legislation here proposed may not be proper; but it is so radical a change in the mode of promotions in the line of the Army that I am not prepared at present to sanction it. For this reason I insist upon the point of order. Let the proposition come in as a separate bill in the regular manner and be discussed.

Mr. MAISH. On the point of order I should like to have section 1204 of the Revised Statutes read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point of order.

Mr. MAISH. But has the Chair's attention been called to section 1204 of the Revised Statutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the section of the Revised Statutes read, and if he finds he is wrong he will reverse his decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1204. Promotions in the line shall be made through the whole Army, in its several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, respectively. Promotions in the staff of the Army shall be made in the several departments and corps, respectively.

Mr. MAISH. My amendment is merely explanatory of the existing law, as will be seen by that section of the Revised Statutes just read by the Clerk. I am unable, therefore, to see in what respect it changes existing law or is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. To the extent it changes existing law or adds thereto in any respect it is new legislation.

Mr. BURCHARD. On its face being new legislation, it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It purports to be a change of existing law and does not retrench expenditure, and the point of order is well taken. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I offer the following:

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any enlisted man in the service of the United States, whether non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, where the same shall interfere with the customary employment of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

I simply ask to have read the petition which I send up to the Clerk's desk, signed by twenty-five hundred people in the city of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

That for some time past, however, the undoubtedly just, proper, and beneficial efforts of said union have been marred by the custom obtaining among the band performers attached to and stationed at various military posts, among others those of Fort Hamilton, Fort Columbus, and Willett's Point, in the neighborhood of New York, of taking engagements as instrumental performers for any kind of public or private civic entertainment, ceremony, celebration, or other occasion far below the prices established and deemed necessary and equitable by this union for mutual protection and the promotion of the art of music. These enlisted men, when thus furloughed as instrumental performers outside of their posts and regular engagements, receiving pay and rations from the United States, are well able to play gratuitously or at reduced prices for the enjoyment of a respite from the strict military routine and duty and a good time in general; that the undersigned have complained of this grievance at the War Department, and an order was issued to abate the wrong, said order, however, proving ineffectual because frequently, if not uniformly, disregarded by the commandants of the respective posts.

Mr. MARSH. That is new legislation and not in the interest of economy.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is economy, as it makes them "blow" for the public only.

Mr. MARSH. It is new legislation and does not save a cent of money to the Government. There is no retrenchment by virtue of the change in the law proposed.

Mr. COX, of New York. The point of order comes too late even if it is a good point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the point of order. The amendment simply directs the manner in which the money appropriated by this bill shall be expended or shall not be expended, and is therefore not liable to the point of order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 73.

Mr. REED demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCALES. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to submit the following amendment, to come in as a new section.

Mr. LATHROP. But I wish to amend the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late, as it has been agreed to in the words in which it was proposed.

Mr. LATHROP. I wish to offer an amendment to the section as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to amend the section.

Mr. CONGER. He desires to amend the section. We have not left the section yet.

The CHAIRMAN. If this section were new matter moved for the first time it would have been in order for the gentleman to move an amendment before it was agreed to by the committee; but having been agreed to in the words offered, it is now too late to change those words.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman may add to it after it has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. If it had been in the bill originally it would have been in order to amend it. But it has been proposed as new matter, and in the form moved it has been agreed to by the committee. It is therefore too late to disagree to any portion of it.

Mr. CONGER. Before we leave this to go to any other section anything may be inserted, a new section or anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. That is very true.

Mr. CONGER. Then the gentleman from Illinois proposes to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair has recognized the gentleman from North Carolina to offer an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from North Carolina desires to offer another section. The gentleman from Illinois desires to offer his amendment before we leave this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to move an additional section after the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina has been disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend this section which has just been adopted, before we leave it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that that cannot be done, the committee having just agreed to the section in the words in which it was offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONGER. But the committee has not refused to add a proviso to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. While the section was pending no proposition was made to add anything to it; and the committee having agreed to it in the language in which it now stands it is too late to change that language.

Mr. CONGER. The proposition is not to change it but to add to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition would have been in order while the section was still pending, but it is not in order now. The gentleman from North Carolina has the floor and sends to the desk an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

That from after the 1st day of January, 1879, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

That the Secretary of War shall make such details of officers of the Army as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian branch of the War Department.

That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector-General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs, and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes. And such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war. And the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof is concerned.

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who when on such duty shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and as far as practicable at the same time provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspectors of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent, and subagent in the Office of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, not including the clerks of the Indian Bureau, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of January, 1879, on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus superseded.

The annuities to be paid to any Indians and the supplies to be furnished and issued to them shall be paid and issued through the Quartermaster's Department and the subsistence department of the Army, under such regulations and directions as the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe. That all moneys appropriated during the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress in the bill known as the Indian appropriation bill, or so much thereof as shall remain unexpended on the 1st day of January, 1879, shall after that time be disbursed in accordance with the provisions of this section, and that all laws and clauses of laws which may come in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order against this amendment, that it is new legislation, which, of course, is evident; that it is not germane to the present bill, which is equally evident; and also, that it does not carry with it a patent retrenchment.

I suppose it will be said, as an answer to that, that it abolishes offices, and that in that direction or to that extent it is economy or retrenchment. But I ask the Chair to consider this point. The whole vast subject-matter is so grave that the matter of pay of officers who administer it is very small compared with the entire expense. Here is a revolution in the present practice and law.

The Indian Bureau is sought to be turned over to the Army. All of its parts are turned over. The whole system and method are put under the control of the Army. There is nothing in the bill that prohibits additional expense; there is nothing in the bill that limits additional expense; there is no exclusion of additional expense by reason of the bill. All that there is in the direction of retrenchment is the abolition of certain offices.

Now, if that point is good and would carry the amendment through if thirty offices were abolished, it would be equally good if twenty offices were abolished, or if ten were abolished, or if five were abolished, or if a bill had been put in here which only provided that but a single messenger in the Bureau of Indian Affairs should be legislated out.

I say, then, that although there are in the bill certain reductions, it does not carry as a whole any exclusion of increased expenditures, any prohibition of increased expenditures. The whole domain is changed into the Army. And many of us believe, and that belief should be traversed by direct legislation in the amendment, that it would be very much more costly. The whole subject-matter has been before the House, and not this bill, but another, was ruled upon by the then Speaker, when introduced by the present incumbent of the chair, with provisions which in general effect were like those contained in this bill.

It has only been sought here to avoid the principle which was then so clearly laid down by the abolition of certain offices, evidently with the idea that a narrow view should be taken, and that because that had been done it necessarily involved retrenchment.

Now, I say on a matter of so great importance as this the rules should be applied closely. It is not a fitting thing on this bill. The rule never was made with a view that such a thing as this should be done on an Army appropriation bill; that by means of the Army appropriation bill the bureau should be taken from one Department and assigned to another. It adds to the appropriation, Mr. Chairman—it necessarily must—that would come hereafter into the Army appropriation bill; because if the War Department takes charge of this matter this bureau will have to be managed under the Army and as a part of its duties.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to answer what the gentleman from Maine has said with regard to the importance of this amendment. The question under the rules is simply is it in the line of retrenchment? If it is in the line of retrenchment, there is no provision in the rules that because it is important it is therefore in order. I shall not answer that part of the argument, but I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this question has been ruled upon. The gentleman who occupies the chair at present had the whole matter discussed before him two years ago, when a bill was introduced in the House by the present Speaker of the House similar to this. The same question of order was then made, the same arguments were used, and the arguments were replied to by the present Speaker, that the bill involved a saving of $104,000 by abolishing the offices of Indian agents and superintendents.

Now the decision on that occasion went this far and no farther: that if it was patent on the face of the bill, upon the record, that it looked to retrenchment or did in effect retrench expenditures it was in order.

I remember the former Speaker's decision and I remember the reason of his decision and it was this: that in the first amendment, kindred to this, there was no provision that the salaries of the Army officers, upon whom these duties are devolved, should not be increased for the additional duties they will be called upon to perform. The amendment was so arranged as to provide that the Army officers should discharge the duties imposed upon them by the amendment without a single additional dollar, and upon that ground the Chair ruled that it was in the line of retrenchment and in order.

Now, the gentleman from Maine says that is not patent upon the face of the amendment and he looks forward to what may take place. The Speaker, in his decision on that occasion, said that he must look at the face of the record, and the record is only the bill or the amendment which is before the House, and the laws of the land and the rules of the House. Now, in viewing this amendment the construction of it must be upon the law of the land in relation to appropriations for the Indians and the salaries paid to the officers of the Army, and if by this amendment you can cut off $104,000 then surely it is in the line of retrenchment.

But the gentleman from Maine says that he thinks that in the end it may cost a great deal more. How so? Does that appear upon the face of the amendment? No, sir. Then he has left the face of the record in order to instruct the Chair as to the expense that may be incurred under the amendment. I stand by the record. I say that there is nothing on the record and nothing out of it to show that there will be an increase of expenditures. Now, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this point of order. I believe the gentleman from Maine made no argument as to the amendment not being germane, but I wish to call the attention of the Chair to his own decision in a similar case, not as to a bill identical with this, but the same bill, with the exception of three sections, was brought into the House by a gentleman from Virginia as a substitute for the one offered by the present Speaker of the House, and the Chair ruled that it was out of order. He gave this reason: it was out of order because there was a naturalization clause in it. That has been stricken out together with other clauses that do not look strictly to retrenchment.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to have that portion of the amendment read which refers to the transfer of the appropriation already made for the Indian department to the War Department.

The Clerk again read that portion of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. That was my recollection of the amendment from hearing it read. It really adds so much to the Army bill; in fact it reappropriates here, for the purpose of the Army, with the additional duties laid upon it, the money appropriated for the Indian service and increases the expenditures under this bill to that extent in terms. It proposes to load the Army bill with so much more of the appropriation, to add so much; instead of reducing, to increase the amount to ten times or perhaps twenty times as much as the little which would be saved by the abolition of the offices of Indian agents and superintendents. It adds to the Army appropriations an appropriation of four or five million dollars. Now if that can be done on an appropriation bill when a point of order is made, you can add $20,000,000.

Mr. SCALES. This is no reappropriation of money. The money has been appropriated already, but I only ask that the money shall be disbursed by a different set of officers. The gentleman says that we add to the Army bill so much additional appropriation. Does the rule say that if an amendment looks to retrenchment it must retrench upon this bill or that bill?

Mr. HALE. That is just what the rule does say, and there is the gentleman's error; that is what the rule says, an amendment must retrench upon this bill. That was the ruling yesterday. The Chair cannot go into questions outside of the pending bill. He must confine his observation to the bill pending. And here is a proposition to take the Indian appropriation bill bodily and transfer it to the Army appropriation bill. Surely that is an increase of the appropriation in this bill, and not in conformity with law.

Mr. SCALES. When on the 1st of January next the balance of the money appropriated for the Indian service that may remain on hand is put into the hands of the War Department it will be found that at least $50,000 has been saved, and the bill shows that.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I do not think that this amendment is at all subject to the point of order. In the first place it is germane to the subject-matter of the bill because it prescribes new duties to be performed by the officers and the soldiers of the Army. The bill relates distinctly to the Army. The amendment relates distinctly to the Army also. So far as the question of its being germane is concerned it must be held by the Chair to be germane.

The next question is, does this amendment retrench expenditures? Is it evident upon its face that it does? Certainly, so far as the Chair is able to judge, the answer must be in the affirmative.

It certainly abolishes a large number of offices necessary for carrying into effect the administration of Indian affairs; those filled by Indian agents and other officers connected with that Department. What does it substitute for the offices that are abolished. It does not create new offices; it does not call into existence new offices. It provides that the duties which are now performed by a class of men whose services will be dispensed with shall be performed by men who are already in the employ of the Government, Army officers. And a particular provision is made prohibiting any increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of these officers, because of this additional duty devolved upon them by the amendment. I will read that provision:

> That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

To show that offices are abolished and that the duties incumbent on the officers filling them are devolved upon other officers already in the pay of the Government without any increase of expense, but one other provision of this bill is necessary to be referred to:

> That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list, as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service.

This amendment clearly wipes out of existence a large number of offices now provided by the laws upon your statute-books, and requires that the duties of those officers shall be performed by other officers already in the employ of the Government without receiving additional pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. This bill provides for the assignment to this duty of retired officers.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Those retired officers are now on diminished pay. If you put them on this duty at full pay, will it not increase expenditures?

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. The officers on the retired list I believe are now receiving three-fourths pay. That, however, cannot affect the general proposition that the great bulk of the labor that is to be performed under the provisions of this amendment will be performed by the officers and soldiers of the Army without any increase of pay. The great bulk of all offices now in existence for the management of Indian affairs will be wiped out by this amendment.

One other proposition. It is not necessary that the appropriation made in the bill under consideration should be cut down in order to meet the requirement of the rule that expenditures shall be retrenched. The Chair is presumed to know the law of the land, to know what officers are required to carry into effect existing law; to know what expenditures are necessary under existing law. They are part of the statutes of the land. When a proposition is made which abolishes offices now existing and imposes those duties upon other officers already in the service of the Government, if the result is a decrease of the expenditures of the Government, without reference to the particular bill under consideration, then the object of the bill is accomplished, and the amendment is not liable to the point of order which has been made.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to say a word on the point of order. In determining the question whether this amendment is in the line of retrenchment and reform or not, it is sufficient answer to say that by its provisions seventy-eight agents of the Indian Bureau, now drawing a salary of $1,500 per annum each, are cut off, thus saving $105,000 per annum in the matter of the salaries of the agents alone. Their labors are transferred to the officers of the Army.

It is not necessary to say anything about what would be saved in the matter of stealings, if we are to believe one-half that is said now about the Indian agents. It is a fact well known to any one who has taken the pains to examine this question, that when these duties were performed by Army officers prior to the present system of Indian affairs, when the fifty or sixty supernumerary officers of the Army performed this duty, there never was one dollar stolen, not a dollar.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. Does the gentleman say that while the Indian affairs were in charge of the officers of the Army of the United States no public money was ever stolen from these Indian posts?

Mr. FINLEY. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. HASKELL. I only wanted to know?

Mr. FINLEY. I spoke loud enough to be heard.

Mr. HASKELL. I was listening as intently as I could. I simply desire to know what the gentleman's statement is.

Mr. FINLEY. I said that these Army officers never stole one dollar; that is what I said. A regular Army officer has his commission at stake. He has a sufficient incentive to be honest, even if he is a republican, [laughter,] because he has his commission at stake, and if he should violate his trust the probabilities are that in due course of time he would lose his official head.

I have before me a letter of an Army officer on this subject, in which he speaks of the matter of which I am now speaking, of the efficiency of the Army officers in the discharge of this line of service. He says that the familiarity of Army officers with the Indians on the plains and with their wants enables them to act intelligently under the most difficult circumstances, and that the honor and honesty of these officers in the discharge of duties of this kind is proverbial throughout the country, which I believe is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. That this amendment changes existing law is beyond question. The only question open to the consideration of the Chair is whether it increases expenditures. The amendment provides for assigning to this duty in the Indian Bureau officers upon the retired list, and when so assigned to duty they are to receive full pay. Under the present law retired officers receive, I believe, but three-fourths of the regular pay; certainly they receive a reduced rate of pay. I will read the provision of the amendment to which I refer:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

This undoubtedly adds one-fourth to the present pay of retired officers. It is as plain that the amendment increases expenditures as that it changes existing law.

Mr. GARFIELD. In addition to the points already made, I wish to make and emphasize the point that this proposition is not germane to the bill. This is a bill by its title and provisions to make appropriations for the support of the Army. Suppose some gentleman should wish to insert in this bill a naked proposition to abolish the Agricultural Department, everybody would admit that that was not germane. Could it be made germane by adding a provision that hereafter the duties of the Agricultural Department should devolve upon officers of the Army? Certainly not.

Now, here is a plain proposition to abolish a bureau of one of the civil departments of the Government, entirely, and only a civil bureau. Nobody would for an instant claim that this in itself was germane to the bill. But the effort is to make the proposition apparently germane by adding a provision that these duties, hitherto performed by a purely civil department, shall be turned over to the War Department. That, however, does not change the essential character of the amendment as a proposition to abolish in an Army appropriation bill a civil bureau of the Government.

Recollect that this is a bill to support the Army, and here is a proposition to go outside of the appropriations for the support of the Army to abolish a civil bureau of the Government. Does any man pretend to tell me that the Army is to be made less expensive by imposing new duties upon it? This consideration relates to the point of expense as well as germaneness. The amendment is not germane, nor will it reduce Army expenses.

Mr. COX, of New York. And it would not be economical in the long run.

Mr. GARFIELD. The question is not whether the expenses of the Indian Bureau would be reduced if the amendment should be adopted; even that is doubted or denied by many gentlemen here; but the question is, does this proposition contemplate a reduction of the Army expenses? for it is those that we are providing for now. Manifestly it does not reduce Army expenses, and manifestly it is not germane in considering an Army bill to reach outside and strike down a civil department of the Government.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has anticipated much that I wished to say upon the question whether this amendment is germane; but I would illustrate my idea in this way: if this proposition is germane upon an Army bill, then the Chair would have to decide that a proposition to abolish the Supreme Court and devolve the duties of the judges upon officers of the Army would be germane. If the mere fact that after abolishing a department of the Government you couple with it a provision that the duties of that department shall be discharged by the Army, if this makes any proposition germane, then there is no department or branch of this Government that might not be abolished upon an Army appropriation bill. If an amendment changing the whole form of the Government of the United States can be made germane to an Army bill by simply providing that Army officers shall perform the duties, the Chair will see to what absurdity that proposition would lead.

But there is another point. Gentlemen say that because they abolish a certain number of Indian agencies and require those duties to be performed by Army officers, the proposition is in the line of retrenchment. Here is a simple proposition to abolish, we will say, fifty officers whose compensation is $1,500 each a year; but it is proposed to supply their places by fifty officers whose salaries are $2,500 a year each. It does not matter where the appropriation is made. If there are more Army officers now than ought to receive $2,500 a year then in a proper bill a provision should be made for dismissing so many as are not required. But the proposition here is to abolish fifty or more officers receiving a salary of $1,500 a year and to put into their places fifty or more other officers each of whom is receiving a salary of $2,500 a year. By what logic is that retrenchment? Or does it lead to retrenchment? It is not enough to say these officers are doing nothing. It is not enough to say they are upon the retired list, because if on the retired list this bill adds one-quarter to their salary.

Mr. FRANKLIN. What officers are put in the place of those officers whose offices are abolished?

Mr. CONGER. Army officers.

Mr. FRANKLIN. But they are already provided for by law.

Mr. CONGER. But they are not provided for by law for any such duty as is here proposed.

Mr. FRANKLIN. But they are provided for by law, and by law they are paid, subject to the performance of any duties imposed on them by Congress. For more than fifty years before the transfer to the Interior Department these duties were performed by Army officers at much less expense than now.

Mr. CONGER. If they are not needed for the business for which they are paid you cannot claim it is any saving, for the saving to the Government would be in abolishing those offices and saving the money.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman another question——

Mr. CONGER. There is no question about that. And this bill proposes some may be taken from the retired list. It provides if they are taken from the retired list one-quarter of their pay shall be added, which of course increases expenditures to that amount. Now, suppose fifty of them are added from the retired list. This bill says they shall receive an addition to their pay of one-quarter.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. But does not the gentleman from Michigan know that a like number of officers now drawing pay under the Interior Department to the number taken from the retired list will be abolished, and as a matter of computation does he not know that the one-quarter increase paid to those taken from the retired list would not amount to the salaries regularly paid at this time to these Indian agents?

Mr. CONGER. I know that they may take major-generals from the retired list and one-quarter of their pay would exceed a good deal more the salary of one of these Indian agents.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. But we have not major-generals upon the retired list, but with few exceptions.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. It does not appear in the bill there is any such reduction.

Mr. CONGER. There may be, as I have already said, major-generals or brigadier-generals upon the retired list, and they may be taken; and the gentleman admits all I want when he says there is even one major-general or brigadier-general who may be detailed or transferred for this service.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I wish to ask a question right here. Does not the gentleman from Michigan know this abolishes about seventy Indian agents?

Mr. CONGER. I said fifty or more.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Does it create any new offices?

Mr. CONGER. It does create new Army officers for services for which the law does not now provide Army officers.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Name them.

Mr. CONGER. It is no matter what you call them. You may provide for new agents just at the same salaries as these officers. You appoint men, who have duties under the law to perform, to perform different duties, and if they are not required for the discharge of those duties, why then let the offices be abolished. The transfer from one office to another does not diminish expenditures.

But, sir, you have got to increase necessarily in the War Department; you have got to increase the number of officers and clerks in the War Department by scores and by hundreds. I will not stop, however, to speak to the merits of the bill. I am speaking merely to the point of order. And, Mr. Chairman, if this be not a case where on its face necessarily it must be decided not to be germane matter to an appropriation bill, and if on its face it does not show it would not reduce expenditures, make retrenchment of expenditures, then I think there can never be a question submitted to the Chair to decide of such a character.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, it is said by gentlemen on the opposite side opposed to the amendment offered by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] that it is obnoxious to the one hundred and twentieth rule and the restrictions there placed upon new legislation in an appropriation bill. The concluding clause in that rule reads as follows:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

It is said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] this amendment is not germane to the bill under discussion, and therefore is to be objected to on that account. Why, sir, I cannot imagine what would be germane to an appropriation bill for the support of the Army if the indication of the duties which were to be performed by officers of the Army was not germane to the subject-matter of such a bill. It is proposed in substance by the terms of the amendment to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department, where it is exclusively under the control of the Commissioners of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior and the vast army of officers and agents pertaining thereto, to the War Department, and to require officers of the Army who are under pay anyhow, whether full pay or upon the retired list—to require them to perform the functions the officers of the Indian Bureau now discharge.

And, sir, it is not alone germane to the subject-matter of the bill which is defining the duties and prescribing the operations of the Army, but I say it is not subject to the other objection, that it is not in the line of retrenchment. It was said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that you would abolish a certain number of Indian agents, but you would place in their stead a certain number of Army officers who were paid at a higher rate. Mr. Chairman, it is not alone in the abolition of the Indian agents that you are in the line of retrenching expenditures; but it is proposed to transfer by this amendment the management of Indian affairs, which have been in the past fifteen or twenty years so complicated and so expensive to the Government that your appropriation bill the other day for Indian matters amounted to four and a half million dollars. I say it is proposed to transfer this bureau to the War Department in order not that the small saving indicated by the gentleman from Michigan might take place, but in order that all the purchases that have to be made and the supplies that have to be transported to the Indians shall be made and furnished through the medium of the exact proceedings of the commissariat and Quartermaster's Department of the Army. Millions will probably be saved by it, and you will have the guarantee that you will have this office administered with due reference to the accountability of the officers. Therefore I say that the amendment is both germane to the bill and in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to ask the honorable gentlemen who oppose this point of order if it would not be as entirely in order as this is to transfer the Land Office from the Interior to the War Department

And if it is in order to transfer the Land Office and put that into the hands of the military, would it not be still more in order to transfer the Pension Bureau and to put that also into the hands of the military department? And why not for that matter abolish the whole Interior Department itself and provide that the duties of its officers shall be performed by the military? Why not?

The argument that has been used here is that these military gentlemen are so much more honest and able that they can better perform these duties. And at the same time they urge that with this reduction of sixty or seventy Indian agents you can use—what? Why, sir, supernumerary Army officers. Who are they? Where are they now? Where will you get anywhere in this Government seventy Army officers that are absolutely doing nothing? Are you going to take the old superannuated officers, all battered with wounds and service, who have been retired from active duty because they are unable to draw and eat their rations, and make out of them a lot of Indian agents?

Mr. FRANKLIN. Is that the reason they are retired?

Mr. HASKELL. Is that what you are going to do?

Mr. FRANKLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Certainly.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Does the gentleman know the date of the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the War Department to the Interior?

Mr. HASKELL. I cannot state it precisely.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Would not the same question which the gentleman has propounded to gentlemen who oppose this point of order have been applicable then? That is, would it not be in order to transfer all the military departments of the Government to the Interior Department?

Mr. HASKELL. I will answer the gentleman. If when the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department was up the gentleman had moved that the entire military organization of the United States should be put into the hands of the Interior Department, I would have objected.

Mr. FRANKLIN. On what kind of a bill was this transfer made in 1849, for that is the year of the transfer?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not know. I was not then in Congress.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The gentleman is talking a great deal about it. He ought to know.

Mr. HASKELL. I am not discussing the date of this transfer. I am stating that bringing in here, contrary to a long line of parliamentary precedents, a proposition entirely foreign to the bill under consideration I deem to be unwise and unsafe. While we are here discussing an appropriation bill for the support of the Army, for its better organization, and for its discipline, every word of which is a word of direction as to how officers and soldiers shall be managed and how they shall conduct themselves, you propose to bring in a great question that ought to occupy the attention of the House for two or three days; you propose to bring it in here under cover of this bill and virtually cut off debate upon it and spring it unawares upon the House. I am one who deprecates this action, not merely because I conceive it violates some puny principle of parliamentary law, but I give notice that I will oppose, and that I believe I ought to oppose, in the name of civilization and humanity, this entire movement to take these Indians out from the hands of the civil authorities and put them into the hands of the military.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. What is the question pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] makes the point of order that the proposed section is not germane to this bill and that it is new legislation and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it proper to speak to the merits of the bill on this point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair called the gentleman from Maine to order.

Mr. FRANKLIN. The gentleman spoke to the merits of the bill, not to the point of order.

Mr. RYAN. So did others.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to speak to the demerits of the bill.

Mr. BANKS. I will confine my remarks to the question of order. The appropriations for the Indian service are fixed by law, and not one dollar of it can be changed or transferred to any other department except by another law. Now, this amendment proposes to do that. It is therefore a law that touches an appropriation of money, and it must have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole House; and I make that point of order upon it. If any measure touches an appropriation this measure touches an appropriation, because it takes it bodily from where the law puts it and transfers it to another department.

Mr. SCALES. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to make the point that this amendment must be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. The original appropriation has been made and was considered in Committee of the Whole, and this is merely to provide for the disbursing of a part of the fund already appropriated, and which has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FINLEY. Are we not in Committee of the Whole now? If not, where are we?

Mr. BANKS. I understand that we are now in Committee of the Whole, but that is not the point. I desire now to say a word in relation to the amendment being germane to the Army appropriation bill. The gentleman from Colorado says that it is germane because it requires or assigns new duties to the officers of the Army. They are civil duties, not military duties, and therefore the amendment is not germane because it does not apply to them, and not being germane, the question whether it reduces expenses or not is not material, because under the rule it must be germane and also be in the line of a reduction of expenditures.

Sir, the Army has never reduced expenses in anything which has ever been transferred to it from other branches of the service. In this case there is a clear increase of expenses, for the bill provides that the officers who are to perform these duties shall receive an increase of salary and the reduction which the gentleman claims is a supposititious one. There is an absolute increase, and the duties assigned to the officers of the Army by the proposed amendment are not germane to that department or to the purposes of this bill. They are civil and not military duties and the amendment does actually increase expenses so far as the salaries of the officers are concerned, and as I have said, there is nothing in the line of retrenchment about it except a supposititious reduction of expenditures.

Mr. COX, of New York. I remember very well when Speaker Kerr made a decision on this case. I remember meeting you, Mr. Chairman, in his room after he made that decision. That decision was absolutely true and just. I hope it will be carried out, for if it be not carried out anybody can move any amendment to this bill. They can put in the Agricultural Department as a branch of the War Department, or anything at all. It is not wise, it is not just to put in any sort of legislation on an appropriation bill if we can avoid it. All this business of transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department undertakes to say this, that the whole government of the Indians, the civilization of the Indians, their Christianization shall be given to war, to force; that is all it means, and I protest against it. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that you will rule out all such amendments.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I call the gentleman from New York to order. He is not speaking to the point of order, but to the merits of the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is no merit in it, and I am not speaking of that.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Then, why speak about it at all?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope the committee will hear me for a moment upon this question. I think a correct decision on this question is more important than the passage or non-passage of the amendment proposed. After long experience, a rule was adopted for the purpose of preventing extraordinary legislation being introduced into appropriation bills. The rule provides for two things: first, that the amendment shall be germane to the subject-matter under consideration, and that is enough to bring this amendment under the rule; and also, that it shall reduce expenses. Now, what is the existing law upon this subject? It establishes a bureau of Indian affairs and puts it under the charge of the Interior Department—under a civil branch of the Government. The bil' under consideration is a bill for the purpose of making appropriations for the Army. Now, is there any similarity or any connection between the existing law which is proposed to be changed and the object of this bill? They are wholly unlike in purpose, in intent, and in character. You may just as well say, if you can change an existing law and make your amendment come within the meaning of the rule by the provision that the Army shall perform certain duties, that you may change the duties of the Director of the Mint upon this bill, and say that they shall be performed by the General of the Army. You may change the duties of any officer of the Government, and say that because those duties are directed to be performed by the Army your amendment is germane. That does not make it germane. The existing law must be germane to the bill before the committee before you can make any change in it.

Mr. FRANKLIN. Were not these duties performed for fifty years by Army officers?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But the law has been changed.

Mr. FRANKLIN. In what respect? The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The law now says that there shall be a Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the Secretary of the Interior and you propose to change that law by this amendment, and this law is dissimilar to any law relating to the Army. Sir, this is a dangerous precedent to set and it was against such precedents as this that the rule was intended to guard the country from the danger of hasty and inconsiderate legislation on appropriation bills often in the last hours of the session.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to say a word further upon the point of order, and I will not detain the House long. It is well known that under the laws of the land as they now exist the duties of a large portion of the Army are now connected with the Indian department. It is well known that a large portion of the Army is stationed on the frontier for the purpose of controlling and managing these Indians. It is well known that there is already a conflict between the Interior Department and the War Department in regard to the management of the Indians. We have from time to time reports from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs urging that this conflict be abolished and that the question be settled one way or the other.

Now, when under the law of the land it is the duty of the Army to take charge of the Indians or of Indian affairs while there is trouble among the Indians, when this jurisdiction is conferred upon the Army by the law of the land, and we propose in this bill simply to add to those duties of the Army, gentlemen say that the proposition is not germane to the bill. If that is not germane to this bill, I would like to know what is germane.

We have in this bill reorganized the Army. We have made appropriations for the Army and directed what that Army shall do. Among other things we now propose that on the frontier the Army shall step in and perform the duties which are now performed under the Interior Department. Is not that germane? It is a part of the duties of the Army. If that is not germane, then it seems to me that nothing can be germane. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I call the attention of gentlemen to section 2062 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

The President may require any military officer of the United States to execute the duties of an Indian agent; and when such duties are required of any military officer, he shall perform the same without any other compensation than his actual traveling expenses.

By the law of the land, as it now exists, an officer can be assigned to those duties. We propose to say that all the duties, not one only, of the Indian department shall be performed by Army officers, not by order of the President but by virtue of the law of the land.

Mr. BANKS. I desire but a moment for explanation. I understand that because we are now in Committee of the Whole my suggestion in regard to acting upon this provision first in Committee of the Whole is not supposed to be applicable. But this subject has not been referred to us in Committee of the Whole; the Committee of the Whole has no jurisdiction over it. It has never been referred to us by the House, and therefore we cannot consider it. It is not a consideration of a subject such as the rule provides for to take it up under the five-minute debate in Committee of the Whole as an amendment to something else. If it is to be considered in Committee of the Whole and is a bill affecting our appropriations, then it must first be referred to us by the House before we can obtain jurisdiction of it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. The Army appropriation bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole by the House, and hence whatever is germane to that bill has been referred to this committee.

I do not desire to review the arguments of various gentlemen who have taken the position that this amendment is subject to the point of order. But I do desire to call the attention of the Chair to the ruling of Speaker Kerr upon this question two years ago. I think I can show from his ruling that this amendment, in the shape in which it is now presented, is not subject to the point of order, is not subject to the objections which were then made against the former proposition.

Mr. BANKS. Speaker Kerr ruled against it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. He did, and I will show from his decision why he ruled against it. This amendment has been so drawn as to meet every objection made by Speaker Kerr in ruling against that proposition.

Mr. BANKS. But you cannot show that he did not rule against it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I say he did rule against the proposition, pure and simple, contained in a little section not one-quarter as long as my finger, and which upon its face was not manifestly a proposition to retrench expenditures.

At that time the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration. The bill had no reference whatever to the Army. An amendment was offered to that bill, a very short section, providing simply that the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be abolished, and that the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management of Indian affairs and all matters arising out of Indian relations should be lodged with the Secretary of War. That was the sum and substance of the simple provision that was under consideration two years ago. Now, as to whether that was germane or not to the bill under consideration, Speaker Kerr ruled that it was germane. It abolished the whole Indian department, and he ruled that, as the Interior Department was treated of in the bill then under consideration, that amendment was germane to the bill.

The bill now under consideration is a bill making appropriations for the Army, and this amendment is equally germane to this bill, by the reasoning of the Speaker two years ago. He decided clearly and unequivocally that the amendment was germane to that bill; hence I imagine there is hardly room for controversy on that point.

The next question is: does this amendment reduce expenditures? Now, let me call the attention of the Chair (and it is the best argument that can be made against the point of order) to the reason given by Speaker Kerr two years ago in support of his position that the amendment then under consideration did not manifestly upon its face retrench expenditures.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman one moment. His ideas correspond with mine precisely. The amendment two years ago was germane to the bill then before the House, for that was a bill making appropriations, among other things, for the Interior Department. Therefore the amendment was germane to the bill, because it proposed to change the law relating to the Interior Department on the same bill which made appropriations for that Department. Accordingly it was germane to that bill. But when you propose to put on this bill, making appropriations for the Army, a provision relating to a bureau of the Interior Department, it certainly is not germane to the bill, because it does not relate to the Army.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. The principle is precisely the same. Here we have a bill——

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. COX, of New York. If the Chair will state the pending question I will state my point.

The CHAIRMAN. This question is on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. COX, of New York. We are running under the five-minute rule on this point of order, and I submit that further debate is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The five-minute rule does not apply to a discussion of this kind. The extent to which debate shall be carried on a point of order is exclusively within the control of the Chair. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Colorado and then rule upon the point.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. The principle is precisely the same. Here are appropriations concerning the Army; and when a proposition is made to place new duties and obligations upon the Army, and in doing so to abolish a certain branch of governmental service, it is just as much outside of the rule as it was two years ago when the bill to which the amendment was moved had reference to the Legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government. But, sir, what were the reasons given in regard to retrenchment of expenditures? Mr. Kerr said:

The Chair sees that in this bill there is no provision for the practical management of this Bureau of Indian Affairs if it shall be transferred as proposed by this section. There is no appropriation for that purpose, no regulation of and no indication how the duties of that bureau after it is transferred shall be performed or by whom those duties shall be performed, other than in the somewhat general language of that section itself.

I ask the Chair to examine the language of that section which he will find cited in this decision.

Now let me read further:

The Chair might also hold that because it requires the duties now intrusted to Indian agents to be hereafter performed by soldiers, it is the intention of the framers of the provision to require those duties to be performed by those persons without additional compensation. But that does not appear.

It did not appear in the proposition offered two years ago that the duties were to be performed without additional compensation; but in this amendment it is clearly and unequivocally provided that there shall be no additional compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Does not this amendment provide for additional compensation?

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Does it not provide additional compensation to retired officers who shall be assigned to this duty?

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. That has been talked about; and, as I said before, it is demonstrated to a mathematical certainty that if these duties should be entirely performed by retired officers the additional pay they would receive would not begin to equal the amount received by those who now perform this duty. What offices are abolished? The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the inspector, the superintendent of Indian affairs, and a board of Indian commissioners. All these offices are wiped out of existence.

Now let me read just a little further from the decision:

But the Chair must take official notice of the fact that in this bill—

I ask the Chair to pay particular attention to this because it was upon this ground principally that Speaker Kerr based his ruling—

But the Chair must take official notice of the fact that in this bill no appropriation is made for the Army or for the performance of any of its duties in any of its several bureaus or departments.

How different the case now presented. Here is a bill making appropriations for the Army, providing every dollar upon which the Army is to be supported for the next fiscal year, including pay for its present duties as well as for the duties that will devolve upon it if the section now proposed should be enacted into a law.

And the Chair must further officially know that in the ordinary course of legislative proceedings such an appropriation bill must be introduced and enacted before the session expires as of necessity will embrace the further and complete regulation of this entire subject.

These objections are now entirely removed. Here are appropriations for the Army; here is a provision preventing any increase of force or any increase of pay. Therefore I submit the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has made the point of order that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] as an additional section is not germane to this appropriation bill; that it changes existing law, but that it does not retrench expenditures; that therefore it contravenes Rule 120, and should be ruled out by the Chair.

This subject has twice been ruled upon since Rule 120 was modified as it now stands. In the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, when the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government was under consideration, a proposition was moved as an amendment to that bill to transfer the duties of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department. The point of order was made as in Committee of the Whole that the amendment was not germane, and that it did not retrench expenses. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] was the chairman of the Committee of the Whole; but by unanimous consent the point of order was not decided in the committee, but was reserved until the bill was reported to the House, in order that Speaker KERR might rule upon it.

The ruling of Mr. KERR was given after mature reflection, and it has been regarded as a leading authority in regard to the construction of this rule.

In that decision, as published in the RECORD of the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, page 2824, the Speaker held that the provision then offered was germane to the bill then pending for the reason that it related to officers for whom appropriations were then being made, namely, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other officers in the Indian Bureau. For the same reason the Chair now holds that the provision submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina is germane to the pending bill, as it relates to the duties of officers for whom appropriations are now being made, namely, the officers of the Army.

What is to be understood by a provision being germane to a bill? It is not necessary that the provision should be a wise one or one that would promote the best interests of the service, but only that it have relation to the subject. This corresponds with the meaning of the word "germane" as defined by Webster—"akin to, or appropriate, or fitting, or relevant to." This amendment relates to the subjects embraced in this bill, it has relation to the duties of the officers of the Army, and is therefore germane to the bill, as it defines what the duties of those officers shall be. It is new legislation, as a matter of course, and it increases very largely the duties of the military officers of the Government; but such new legislation is not out of order as an amendment to an appropriation bill, or as an original provision in such a bill, if it be germane thereto and shall retrench expenditures.

Hence the only question left for the Chair to decide is whether this provision does or does not retrench expenditures. Speaker KERR held that the provision as it was moved to the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress did not retrench expenditures, or that the fact did not appear on its face or by the terms of the amendment that it did, and therefore he ruled it out. That provision was modified and afterward moved to the Indian appropriation bill. The section as then moved had been submitted to Speaker KERR, and it was so prepared as to remove his objections to it. The present incumbent of the chair was called upon then to rule upon that provision, and before doing so submitted his opinion, which was delivered on the 6th of June of that session, (first session, Forty-fourth Congress,) to Speaker KERR in writing, and it received his unqualified approval. So then both rulings may be regarded as having received the sanction of Mr. KERR and as expressing his opinion on this subject. In that opinion delivered by the present incumbent of the chair it was held that the proposed provision transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department was germane to that bill and that it did retrench expenditures. Without reciting the reasons then given the Chair will simply refer to that decision as fully sustaining the position now taken. The Chair holds for the reasons therein stated that this proposed section does retrench expenditures, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I move this bill be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BURCHARD. I hold the gentleman from Kentucky cannot yield to any one unless he withdraws his motion to adjourn.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask leave of the House to take from the Speaker's table——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky must withdraw his motion to adjourn or nothing else is in order.

Mr. KNOTT. I cannot withdraw the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr CRAPO: The petition of W. R. Browne and Thomas Fitch second, for compensation from the Japanese indemnity fund for damages sustained by reason of the refusal of the Japanese officials to allow their vessel to land on the shores of Japan and dry its cargo which had become wet from leakage—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIDSON: The petition of E. B. Olmstead and other citizens of Florida, against the passage of the bill authorizing William A. Dormer and others to construct a ship-canal at the head of Lake George, Florida—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina: The petition of Elizabeth P. Birt, to be reimbursed for losses during the war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Sioux Falls to Rockport, Dakota Territory—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MILLS: The petition of Samuel Harper, to be relieved from the payment of certain moneys on account of certain United States revenue stamps stolen from him—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Resolutions adopted at the ninth annual convention of the American Society of Civil Engineers, asking for the re-enactment of the law which created a board to test iron, steel, and other metals; the reappropriation of an unexpended balance, and for an additional appropriation for the purposes of the board—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: The petition of the delegates of the Creek, Cherokee, Chickasaw, and Choctaw Nations, for relief for the soldiers of the First, Second, and Third Indian Regiments of the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS, of New York: The petition of Robert Paton, for an extension of a patent seat for schools and public halls—to the Committee on Patents.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 27, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Houghton, Osgood & Co. and others, of Boston, engaged in the manufacture and sale of books, praying for a thorough investigation of the bearing of any change in the duties on books and the materials which enter into their manufacture before any change be made, and that the subject may be postponed until another session of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of Miss Sarah R. Robinson, surviving daughter of Henry Robinson, a soldier and teamster in the war of 1812, praying the passage of an act granting her an allowance as compensation for services rendered and property lost by her father in the service of the Government during that war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of A. C. Twining, praying for an extension of a patent for an improvement in the manufacture of ice; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4382) granting a pension to Jonathan Roberts, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3283) for the relief of Andrew J. Worth, reported it without amendment.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1102) to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, respectively, to commence and prosecute suits against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4943) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make and enforce regulations relative to the sale of coal, and also building regulations, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1222) to regulate the sale of coal by retail dealers in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 977) to abolish the board of police commissioners of the District of Columbia, have instructed me to report it adversely with the recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as the board of police commissioners is to be abolished by the District Government bill now pending in the Senate. That clause of the bill has been acted on by the Senate.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DORSEY, from the committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2057) to amend the charter of the Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 182) for the benefit of the penny-lunch house of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

TRUSTEES OF THE COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY.

Mr. DORSEY. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4713) supplementary to the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating Columbia College, District of Columbia," to report it without amendment. As it is a very short bill, simply changing the time of holding the annual meeting of the trustees of the College from a late day in June to an earlier day, I ask the present consideration of the bill. There can be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It so modifies the act of March 3, 1873, as to authorize the trustees and overseers of the Columbian University to hold their annual meeting on such day in May or June as they shall appoint, instead of being held on "the Tuesday next preceding the last Wednesday in June."

Mr. THURMAN. Let the title of the bill be again read.

The Secretary read the title of the bill.

Mr. DORSEY. I will simply state that the bill changes the time of the annual meeting of the trustees of Columbia College so that they can meet at the commencement time of the college.

Mr. THURMAN. Is that all?

Mr. DORSEY. That is all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1320) for the erection of a fire-proof building for the National Museum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1321) to authorize the construction of a public building at La Crosse, Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1322) for the relief of William C. Easton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1323) to incorporate the Apalachian Mining Association of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BECK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1324) to repeal existing taxes on the capital and deposits of banks and bankers and to impose taxes on their dividends in excess of 8 per cent. per annum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1325) to regulate and control the disposition of and accounting for certain funds named therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EATON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1326) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1327) for the relief of the widow and children of General William Gates, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. WALLACE and Mr. TELLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. KELLOGG submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (S. No. 942) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. EATON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of David Huestis be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Patents.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of C. W. Brink be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

JOHN G. KENDRICK AND OTHERS.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be, and is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, if to do so, in his opinion, be compatible with the public interests, any correspondence, not heretofore communicated, between this Government and that of Nicaragua, relative to the claims against the latter of John G. Kendrick and other citizens of the United States for personal injuries on October 19, 1855, at Virgin Bay, in the Territory of Nicaragua, alleged to have been inflicted by soldiers acting under the authority or by the permission of that Government; and whether any and, if any, what steps ought to be taken by this Government to effect an adjustment of said claims, with a statement of the nature and amount thereof and the names of the persons on whose behalf they have been severally preferred.

This is a resolution of inquiry requesting the communication of correspondence, if any, and such recommendations as the President may see fit to make. If it is desired, I can make a statement in regard to the matter. Otherwise I should like to have the resolution take the usual course.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no objection to it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

M. MAURICE DELFOSSE.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it will be remembered by the Senate that some two months ago a call was made upon the State Department for the correspondence between the British government and our own in relation to the appointment of Mr. Delfosse as a commissioner under the treaty of Washington. It was said at the time that all the correspondence was not communicated, that only that was communicated which was strictly between our Government and the government of Great Britain. It is now stated—I have seen it several times in the newspapers—that the Belgian government has felt aggrieved by some withholding of correspondence in some form, and that as a matter of justice to Mr. Delfosse the whole of it should be called for and published. As an act of entire justice to that gentleman, if any injustice has been done him, and in order that there may be no withholding of anything connected with the case, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate copies of all correspondence not heretofore submitted and of all memoranda and minutes in the possession of the Government relating to the selection of M. Maurice Delfosse as one of the commissioners under the treaty of Washington on the fisheries question.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1266) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be reported for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Two or three days ago the Senate passed a bill for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the second or New York circuit, where the Judiciary Committee were unanimously of the opinion that an additional officer should be appointed. They are also unanimously of the opinion that an additional circuit judge should be appointed for the seventh circuit, which embraces Chicago. In my judgment, there is much more need of an additional judge there than in New York, though I believe there is one needed in New York. There are really two circuit judges needed in the circuit in which I live. My eastern friends cannot understand how it is that the Federal courts are so full of business in the Western States. In the first place, the Western States are debtors to the Eastern States, and every non-resident can sue in the Federal courts. That is one reason why there are so few suits in the Federal courts in the Eastern States. Indiana and Illinois are checkered with railroads, and I am sorry to say that a majority of them are in the custody of the circuit courts.

I have a tabular statement of the business for the last two years and a half in the northern district of Illinois, which shows an absolute necessity for additional judicial force in the city of Chicago. With the permission of the Senate, I will read from this statement. On the 1st of January, 1876, there were pending in the different branches of the Federal courts in Chicago suits to the number of 3,045. During that year there were commenced 1,965 suits. There were disposed of during the year 1,310. There were pending in the circuit court on the 1st of January, 1877, 3,702 suits. There were commenced during that year 1,929, a few suits less than were commenced in 1876; in 1876 there were 1,965, and in 1877, 1,929. There were disposed of during the year 1877, 1,248 suits, but there were pending on the 1st of January, 1878, 4,388 suits, and there were commenced from the 1st of January, 1878, to the 1st of May, 1878, 817 suits, and there were disposed of during the same time 594 suits, leaving upon the docket on the 1st of May, 1878, 4,606 suits.

It is a mere denial of justice to the suitors in that court to leave them with the present judicial force. I have a letter here from the clerk of the court, and I know the fact to be true, that the circuit and district judges are employed constantly the whole year except a few weeks in the months of August and September when the lawyers are out of town taking their vacation. There is also a large business in Indiana and in the southern district of Illinois, in which particularly the management of railroads devolves upon the circuit judge, but a great deal of that is done by the district judge. Many of these suits are foreclosures of railroad mortgages, probably eight or ten. They branch out into various claims and accounts that make suits of themselves and require the taking of testimony, so that there are really more suits upon the docket than would seem from this tabular statement.

I do not believe there is any portion of the United States in which an additional judicial force is as necessary as in Chicago. The circuit judge, who is one of the ablest men in this country, the peer of anybody as a judge in the United States, either on the Supreme Court bench or on any other bench, is really worn down by excessive work, as he writes me, and at the present time he is ill from excessive work.

I do hope that there will be no opposition to the immediate passage of this bill, as I wish action upon it in the other House at the present session. I think there is more need of action in this case than there was in the case of the circuit judge provided for in New York. My friend, the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] who seemed the other day to be opposed to this legislation, was kind enough to say to me, after I had exhibited him this tabular statement, that he had no idea of the extent of business in the Western States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Illinois please state the number of cases included in his statement arising out of bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir. There were upon the 1st of January, 1876, 459 bankruptcy cases. There were upon the 1st of January, 1877, 637 bankruptcy cases; and there are at present 1,167. There are upon the circuit court docket at the present time, of chancery cases, 1,255; common law cases, 1,093; and in the district court, other than bankruptcy cases, 1,023.

Mr. COCKRELL. About one-fourth of all the cases on the docket are bankruptcy cases.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I say there are thirty-five hundred cases upon the docket other than bankruptcy cases, at the present time. The district court at Chicago is engaged nearly all the time in the investigation of bankruptcy cases and in the investigation of admiralty business. The admiralty business along the lakes has concentrated at Chicago. It formerly concentrated at Buffalo and Detroit more than at Chicago, but it does not do so now. There is really business enough at Chicago to occupy the district judge in attending to admiralty cases. The winding up of these bankruptcy cases will occupy, of course, four or five years.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if in his judgment the business will not be increased in the Federal courts in the West by the abolition of the bankruptcy law, rather than diminished?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think the business of the circuit courts will be increased. The district courts will be relieved. But when the bankrupt law is repealed the suits will be brought by the eastern creditors in the circuit courts of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not antagonize the present consideration of the bill; I have no objection to its being considered at the present time; but I am opposed to the principle of this bill and of all similar bills. While I admit that a large amount of business has accumulated in these courts, that accumulation has been caused to a very great extent by the bankruptcy proceedings and by the increase of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The remedy has been applied already in part by the Senate in the repeal of the bankrupt law, and the additional remedy should be in taking away much of the present jurisdiction of the Federal courts and leaving them with only a certain class of business; and with that business in their hands they could attend to it amply and speedily. The point I make is that they have now jurisdiction of classes of cases which should properly be vested in the State courts. Their jurisdiction has been extended until they are absolutely absorbing the jurisdiction of the State courts. I am opposed to this and all kindred bills, and upon its passage I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILL. As I understood the question, it is, will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill by unanimous consent? Is not the question whether the bill should be considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senate had agreed to consider it, I supposed. If not, I hope there will not be any objection to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was read for information at the instance of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object.

Mr. HILL. I must say, with all due deference to my friend from Illinois, which is very great, that I shall object to the bill. I am so much opposed to this daily increase of Federal judges that I shall object even to the consideration of such a measure, and I will do all I can against its passage.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I move to take the bill up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been read.

Mr. MORGAN. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Conkling,	Hoar,	Mitchell,
Armstrong,	Davis of Illinois,	Howe,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Bruce,	Eustis,	Kernan,	Spencer,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Grover,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Windom.
Coke,	Harris,	Maxey,

NAYS—14.

Bailey,	Hereford,	Merrimon,	Wallace,
Beck,	Hill,	Morgan,	Withers.
Cockrell,	McCreery,	Ransom,
Eaton,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—31.

Anthony,	Davis of West Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,
Bayard,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Matthews,	Sharon,
Butler,	Garland,	Oglesby,	Voorhees,
Chaffee,	Gordon,	Paddock,	Wadleigh,
Christiancy,	Ingalls,	Patterson,	Whyte.
Conover,	Johnston,	Randolph,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1266) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BECK. I should like to hear the bill read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read the third time?

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me, sir, that we are increasing the Federal judiciary with an unnecessary celerity; and if this increase goes on, it will be very much better, in my view of the subject, to give additional judges throughout the United States. They are needed in some other localities quite as much as in the seventh circuit. In the fifth circuit, comprising the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, we have but one circuit judge; he is an able man, a very hard-working man, but he is unable to get around to his various circuit courts more than once, I believe, in the course of a year. I have not taken the trouble to ascertain the size of the dockets in that large circuit, but I am quite sure that they must exceed in number and in magnitude the dockets that are mentioned here in reference to the seventh circuit. There is certainly more necessity for an additional circuit judge in the fifth circuit than there can be in the seventh circuit, because the territory is so immensely large and the judge is compelled to travel a great part of his time to reach his courts. But, sir, I have not thought it proper to bring forward a proposition for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the fifth circuit, notwithstanding the acknowledged necessity for such an appointment or the creation of such an office. I have not done so, because the times are not and have not been favorable for many years past to an impartial selection of judges.

I would not throw into the discussion of a question of this character any political consideration whatever. I would earnestly seek to exclude such a view from the question of the appointment of our district or circuit judges. I do not remember a single instance since the close of the war where any man who has been in the slightest degree tinctured with democratic views of national policy, or rather with democratic views of the Constitution of the United States, has been appointed upon a circuit or upon a district bench or upon any other bench. If there are such appointments, they have entirely escaped my attention. I do not claim that democrats should be appointed to these offices any more than I concede the right on the part of other gentlemen to claim that republicans should be appointed; but it does appear to me that when the appointments all go in the same direction, when no consideration is given at all to any other question than that of a man's political proclivities and beliefs, it is time we should pause a little and wait for the arrival of that period of time, not now far distant, when two functionaries of this Government, one democratic and the other republican, can act with some degree of justice toward each other with reference to these appointments. After the 4th of March next, I believe it is conceded everywhere that the Senate of the United States will be democratic; and the President will then be republican; and I think that will be perhaps the best opportunity that the people of the United States will ever find, or may find for many years to come, for having appointments to high judicial offices made without strict reference to the party alignment of the appointee.

It seems to me that, in the presence of the fact that we are about now to cut down the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in a very great degree by the repeal of the bankrupt law, it would be wise and it would be prudent and it would be patriotic for us to defer action upon this subject until the event that I speak of. And, Mr. President, there is no occasion, it seems to me, for hurrying bills through just at the close of this session of Congress for the appointment of judges under these circumstances. If gentlemen want to give to the Federal judiciary a stronger political complexion than it now has, if that is what they mean by urging these measures forward, let it be avowed, so that the democrats here or elsewhere can take care of this subject and see that something is done for the preservation of what I claim to be the rights of the people, or at least the rights of the courts of justice by freeing them from such influences as I have named.

I have been quite surprised, I must confess, that almost every morning for several days past we have made a circuit or a district judge. A project was brought into the Senate very early in the session which had for its object the reorganization of the entire judiciary of the United States. That bill seems to have slept in the committee. It seems to have had no attention paid to it. It has not been reported back, so far as I am advised, nor do I know that the committee have ever taken action upon it. But now that bill is separated into several projects, and is brought forward measure after measure, and day after day we find ourselves making judges by what has been announced on the floor of the Senate as the interested feeling or motives of gentlemen who vote for these bills. Senators have got up on the floor and complained, when judges have been sought to be created by the act of the Senate, that their cases had not been considered and reported by the committee, and they even wanted pledges, it would seem, at the hands of the committee that they would bring in their bills at an early day, so that they might have a chance, I suppose, to swap with them their mutual assistance in making judges in the different parts of the United States. That is not a fair way of dealing with this question.

There are gentlemen here who look with apprehension and even with alarm upon the increase of the numbers of the Federal judiciary, to say nothing about the jurisdiction of these courts; men who have for a long time entertained these opinions among the very deepest and most profound convictions of their minds. They do not have a fair opportunity when the matter is brought forward in this way, when a particular section or a particular locality comes forward and draws to its influence the surrounding power of the different States in the same circuit or in the vicinity, and at the same time draws perhaps upon the expectations of other gentlemen for the creation of like offices in other parts of the Union.

Now, let us ask, if the question is to be taken up, is it the true policy of the Government of the United States to increase the Federal judiciary, either circuit judges or district judges? As we increase the number of circuit judges, as I understand the matter, it would simply withdraw to a large extent from the district judges the duties they are now performing in the circuits. They can hold circuit courts. They can decide circuit-court causes in the absence of a circuit judge. Do we understand that the district judges are so overworked that they cannot get along and discharge their duties and cannot free the dockets of these causes. I have not heard that statement yet; and yet the district judges are swarming throughout the entire length and breadth of the land, some States having as many as three district judges within their borders. I venture to say that there is not a district judge in the United States who works nearly so hard as the judges of the supreme court of the State of Alabama. These judges of the district court are not, I suppose, inferior men. They ought not to be. They ought to be men of equal capacity with the circuit judges. No man ought to be allowed to go upon the district bench who cannot decide any cause in a circuit as well as in a district court. If he is not qualified to preside in a circuit court he ought not to be permitted to go upon the district bench. They have the opportunity under the law to hold those courts in the absence of the circuit judges; and the complaint made here is not that there are not a sufficient number of judges in the land to try the causes, but not a sufficient number of circuit judges. That is the complaint made, as I understand it.

I thought it was proper, Mr. President, I thought it was my duty to state these grounds of objection—without any particular preparation, for the matter has been hurried before the Senate this morning rather in a summary way—because I conceive that the bill which is brought here is one of very great importance to the country, and one that deserves a more deliberate consideration than can be given to it in the morning hour, and one that deserves consideration in connection with the whole subject of the reorganization of the Federal judiciary of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have very little to say except that I concur in every word that has fallen from the Senator from Alabama. I am utterly oppposed to the increase of the number of judges of the Federal judiciary at this time, and I hardly think there could have been a more unfortunate moment selected for the increase of the Federal judges.

As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has so well said, and it is true, we have repealed the bankrupt law at this session. I suppose every Senator on this floor knows, certainly every Senator who has been accustomed to practice before the courts, that for several years perhaps half the business that has been before the Federal courts, both circuit and district, and especially the district courts, has been business growing out of the bankrupt law. I think I may safely say that far more than half the business that has been transacted by the Federal courts in my State has arisen from the bankrupt law. Now you have repealed that law. You thereby lessen the business of the courts one-half. Why at the very time that we are thus lessening the business of the courts should we be in such haste to increase the number of judges? If the present judges have been able to discharge the duties devolving upon them and try the cases now before them, when the number of cases growing out of the bankrupt law has been so enormous, what reason have we to say that they will not be more able and with more expedition to discharge their duties and try the cases when this bankrupt law shall have been repealed; and I suppose every Senator admits that it will be repealed beyond all controversy, and that that repeal will certainly take effect by the 1st of September?

I simply wish to enter my protest against this continual increase in the number of Federal judges. I bear witness to what the Senator from Alabama has said as to the fifth judicial circuit. I suppose it is one of the largest in the Union; it has a great deal of business. The circuit judge is an able man; he labors well; and perhaps there is as much necessity for an additional circuit judge in that circuit and as much necessity for an additional district judge in the State of Georgia as can be found in any portion of this country; and yet I, like him, have not brought forward a proposition to increase the number of judges because I do not believe it is necessary. It would be convenient; it would be a division of labor which doubtless would be very convenient and agreeable to the judges; but I believe, in view of the repeal of the bankrupt law, that the judges we have will be amply sufficient to attend to all the business that comes before them.

I will say frankly one more thing. I am sure I do not desire, as the Senator from Alabama has well said, to introduce anything political into this debate; but when I know that almost every man who is administering justice in the Federal courts in my section of the country is of one political party, I am not anxious to increase the number.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, in the hope that a vote will be taken on this bill, and that at one o'clock, if there be any further discussion, the Senate will decide to allow the vote to be taken by a suspension of the regular order, I beg leave to say a word or two. I would not do it unless I thought that could be done, and I will not occupy more than five minutes. I would not reply to the Senator from Alabama at all if the gentleman had not made an attack on the Judiciary Committee. He says we ought to have reported a general bill in relation to the reorganization of the Federal courts. Why, sir, such a bill was introduced. He says the committee have never considered it. They have considered it. They have considered every bill that was brought before them; they have perfected all the bills; but there is a difference of opinion in the Judiciary Committee as to whether this is the proper time to reorganize the Federal judiciary. Then, inasmuch as no report will come from them upon that subject, they not being willing to reorganize it now, the next question is, there being certain places where business is overwhelming the courts, and where suitors are denied all justice, and where they are literally ruined by their cases being kept on the docket for one, two, three, or four years, shall the Judiciary Committee stand still and say that no relief shall be afforded to those people?

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if the cases on the Supreme Court docket are not now, by reason of their accumulation, one, two, or three years behind?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Certainly; of course they are.

Mr. HILL. Will you remedy that by increasing the number of judges?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Increasing the number of judges upon that court?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, sir; but we can have business disposed of in the courts below. I do not believe adding to the number of judges of the Supreme Court will lessen the number of cases there. I believe we could submit a plan; but you would not vote for it. Neither the Senator from Alabama nor the Senator from Georgia would vote for any general bill upon this subject which required the President of the United States to appoint eighteen judges. That is what I want done.

Mr. HILL. I say this to the Senator: as he cannot remedy the evils growing out of the accumulation of business in the Supreme Court by an increase of the number of judges—you could perhaps remedy them by a reorganization of that system—and as the same evils exist in the district and circuit courts, would it not be better to delay this increase of judges until we can have a general reorganization of the judiciary?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is two or three years hence.

Mr. HILL. Why not bring it forward now?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Because you will not vote for it.

Mr. HILL. How do you know?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. You will not vote to create eighteen judges now. That is the basis of my bill. You will not vote for it.

Mr. HILL. How do you know we will not vote for it?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am perfectly certain you will not.

Mr. HILL. Bring forward a bill for a general reorganization, and it will be time enough to see whether it will be voted for or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. My dear sir, you have made your speech; you are not asking a question. I will go on.

The Judiciary Committee was met then with this question: Here are two or three circuits that imperatively demand an increase of judicial force; shall that condition of things remain for three or four years, and the suitors there be ruined, business accumulating, cases commenced for delay? Shall all that be continued? The committee have reported very few bills. There was one reported for the city of New York and I found a very mild opposition to that because the junior Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] advocated that bill. The opposition came from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] who afterward came to me privately and stated his conviction that these courts were needed.

Now, we cannot wait and have cases accumulating that cannot be disposed of. The Senator from Georgia is totally mistaken in supposing that when the bankrupt law is repealed the two judges in Chicago can transact all the business there. There is more business in the southern district of Illinois than there is in the whole State of Georgia and the Federal courts.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does not much of the business accumulated in the circuit courts in Illinois arise from the fact of the plaintiffs in the suits residing in the East who are unwilling to trust the State courts.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is true.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then so far as the Senator's argument is concerned, if they are delayed in prosecuting their cases it is because they select the tribunal to try them; and therefore the argument of the Senator that suitors are delayed I think has but little force.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Why, Mr. President, the Constitution says that a citizen of Delaware shall have the privilege of suing for his debt, when he sues in Illinois, in the Federal courts. That has existed from the foundation of the Government. Under Mr. Carpenter's bill a few years ago there were certain cases removed from the State courts to the Federal courts, and I will agree at the proper time to remedy that legislation. But this business in Chicago does not grow out of that. It grows out of its immense commerce which is growing every day. It grows out of its trade, it grows out of the immense business that is centered there. It does not grow out of the removal of causes from the State courts to the Federal courts, which has increased the business of the Federal judiciary in some respects. I do not say that in the residue of this circuit the judges cannot dispose of this business: but they cannot dispose of it there; neither can they dispose of it in the city of New York. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, with my duty to the people who are besieging you to give them another judge, so that they can have their business dispatched, I cannot sit down and fold my arms and say that this is not a convenient time for that.

Besides, the creation of circuit judges is in the direction of the general bill which I introduced in the forepart of the session. If there are any circuit judges appointed now, when that reorganization takes place there will not be so many to be appointed then. But, Mr. President, I say that whenever there is such an accumulation of business in the Federal courts under the laws of the United States as produces a denial of justice to suitors, it is the imperative duty of Congress to furnish the requisite judicial force.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Illinois says I would not vote for a bill for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary. I must say to the honorable Senator that he has no authority whatever for that statement. I will vote for a bill for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary whenever a proper bill is presented and at the proper time; but I will not vote for a bill to place upon the bench——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator allow me? I did not mean to say that he would not vote for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary, which in my opinion involves the creation of eighteen new judges; but that he would not do it at the present time. That is the point, at the present time. If I could get the Judiciary Committee and the Senate to believe that that could be done at the present time, I would be glad to have it reported; but it cannot be.

Mr. MORGAN. The honorable Senator is as free from partisan bias, according to his own avowal, as any other Senator on this floor, and he certainly has been long enough in public life to have known, as he does know and will not deny, that it is, above all things, proper that the men who are selected for the higher judgeships of the Federal judiciary should be as free as possible from mere partisan bias.

I see that the time is about to arrive when I believe the Federal judiciary can be reorganized in a way that will be perfectly just to all parties and all sections of this country; and that time will be when we have got a democratic Senate and a republican President, and really I look for the opportunity, and I shall avail myself of that opportunity if I am allowed to do so, whenever it arises, to make the effort in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois to get a pure, upright, and excellent Federal judiciary.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I believe it lacks only one minute of one o'clock——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope we shall have the vote taken.

Mr. BECK. I wish to be heard on the bill before it passes. Whether I shall go on now until the morning hour expires, or not, is indifferent to me.

The Senator from Illinois very properly said that we made rather feeble opposition the other day when the bill creating a new judge for New York was up. It was generally understood in the Chamber, at least I certainly understood, that that was the only case that was very pressing. It was brought forward as being the most pressing case, I understood, and therefore was singled out because of the great emergency there.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator allow me? What I said upon that occasion was that an additional judge was more needed in New York than anywhere except in Chicago; and this bill in relation to the circuit judge in Chicago was reported before the bill in relation to the circuit judge in New York, but that being my own circuit I thought it was courteous to the Senators from New York that I should call up the other bill first. I distinctly said that in Chicago the judge was more needed than in New York, as my remarks will show if the RECORD is referred to.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think it will be wiser for the Senate to get through with this bill now. I move that——

Mr. DORSEY. I must call for the regular order, and then I will yield for a short time.

Mr. BECK. No, you will not.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senate will proceed with and dispose of this bill. By doing so we shall certainly avoid discussion to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to call up the regular order, which is House bill No. 3259.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I now move that it be laid aside informally until this bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. COCKRELL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BECK. This bill cannot pass without three or four hours' discussion.

Mr. DORSEY. Then I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate postpone the regular order; upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. We have just heard a threat that the bill cannot pass without three or four hours' discussion. I hope those gentlemen who are in favor of this bill will vote "yea."

Mr. BECK. You may call it a threat or what you please. I believe we have a right to discuss the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. A perfect right to discuss it.

Mr. BECK. I do not intend to say anything more than that there are a number of gentlemen on this side of the House who are opposed to it, opposed to it in principle and opposed to it because there is no necessity for it, and therefore I expect to be heard at least an hour, and it may be two, and I think there are others who will want to be heard longer than I do.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President, the District government bill has now been up five days and has occupied almost the whole time of the Senate. When we adjourned on Saturday evening we had about completed the bill. If the Senator from Illinois will withdraw his motion, I think we can complete it in fifteen or twenty minutes; I am in hopes we can at all events; and then the Senator can make his motion and I shall be glad to vote with him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon postponing the regular order, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Christiancy,	Howe,	Morrill,

So the motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SARGENT, to strike out all after the word "professes," in line 5, section 10, down to and including the word "Columbia," in line 38, as follows:

And the further powers conferred by this act. The said board shall have power to define, declare, and cause to be removed or abated nuisances injurious to health; to provide for and regulate the collection, removal, and transportation of garbage, house-offal, and dead animals in and from the cities of Washington and Georgetown in said District and their immediate and more densely populated suburbs, and to provide, by contract or otherwise, for the proper performance of such service; to make rules and regulations for all hospitals used exclusively for the isolation and treatment of persons afflicted with infectious or contagious diseases; to provide for admission to hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and infirmaries for the benefit of which appropriations are made of public moneys; to provide for transportation, in proper cases to such hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and infirmaries and to make such ordinances and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect any lawful powers of the board. The said board of health shall also be charged with the care of the sick poor of the said District, furnishing medicines and medical attendance for the same, and with the burial of deceased paupers. The said board shall have power to require the draining and filling up or reducing to proper grade, as may be necessary, in their judgment, in a sanitary point of view, any lot or lots within said District; and when such necessity is found to have been occasioned by the act or neglect of the owner, the said draining, filling up, or reducing to proper grade may be done under the orders and by the direction of said board; and the expense of such draining, filling up, or reduction shall be certified to the commissioners of said District, who shall cause the same to be assessed upon the property on which said work has been done; and the amount so assessed shall be collected as other taxes are collected in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the Senator from California whether he intended to include in his motion to strike out the lines in relation to the sick poor of the District, from line 22 to line 26? I think he had better leave those lines in.

Mr. SARGENT. I intended to leave them out, and to give the board of health the powers they now possess. It is a very close question whether the board should be continued or not. I am not seeking to add one ounce to the weight of their powers.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, is it not possible to take the vote on striking out the whole of that section—I mean since the action of the Senate on Saturday—with a view to offer two sections establishing a health officer in the District in lieu of this board. Is the Senate so committed by the motion, which was voted down, of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that we cannot get at the cutting out of this board entirely by another vote now, before we get the bill into the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain any motion that is in order.

Mr. WHYTE. I was going to say that if this motion of the Senator from California is not agreed to I shall move to strike out the whole of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof two sections of the House bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I will say to my friend that after my motion is carried he can move to strike out the whole section. It is best to reform it first.

Mr. WHYTE. I want to get at the point whether we are precluded from destroying the board altogether.

Mr. THURMAN. I was going to ask the Senator from California to withhold his amendment for the time being, and he may renew it hereafter if that which I wish to offer fails, to allow me to move to strike out the tenth section and insert in lieu of it the provisions that I find in the House bill. If that motion of mine prevail, it will answer all the purpose; if it does not prevail, then the Senator's motion can be renewed. The Senator's motion goes upon the assumption that the board is to be continued in power. If a motion to strike out the whole tenth section and provide a different mode of sanitary regulation in the District is in the opinion of a majority of the Senate the better thing to do, then it would be only wasting time to try to perfect this section as it now stands. I therefore suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as his motion would have to be put before a motion to strike out could be put, that he withdraw it temporarily and allow me to move to strike out the whole tenth section and insert the matter which I wish to insert.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to my friend that probably there will be no division on the question of striking out these lines, and then the Senator's motion will be perfectly in order. If there is any further debate proposed on my amendment, then I should certainly withdraw it in favor of the Senator's proposition; but as my motion is parliamentarily before the body and can be disposed of in a moment, I think we might as well adhere to it. With that understanding, I ask for the question on my amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the question is put on that amendment I should like some explanation on the subject. I ask whether the additional powers provided for in this section are powers of which none are now exercised by the present board; because if that be true there are some of these powers which are absolutely indispensable to such a board.

Mr. DORSEY. I think I can answer that. My understanding is from the board of health that most of the powers conferred by this section are now exercised by the board; some of them are not; and some of them are exercised by doubtful authority of law; but the most important ones, those to which I presume the Senator from Virginia alludes, are now exercised under the act of 1871 and also under the act of June 20, 1874.

Mr. WITHERS. Then, before the Senate can vote understandingly on the proposition of the Senator from California, we should be able to understand what powers are now exercised by the board and what are the additional powers with which this section proposes to invest them.

Mr. DORSEY. The additional powers, I understand, are first in regard to filling up lots and digging them down, &c.; and next in giving the board of health the charge of the asylums and infirmaries and charitable institutions of the District. That power they have not got now, and there is serious objection to transferring it from where it now exists to the board of health. These are the two new additional powers, as I understand. The other powers I believe the board of health now has.

Mr. WITHERS. I should be glad if the Senator in charge of the bill, or any Senator who is cognizant of the facts, would call attention to the particular provisions of the section by reference to the sections of the law which confer powers, so as to show which of these powers are not now exercised by the board.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will look over the section he will see the additional powers conferred. One is in regard to filling up sunken lots. The board of health has no power now where there is a nuisance from stagnant water or anything of that sort to abate it. It has no power over the asylums or reform schools or charitable institutions of the District. It has no power, I understand, when there is a pauper or a stranger here taken sick to send him to an asylum or hospital. That has to be done through the commissioners or through the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOWE. As the amendment was reported, I understood it to strike out the word "possesses" in the commencement of the fifth line. The amendment as moved proposed to leave that word in.

Mr. SARGENT. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio to withdraw my amendment in order that this alternative may be first voted on.

Mr. WITHERS. That will simplify the matter very much.

Mr. THURMAN. The amendment offered by the Senator from California having been withdrawn, I move to strike out section 10 and insert the matter which I send to the Clerk's desk. I ask that the amendment which I offer be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be inserted will be read.

The SECRETARY. The words to be inserted are:

SEC. —. That in lieu of the board of health now authorized by law, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint a physician as health officer, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the said commissioners, to execute and enforce all laws and regulations relating to the public health and vital statistics and to perform all such duties as may be assigned to him by said commissioners; and the board of health now existing shall, from the date of the appointment of said health officer, be abolished.

SEC. —. That there may be appointed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the recommendation of the health officer, a reasonable number of sanitary inspectors for said district, not exceeding six to hold such appointment at any one time, of whom two may be physicians and one shall be a person skilled in matters of drainage and ventilation; and said commissioners may remove any of the subordinates, and from time to time may prescribe the duties of each; and said inspectors shall be respectively required to make, at least once in two weeks, a report to said health officer, in writing, of their inspections, which shall be preserved on file; and said health officer shall report in writing annually to said commissioners of the District of Columbia, and so much oftener as they shall require.

SEC. —. That the commissioners may appoint on the like recommendation of the health officer, a reasonable number of clerks; but no greater number shall be appointed and no more persons shall be employed under said health officer than the public interests demand and the appropriation shall justify.

SEC. —. That the salary of the health officer shall be $2,500; and the salary of the sanitary inspectors shall not exceed the sum of $1,200 per annum each; and the salary of the clerks and other assistants of the health officer shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount of $7,000, to be apportioned as the commissioners of the District of Columbia may deem best.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has considered the question whether these officers are officers of the United States, and whether they may constitutionally be appointed by the commissioners. I suppose, of course, he has.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have considered that question. They are not officers of the United States. If they were, they could not be appointed by these commissioners. They are officers of the District of Columbia. The commissioners themselves are officers of the District of Columbia, according to the determination of the Supreme Court in the case of Barnes vs. The District. That decision is that officers in this District, as the board of public works, although appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, are not officers of the United States but officers of the District of Columbia; and consequently the District as a municipal corporation was held to be liable for the misfeasance or non-feasance of that board. The theory of the decision is that the officers may be appointed or elected by the people in such manner as the law shall provide. For a long time there was a municipal government, a mayor, a common council, a marshal, and various officers, all either elected directly or indirectly by the people of the municipality. Afterward came a governor appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, a house of assembly, a superior house to that called the council, a board of public works, and a board of health, and I do not know how many other boards; and provisions were made for various officers. The decision of the Supreme Court goes upon the ground that all those officers, whether they were elected by the people, as in former times, or whether they were appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, or howsoever they might be appointed, are officers, not of the United States within the meaning of the provision of the Constitution to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, who must be appointed either by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or under law by the President alone, or by the head of some Department alone, or by some court of law, but they are officers of this municipality, the District of Columbia. This bill creates the District a municipality, and the persons who exercise official functions within it under the bill, no matter how appointed, are, within the scope and meaning of that decision of the Supreme Court, officers of the District and not officers of the United States within the meaning of that clause of the Constitution to which the Senator refers.

I see, therefore, no more difficulty in the commissioners appointing this health officer than in the appointment of a policeman. A policeman is an officer. His functions are public functions. He is clothed with power to arrest men and to do a good many other things that a private individual cannot do. His functions are plainly public, and he is plainly an officer who would come within the definition of "officer" in any statute relating to officers in the District; and yet no one doubts that the commissioners may be authorized to appoint the policemen.

I see no trouble, therefore, in that. But now we are brought to the question, by this amendment, whether or not it is better to substitute the plan which has received the sanction of the House of Representatives in regard to preserving the health of this District or to preserve the present organization, the present board of health; for the amendment that I have offered consists of exactly the four sections which have passed the House of Representatives, and are in the bill now pending before us from the House. Our committee left them out, and instead of them, preserved the present board of health. I propose to put them back and to adopt them just as they passed the House. I think that plan would be more economical, would be much simpler, and would be equally effective.

When I look over the powers conferred upon this board of health by the substitute reported by the Senate District Committee, and many of which had been exercised by it before, I cannot help feeling some surprise that it should be considered necessary to have a board of health for the exercise of such powers. Let us look at what these powers are as defined in the substitute reported by the District Committee of the Senate:

SEC. 10. The board of health created by an act to provide a government for the District of Columbia approved February 21, 1871, shall be continued with the powers it now possesses.

In order to understand what that means we have to turn to that act of 1871. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the powers that were conferred in that act. This board of health was first constituted by the act which has been called the organic act providing a government for the District of Columbia, passed in 1871. That act set up a legislative council, a house of assembly or representatives, a board of public works, a board of Metropolitan police, a board of health, and I do not know but several other boards. The section in regard to the board of health was in these words:

That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a board of health for said District, to consist of five persons, whose duty it shall be to declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof; to make and enforce regulations to prevent domestic animals from running at large in the cities of Washington and Georgetown; to prevent the sale of unwholesome food in said cities; and to perform such other duties as shall be imposed upon said board by the Legislative Assembly.

Although that Legislative Assembly has been abolished, yet perhaps a review of the legislation will show that whatever powers it conferred upon this board of health it possesses to this day. The board has not been abolished, and it was continued under the act of 1874 with the powers which it possessed, and that may be said to have been a provision by law which made the powers conferred upon it, whatever they were, by the Legislative Assembly of the District powers that were vested in the board by force of the act of Congress. It will be seen that its specific powers were:

To declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof; to make and enforce regulations to prevent domestic animals from running at large in the cities of Washington and Georgetown; to prevent the sale of unwholesome food in said cities.

And then the rest of its powers are those that were to be conferred upon it by the Legislative Assembly of the District. I am not informed at this moment what powers, if any, were conferred on it by the Legislature of the District. I know that its powers have been enlarged to some extent by subsequent acts of Congress, but I have not got them before me and I will not detain the Senate by hunting them up.

Now comes this substitute of our committee which is pending; and after providing that this board shall have all the powers which it now possesses, which as I have said include all the powers that the Legislative Assembly may have conferred upon it, and about which we absolutely know nothing, (for we do not know what they are, I am sure I do not and I think perhaps there is not one Senator out of fifty here who does,) it goes on:

And the further powers conferred by this act.

What are they?

The said board shall have power to define, declare, and cause to be removed or abated nuisances injurious to health—

That is no further power; that is one of its original powers. Second—to provide for and regulate the collection, removal, and transportation of garbage, house-offal, and dead animals in and from the cities of Washington and Georgetown in said District and their immediate and more densely populated suburbs, and to provide, by contract or otherwise, for the proper performance of such service.

Now, I wish to say, in respect to that, that, although that might be proper work for a board of health to perform, yet, in point of fact, it is a work that is performed, wherever there is no board of health, under the direction of the common council or mayor of the city, enforced by the police, and it is a work that can be just as well performed under the direction of the commissioners of the District as it can under the direction of a board of health. Then comes the third:

To make rules and regulations for all hospitals used exclusively for the isolation and treatment of persons afflicted with infectious or contagious diseases.

I do not know whether there is any such hospital in this District that is used exclusively for that purpose; and, if there is, I do not know but that it is provided for in the special act or charter of its creation. I shall say nothing, therefore, about that.

Mr. WITHERS. The small-pox hospital.

Mr. THURMAN. I suppose if there is a small-pox hospital it may be that. Next:

To provide for admission to hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and infirmaries, for the benefit of which appropriations are made of public moneys.

There is a power proposed to be given to this board that I utterly disapprove of. Why, sir, it includes almost every character of institution in this District. It includes the Asylum for the Insane, across the Eastern Branch, for which Congress provides so liberally and for whose government the law completely provides. It includes every asylum almost within the District, and every hospital within the District, and every charitable institution for which Congress has made provision.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator allow me? I observe that he does not notice that all that part of the section is proposed to be stricken out, and the committee do not object to striking it out.

Mr. THURMAN. I will not take time further with that. If that matter is all stricken out, then the powers of the board would be limited to these:

The board of health created by "an act to provide a government for the District of Columbia," approved February 21, 1871, shall be continued with the powers it now possesses—

I have read what they are—to declare what shall be deemed nuisances injurious to health, and to provide for the removal thereof; to make and enforce regulations to prevent domestic animals from running at large in the streets of Washington and Georgetown—

By the way that is a very funny thing for a board of health. What in the world you want a board of health to prevent animals from running at large for, I do not know—to prevent the sale of unwholesome food in said cities.

These are all the specific powers granted by Congress in the act of 1871, and all that will be left to the board if the words objected to should be stricken out, except one or two powers that have been conferred by subsequent acts of Congress which I have not had time to look at. Certainly those limited powers can well enough be performed by a health officer with the assistance provided in this House provision. My own belief is that it will simplify the service, that the service will be equally effective, that it will be more economical, and that there will not be that conflict between the board of health and the commissioners that has existed heretofore to some extent, or did exist under the old government, between the board of health, the Legislative Assembly, and the other departments of the District government.

Without taking up more time of the Senate, I ask Senators to look, if they have the House bill before them, at the sections which I propose to insert as a substitute for section 10 of the amendment under consideration. They are sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 of the House bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to say but a few words in general concurrence with the views expressed by the Senator from Ohio, and I shall vote for his amendment although after it has been adopted I trust there may still be amendments in the line of further reduction in the way of clerical force.

The great and first objection to the present board of health is its unnecessary expense and cumbersomeness. The machinery of the board of health is far more cumbersome and expensive than there is any necessity for in this community according to my judgment; and the plan of the House in making it a subordinate body to the commission who have the general supervision of the affairs of the District strikes me as being eminently wise. The present board of health has, as I find from the appropriation bill of last year, five members. It has besides, a medical sanitary inspector at a salary of $1,750; a health officer at $1,750; four clerks $4,800; five sanitary inspectors $6,000; one pound-master $1,000; and one messenger $720; making a large number of officials attached to that board at a heavy expense.

The proposed amendment, which is the scheme of the House of Representatives, proposes in section 10, one health officer, in section 11 a number of sanitary inspectors not exceeding six, in section 12 a reasonable number of clerks. I think before this amendment is acted upon finally by the Senate, the number of clerks had better be fixed, and also the number of inspectors perhaps lessened. I have not on reflection been able to imagine in a city amply provided with police, with houses of correction, sanitary establishments on a very generous and excellent scale, hospitals for every kind of disease, a medical school, a very able body of physicians in private life, where the necessity for this vast and expensive body called the board of health comes in. A single health officer, with five active and intelligent assistants, with two efficient clerks, acting in co-operation with the police of the District and with the commissioners, would form, in my judgment, a force amply sufficient for all the health purposes of this District. The police of the city, as we know, become the agents of this sanitary board by giving information of the presence of all nuisances, of the presence of all deleterious manufactures and trades, and they have general power to cause the abatement of all nuisances that flow from such things. The power is complete and the agency is complete without the present cumbersome and expensive machinery.

I do not wish to speak disrespectfully or slightingly of the services of the late board of health. I can only say that I think all that is justly required for the health and good government of this community of one hundred and fifty thousand, could be properly supplied by the simpler proposition of the House of Representatives, and I trust the Senate will not hesitate to vote for the simpler and the more restrained proposition of the House.

The scale of expenditure in this District has become something startling, and both Houses of Congress have got so in the habit of regarding these vast and cumbersome arrangements, with the enormous expense involved, as habitual, that they pass them now without much consideration. I am fully persuaded that the same economy which I think we should institute in some degree here in the District, must become more a habit of the American people at large. There are a great many nostrums proposed in finance; there are a great many propositions for growing rich in unusual methods; the printing-press is sought to supply the place of labor, and mere credulity to take the place of production; but I am very sure that the first step toward relief in this country and in this District is a moderation in expenditure and some reasonable economy in the scale of our government. I have cited before a community where my whole life has been passed, in which the expenditures for the supervision of the sanitary government of that community scarcely amount to pennies where here dollars have been poured out; and there can be no justification for that.

I do not hold that a health officer is required to be a scientist of the highest grade. There is not a physician—and there are many learned and able physicians in this city—who is not compelled in the very daily duties of his avocation to ascertain the causes of atmospheric and other malarial troubles and diseases in the District. All those are made known to the public by the very necessity of the case; they are loudly proclaimed as causes of fever from defective sewerage, as causes of malaria from defective rain-escape. All these things are constantly brought before the public in the course of private investigation, and in a manner that no public investigation can ever pretend to equal. So then I say, having hospitals with competent physicians in charge, having excellent police arrangements, the officers of which must act in subordination to and co-operation with the officers appointed by the commissioners, a board of health to be efficient need comprise no more in number or character of service than that proposed by the House. To spend more is mere superfluity of expense, and I trust the Senate will refuse its assent to it.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I should prefer to vote first upon the proposition to abolish the board of health. I should like to vote squarely on that first, before the insertion of the other clauses which the Senator from Ohio now proposes, because it may be that those very sections of the House bill may be amended to make them more useful and practicable; but on the question of abolishing the board of health in this District, I am clear. I should like to have the privilege of voting on that question. I had not that privilege on Saturday on account of my absence from the Senate, and therefore I took no part in the discussion on that day.

When the commission appointed by the Forty-fourth Congress took charge of this subject of providing for a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, it fell to my lot to examine this particular branch of that subject, which I did with great care, and I came to the conclusion, without any reference to the personnel of the board, that it was a useless and unnecessary ornament to the government of the District of Columbia. I knew from practical experience that in my own city, composed of between three hundred and fifty thousand and four hundred thousand inhabitants, we had no board of health; we had a health officer with an assistant, under the control of the mayor and common council; and I thought that it was perfectly practicable in the District of Columbia that the health department of the District could be successfully and profitably controlled and managed by a health officer and a few sanitary inspectors, aided by the police of the city. The laws in existence were ample; and by conferring upon the commissioners of the District in the first instance all the powers in regard to the preservation of the public health, and allowing them through the agency and the machinery of the health officer and a few inspectors and the police the execution of these powers, the whole could be done, the city properly guarded from disease, nuisances removed, the health of the city preserved, and a large amount of expense saved to the people of the District and to the people of the United States.

I found that this board cost over $50,000 a year. I mean to say they expended over $50,000 a year. I found that that was about the rate of their expenditure. Since that I have found that in 1876 they expended fifty-odd thousand dollars and in 1877 they have spent between $45,000 and $50,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Where does the Senator obtain his statistics?

Mr. WHYTE. From their own report right here. I hold it in my hand.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator's observation is very different from mine. The latest report of the board of health that I have seen fixes their expenditure at a little rising $32,000.

Mr. WHYTE. They reported in their report of 1876 as having expended $52,235. They show that they received from Congress $26,000; from the District of Columbia $26,000; and they give the items of expense, and I am sorry to say that over $1,200 were paid to lawyers. What the lawyers were doing when there was an attorney in the board, I cannot imagine.

Mr. INGALLS. I have the report of the Treasurer for July 31, 1877, showing a full statement of receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, in which the total receipts were $32,902.50 and the expenditures the same.

Mr. WHYTE. I think my friend will find on a closer examination that there have been expenditures up to $45,000.

Now, look at their estimates for 1876; it may be that they were cut short from $52,000 to $32,000; cut down $20,000 in one year; and if so, it only shows how much more they can be cut down with utility to the people.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question for information on this subject?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator speaks of the comparative economy of the city of Baltimore and the great extravagance of the city of Washington. I have in my hand here a statement showing that the total expenditure for the city of Baltimore is $263,855.47, with a population of three hundred and fifty thousand people, making a per capita expenditure of 76½ cents, whereas the per capita expenditure of this extravagant city of Washington was only about 20 cents last year; or even admitting the Senator's statement to be correct, that the total was $45,000, it would still be less than 30 cents per capita, or less than one-half of the per capita expense of the economical city represented by my honorable friend from Maryland.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Minnesota where he got those expenses from; if he did not get them from a glorification report of the members of this board themselves to show what they had done?

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I got them from the report of this board.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes.

Mr. WINDOM. And until there is some reason given to show that that report is incorrect I think it safe to assume that these figures which have been published are somewhere near correct.

Mr. WHYTE. Where does my friend from Minnesota get them?

Mr. WINDOM. On page 13 of the report for 1876 I find a comparison made of the expenditures of this city with those of several others, among the rest with the city of Baltimore, which is so economically administered under the plan proposed now by my friend from Maryland, making 76½ cents per head, or nearly four times the per capita expenditure that took place in Washington last year. I will say further to my friend that in a city of three hundred and fifty thousand people the per capita should be much less than in a city of one hundred and sixty thousand.

Mr WHYTE. I doubt very much this statement. I never saw it before now. I see, as my friend points it out to me in this report, that arguing in favor of the great work Congress did by organizing the board of public works in the city of Washington and organizing the board of health as a part of that great boon that Congress gave to the people of this District——

Mr. WINDOM. I will ask the Senator whether he has any basis whatever for a statement of the expense in Baltimore except the general belief that my friend doubtless imagines that the city is well administered, economically conducted in every respect? Has he any figures on that subject at all?

Mr. WHYTE. I have not looked at the figures to-day. I did look at them at the time.

Mr. WINDOM. This, then, presents a prima facie case, and upon that I rest until it is disproved.

Mr. WHYTE. All I have to say is that at the time the commission had charge of this subject I did examine it, and examined it carefully, and I wrote this very clause establishing the health officer myself, and I did it upon the basis of my own city, and it was adopted by the commission as proper at that time. Unfortunately I have not now with me the notes connected with that examination. I will, before we get through, probably, have an opportunity of finding out the accuracy of this statement. I have not a doubt that everything is included there, filling up and grading and everything connected with the city of Baltimore. I have no doubt that the Jones Falls improvement and various other expensive improvements that were temporary in their character are included. But that it costs the city of Baltimore $268,000 a year in its health department I do not believe one word of. I am satisfied that if the Senator from Minnesota will get the items of the $268,000 we will see that it is made up just as I stated, not of the same items included in this return of fifty-odd thousand dollars as the expense of the board of health of Washington, but of all the expenses of the city, cleaning and all the other expenses in regard to cess-pools and various other work in keeping a city clean and purified. I feel certain that all that is included in these figures and used as a comparison with the expenses of this board of health in the city of Washington.

I now come back to the point where I was interrupted. The powers of the board are specified by various acts, and the Senate will see by looking at the very report of the board of health of 1876, when the estimates are made as to the money they required, that the act of Congress of the 21st of February, 1871, provided—

> For general sanitary inspection of streets, avenues, alleys, yards, markets, vacant lots, &c., where nuisances injurious to health may exist, and for the removal and abatement of the same.

That is estimated for by the commissioners as under the act of Congress of the 21st of February, 1871. I will proceed with their items of estimate:

To prevent the sale of unwholesome food in the District of Columbia. Act Congress, February 21, 1871.
To prevent domestic animals from running at large in the cities of Washington and Georgetown. Act Congress, February 21, 1871.
To secure a full and correct record of vital statistics, including the registration of births, marriages, and deaths, the interment, disinterment, and transportation of the dead in and through the District. Act Congress, June 23, 1874.
The transportation beyond the limits of the District of house-offal, night-soil, and dead animals. Act Congress, February 21, 1871.
To prevent the introduction and spread of infectious and contagious diseases. Act Legislative Assembly, June 19, 1872.
The draining of lots bordering on public or private sewers. Act Legislative Assembly, August 21, 1872.
Collection of garbage in cities of Washington and Georgetown, and suburbs thereof. Order of commissioners District of Columbia, March 19, 1875.
The burial of deceased paupers. Order of commissioners District of Columbia, September 8, 1874.

These powers being lodged under the act of 1874 in the District commissioners as they are now organized and operated, and controlling the powers of the District, being under this bill continued to the new District commissioners, all the necessary powers for the preservation of the health of the city are vested in the District commissioners to be appointed under this present act of Congress. The board of health is utterly useless. The District commissioners themselves will have general control. A single health officer with three or four sanitary inspectors can do all the work, aided by the police, who under the present Revised Statutes are required to give their aid.

The board of health—

Says the law, section 380 of the Revised Statutes for the District of Columbia—

The board of health or proper health officers of the District shall have power to call upon any of the police force, to a number not exceeding six, to aid upon any necessary emergency in enforcing the powers and duties conferred upon their office by law, and it shall be the duty of any such number of police so called upon to obey such call; but such service shall not continue longer than twenty-four hours.

SEC. 381. It shall be the duty of the board of police to set apart a sanitary police company, to consist of not exceeding ten persons, who shall be selected from among the police, and to assign to said company such especial duties by the rules and regulations as may be publicly advantageous.

SEC. 382. The sanitary police company—

Inside of this board of health there are police officers specially set apart under the Revised Statutes as a sanitary police company to discharge nearly all the duties of this sanitary board—

The sanitary police company is empowered, under such distribution of power and duty as may be made by the rules and regulations, to visit and make inspection of all ferry-boats, manufactories, slaughter-houses, tenement-houses, and edifices suspected of or charged with being unsafe, and to attend to such other matters relating to health as are complained of and entered upon the complaint-book, and to take all necessary legal measures for promoting the security of life or health generally upon or in said boats, manufactories, houses, and edifices, and to make report of inspection and action in the premises to the board of police.

And here are three or four other sections, all upon the same subject, relating to this sanitary company composed of police officers, who are also put under the control of the District commissioners under this bill. Now, what do you want with a board of health with commissioners and with one health officer, with an additional health officer subordinate to him? The whole health work of this District can be performed and thousands of dollars can be saved to the people by the abolition of such a board. I hope that this board will be abolished, and if any more power is needed for the thorough and complete protection of the people of this District from disease, I hope it may be given by the sections about to be inserted, if the board is abolished, so that without the great expense to the people of the District and of the country, pure health may be secured to the people of this District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MERRIMON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to strike out section 10 of the substitute reported by the committee and insert sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 of the bill as it was passed by the House.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for a division of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks for a division of the proposition.

Mr. SARGENT. It cannot be divided.

Mr. CONKLING. The rule says expressly the reverse, if the Chair will pardon me. The rule of the Senate says the motion to strike out and insert shall not be divisible.

Mr. WHYTE. This is a different proposition. This is a proposition to strike out more than it was proposed to strike out before.

Mr. CONKLING. That may be; but I ask the Secretary to read the rule, which I think is express, that an indivisible motion is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. WHYTE. Oh, well, we shall not get into a controversy about it. I do not want to get into any question of order. I withdraw my request to have the amendment divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WINDOM. Only a single word in reply to my friend from Maryland, who has boasted so much of the economy and cleanliness and health of his city. I want to say that the statistics I quoted from were obtained from Dr. Stewart himself, the health officer, as showing the ordinary expenditures for maintaining the health organization of the city of Baltimore. I am further informed, and I believe upon good authority, that this very economical establishment in Baltimore, which my honorable friend seeks to have imitated in Washington, paid somewhere in the neighborhood (the exact amount I do not know) of $50,000 for a dumping-ground alone, for the offal of the city. Further than that as to this very cleanly city—and I have some very warm friends there, and I am a great admirer of Baltimore—I do say to my friend that there are portions of it that are the filthiest places I ever saw in my life, without any exception.

Mr. WHYTE. I never go in the places where the Senator must have been.

Mr. WINDOM. My friend lives among the aristocracy, I am aware, but I am compelled to pass through the lower portions as I ride through the city on the cars. I presume my friend has not seen that part of the city. I judged when he made his remarks as to the peculiar cleanliness of the city, that he had never visited the lower section, as I am compelled to do in riding through on the cars. But there was another thing reported last summer, and I believe correctly, that in this cleanly city, the health of which is maintained at the rate of seventy-six and a half cents per head, they succeeded in breeding yellow fever in their own midst last summer, so that on the whole I do not think I shall vote in favor of the economy and health of the city of Baltimore, in order that we may have the same system established here.

Mr. WHYTE. I cannot let my own city be slandered, even by the Senator from Minnesota. He comes, I know, from a very pure region; but he does not breathe a particle purer air than we do in the city of Baltimore. As to all that stuff about the yellow fever, there is not a word of truth in it. It was gotten up by people jealous and envious of the salubrity of our climate and the great prosperity that is prevailing in the city of Baltimore. My friend probably may have gone down some back street. So you can go in the great city of New York, whence comes the distinguished Senator on my right, [Mr. CONKLING.] There are certain portions of New York that are not as clean as Broadway; there is no doubt about that; and in all great cities there are some dirty people; you cannot keep them out of it; but as regards the salubrity of climate, there is no place on the face of the earth that is as healthy as Baltimore. Nobody ever wants to live anywhere else that ever did live there, and everybody goes there to die as the most peaceful and happy place from which to be translated to another and a better world.

Let me tell my friend from Minnesota that in order to build up this board of health, to enable it to paint the beautiful picture of its wonderful work, it has actually gone to England and got an opinion of the health officer in London, that Queen Victoria might get down on her knees and thank God if she had such a board of health as they have in Washington! Think of that!

So in regard to our city they have piled Pelion upon Ossa to put these expenses so much greater than the expenses here; but in order to do it, (as a colleague of mine in the other House has just told me, and by the way he is a member of the District of Columbia Committee in the other House,) they have put in the street cleaning and everything else to swell it up, not to compare with the expenses that they return but in order to make it appear that they are carrying on the health department of this city at some very small fractional price. I will venture to offer my friend an invitation. If he will come and stay with me a month, I will insure not only his life but his health every day that he stays in the city of Baltimore.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no doubt my honorable friend is right in one thing, that those who desire to die seek certain portions of Baltimore for that purpose, and under the health arrangements there I know no place that affords greater opportunity. [Laughter.]

Mr. WITHERS. I was not able to procure a copy of the bill containing the sections which it is proposed to offer as a substitute for the tenth section of this bill. In case the motion to strike out and insert prevails, would it then be in order to amend the amendment by inserting?

Mr. DORSEY. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. It can be amended in the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. It would not be susceptible of amendment in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SARGENT. No.

Mr. WITHERS. I make the inquiry because there are some portions of the amendment that I desire to see amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be amended in the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. It is in order to move to amend it now.

Mr. WITHERS. I want to move an amendment, if it is necessary to do it now before a vote is taken upon the proposition of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SARGENT. I submit that a motion to amend the matter proposed to be inserted, is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. WITHERS. I merely have a word or two to say on the general subject, and mainly to combat what I regard as a very dangerous position taken by my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] that it was not essential at all to the welfare of the city that the health officer should be a man of scientific attainments, but that any person of ordinary intelligence could perform properly the duties of the office. I dissent entirely from that proposition. I believe that it is absolutely essential, that it is in fact indispensable to the proper and efficient discharge of the duties of this position, that the person holding the office should be a man of the highest possible scientific attainments.

Whether the board which exists here has been extravagant in the methods of administration or not, I do not pretend to say. If the statements made in the public press in regard to the character of some of the gentlemen composing this board are correct, manifestly they are improper persons to hold this position. Upon that I offer no opinion; but I tell you that it is a matter of necessity that in providing such a board as shall control and direct the sanitary affairs of this city you shall have some person at its head who is competent to ascertain and investigate on scientific principles all the questions which are likely to come before it.

Whether the board which is suggested by the amendment is preferable to the board as reported by the Senate committee is a question for the Senate to decide. It is at least a board of health, whether you call it a board of health or whether you call it a health officer with sanitary assistants. The duties designed to be performed by them are the same, and it is not worth while to squabble about the name. Whether the board of health provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is a preferable organization to the one provided in the report of the Senate committee is for the Senate to decide. It strikes me that it is more economical, and that therefore it is preferable, provided you secure equal efficiency; but in this matter of the health of a great city, economy and parsimony ought not to be considered when as contrasted with the safety of the health of the community.

One of the amendments, by the way, which I propose to suggest is that the salary provided for this health officer in the amendment is entirely inadequate to secure the services of a competent man. Twenty-five hundred dollars per annum is an amount too small to command the services of a gentleman of such scientific attainments as would likely be serviceable and efficient in this position. It is necessary for the efficient discharge of this duty that whoever is intrusted with it shall be able to devote the whole of his time and the whole of his attention to this matter, and this alone, and to command the services of such a person you must pay a larger salary than $2,500 per annum. I do not deny that a competent and scientific man can be appointed as the health officer of this place with power to appoint as many subordinates as the necessities of the service might demand, and that you would secure efficient service; but I merely desire to insist upon it that it is necessary that the head of this department shall be a man possessed of the highest order of scientific attainment. It is his duty to seek out and investigate the occult causes of disease, to be able to judge authoritatively and definitely as to whether at any given portion of the city there is such a nuisance as will breed pestilence and disease. It is a thing that is not to be intrusted to careless investigations of a jackanape doctor with an assistant policeman. The seeds of disease permeate the whole atmosphere. We take them in with the water we drink, with the air we breathe, and it requires something more than a superficial investigation to know and understand when this danger is lurking in the atmosphere and surrounding us.

I propose, therefore, as an amendment to the proposition pending, that the salary paid to the health officer shall be $4,000 per annum.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, when a change is proposed in any existing institution, those who demand the change ought to be able to show satisfactory and sufficient reasons for it, and they ought also to be able to show that what they propose to substitute for it will be an advantage over what they propose to destroy. I have yet to hear from any of the opponents of the present board of health that there is any just cause of complaint against them or any good reason why this board should be abolished. A sort of indiscriminate crusade, a guerilla warfare, is waged against them upon general principles. It is not denied that their duties have been efficiently and satisfactorily performed. It is admitted that this community of one hundred and sixty thousand people, during the last five or six years, have been protected from "the pestilence that walketh in darkness; and the destruction that wasteth at noonday;" that all the vital statistics here have been properly registered; that the causes of death have been ascertained; that the city has been properly policed; that nuisances have been abated; that during all this period the death rate has steadily diminished; and that these satisfactory and somewhat extraordinary results have been obtained at an annual expenditure per capita very considerably less than the expenses of any other community of similar size in the United States of America.

I should regret to believe that the attempt to abolish this board was based upon personal grounds. I should regret to be compelled to assume that the warfare made upon this organization had no higher motive than a desire to remove certain gentlemen who may be in official position. But unless some better reason is given than has yet been advanced by those who are the advocates of this abolition, I shall be compelled to believe that the real motive of this war has not been disclosed.

What is proposed to be done by the Senator from Ohio in his amendment? I trust before Senators commit themselves to that proposition they will examine its details. The principal objection urged by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Delaware has been that this is an expensive and extravagantly ornamental appendage to the board of commissioners. In what respect will the expenses be less under the system that is proposed by the Senator from Ohio? There is one health officer, whose salary, as has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia, is entirely inadequate to secure the services of a man competent to discharge the duties of that position. It is named at $2,500 per annum. There is not a Senator who is aware of the duties that ought to be performed who believes that the services of a man with whom you would intrust the life of yourself or your child or any friend could be obtained, to be devoted exclusively to these functions, for less than $5,000 per year. There is not a man on the medical staff of this city who is fit to exercise these functions who is not earning as much money as that every year; and to ask that an officer shall be designated for this purpose who does not command the confidence and respect of a community is going outside of what ought to be done in a matter so important as this.

Then he is to be assisted by not to exceed six sanitary assistants. The compensation of these, if they are at all competent to discharge their duties, should not be less than $1,500 per annum, and there are $9,000 more. Then there is a provision in the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio that there shall be expended for clerk hire a sum not greater than $7,000 per annum. Add to this the other necessary expenses which are included in the administration of the present system, and where is there any saving in the mere matter of dollars and cents? If you will compute the various sums that will necessarily be expended under the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, it is apparent that the sum total will not be one single cent less than what was expended last year for these purposes by the present board.

What, then, is the object to be attained? Is the health of a great community like this, where not only the lives of one hundred and sixty thousand people are at stake but the lives of the representatives of forty million people are at stake, to be regarded merely as a matter of parsimonious economy? Are we seriously to consider whether we will expend a thousand dollars more or less in a year in order to obtain the proper policing and the proper sanitary regulation of this city, which is not only a community of citizens congregated here for business and for commerce and for the ordinary avocations of life, but for a considerable portion of the year the home of the entire executive department of the Government and of its representatives in both branches of Congress? Sir, if there is one place rather than another where mere pitiful, niggardly economy ought not to be insisted upon, it is in the administration of the health department of the government of this District.

The objects sought to be obtained by the Senator from Ohio are evidently and manifestly just the same that are sought to be attained by the Senate committee's amendment. There is no difference in the objects to be attained, the result is the same in both cases; and the question for the Senate to determine is in what manner will these duties be most efficiently discharged? I must say from what I have thus far heard that there has not been one single argument that is worthy of the name in favor of the abolition of the present board of health.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Would there not be a difference in the salaries to be paid under the system proposed by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. INGALLS. The salaries paid to the present board of health, consisting of five members, all but one of whom are physicians, aggregate $4,500 per annum. The salary proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio for the health officer alone is $2,500. The Senator from Virginia who has just spoken upon that subject very properly says that that compensation is too small. He moves to increase that compensation to the sum of $4,000, which is just $500 less than is now paid to all these officers in the aggregate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Does the Senator from Kansas mean that $4,500 covers all the expenses of the employés of the health department?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly not. I speak of the five officers who compose the board. Their salary is $500 each, and for performing other functions devolved upon them under the system that they administer they receive additional compensation, one as president of the board, one as secretary, one as treasurer, and one as registrar of vital statistics; so that the aggregate of compensation paid to these five officers now upon the board is $4,500 annually.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio proposes in addition to the one health officer a corps of assistants, whose compensation is not defined; but if they are persons whose services are at all valuable, if they are skilled in sanitary science, or if their labors are to be efficient and valuable to the community, they must be of a certain degree of professional skill, their compensation could not be less than $1,500 per annum, which would make the additional sum of $9,000. Then there must be clerks. There must be the pound-master for taking care of vagrant and strayed domestic animals, and there must be still as now the same contracts for the removal of household garbage and offal and dead animals, in which the expenditure would not be less. Therefore the aggregate of expenditure will not in any reasonable probability be anything less than it is now under the present system. These men, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, being subject to the will and control of the commission, will be dependent. They cannot exercise that same independent and efficient and vigorous control that is essential in the case of great emergencies which are liable to arise affecting the health of a community. This board ought to be independent. They ought not to have any connection whatever with the board of commissioners, because, as the Senator from Rhode Island well knows, there are continually occurring exigencies, great contagious epidemics, like those that have raged in different parts of the country during the past year, small-pox, cholera, yellow fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, all arising from zymotic or preventable causes that require efficient, independent action on the part of intelligent men having those subjects in charge.

The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Delaware propose that all these functions shall be discharged by the police of the city. The Senator from Maryland quotes from the statutes to show that the health board now have the authority to call in the police. The police are occupied with their own duties; they have their own functions to discharge; they are responsible to the commissioners; and the health board ought to be an independent organization, having this matter solely in charge and responsible to the highest authority in the land for the performance of their duties.

I therefore hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will not prevail. This matter has been already sufficiently discussed. The debate has been protracted. Nearly a week has been consumed in the consideration of this bill. On Saturday the Senate by a decisive vote agreed not to abolish the board of health. The attempt this morning to secure reconsideration by indirection seems to me to add unnecessarily to the time that has already been consumed in the consideration of this subject.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I am not able to give any statistics on this subject, even with reference to the health expenses of the city in which I live, but I can say that in that city we have one health officer who also performs the duty of city registrar. I think that his salary does not exceed $3,500.

Mr. INGALLS. To what officer does the Senator refer?

Mr. BURNSIDE. We have simply a health officer, who also performs the duty of city registrar. We have no health board. I think we have one of the best policed cities in this country. It is a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants. Everything that we have done there in the way of inspection in regard to the general health of the community is done by the city government under the direction and advice of this health officer. It seems to me a wise way to manage affairs of this kind in such a city is to have one efficient health officer, and then to have all the executive duties of the city performed by a board. I can see no use for this cumbrous health board, and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is very much to be regretted that the Senator from Kansas was unable to give his views on the pending amendment to the Senate without impugning the motives of those who differed from him.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no; I impugn no Senator's motives. The Senator from Delaware must not be unjust to me. I impugn no Senator's motives.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I misunderstood the Senator in saying that the arguments offered amounted to very little, but that the real motive had been concealed.

Mr. INGALLS. I said that I could not understand that the animus of this thing could be other than hostility to the personnel of the board. A Senator might well be hostile to those gentlemen and not be guilty of anything improper.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator should at least do me the justice to suppose, after the service we have had here together, that I in general mean what I say, and I am very apt to say what I mean. I am very glad, however, that there is no impugning of motives, for it would have been entirely unjust. So far as the personnel of this board is concerned, I have had the presence of one of them, Dr. Verdi, as an attending physician in my family, and I have entire respect for his skill and civility; and for Dr. Bliss I have also upon a similar occasion the recollection of the same civility and kindness at his hands. The others I never saw; I do not personally know them; so that there is nothing in that. The whole question here is public and discussed for public reasons and without any object indirectly or directly to be unjust to any one at all. It is a simple question of the wise expenditure of the public money.

Mr. INGALLS. May I interrupt the Senator from Delaware a single moment?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to inquire of him, because he represents more actively than any other Senator the opposition to the amendment of the Senate committee, whether he believes there is any just cause of complaint against the present board in regard to the efficient, vigorous, and economical discharge of the duties of the board?

Mr. BAYARD. I believe the proposition of the House, which we are called upon to vote for, will lead to a more economical and fully equally efficient operation of the matters subjected to their charge. I think it could be done more cheaply and just as efficiently, perhaps more efficiently, under the proposition of the House than as the matter now stands in the report from the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator would state the estimated or probable expenditure under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, we should be able to ascertain precisely what the advantage would be in favor of that amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. We should have to come down to figures as to that.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, in the first place, there would be a considerable saving of salaries. The personnel of the board would be reduced, as I said before, if the Senator had done me the favor to listen.

Mr. INGALLS. I did listen to the Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. The personnel of the board would be reduced from fourteen or more officials under the present board, as shown by the appropriation bill of 1877, to ten, even supposing the very unnecessary clerical force should be given to the board which the House have proposed, which I hope the Senate will shorten. The Senator from Maryland has explained the apparent enormous expenditure alleged by the honorable Senator from Minnesota of the health office of Baltimore and shown that you had as well charge the paving of the streets to the sanitary purposes as to charge the figures which were arrayed in behalf of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me right here, I have obtained from the library below one of the reports, not very recent but made in the last few years, in which the whole expense is stated at $57,300 instead of $250,000.

Mr. WITHERS. What is the date of that report?

Mr. WHYTE. That was fourteen years ago, during the civil war, when the price of everything was at the very highest figure.

Mr. BAYARD. What report is that?

Mr. WHYTE. It is the report of the health office of Baltimore, and the whole estimate is $57,300.

Mr. INGALLS. For what year?

Mr. WHYTE. For the year 1864.

Mr. INGALLS. Ah!

Mr. WHYTE. Well, it has not increased.

Mr. INGALLS. Has not the town increased in population since that time?

Mr. WHYTE. Very little. During the war we had three hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, as shown by the census of 1870. There is very little increase. We increased in population during the war, and the prices then were very high.

Mr. BAYARD. This is but another contribution to the view that I have taken, which the Senator from Kansas does not concur in. The fact is stated by my friend from Maryland that you have one health officer, a gentleman of distinguished position in the medical profession, and one assistant to conduct the supervision of a community of three hundred thousand or three hundred and fifty thousand people. If that be so, what reason can there be in this cumbersome, complicated, expensive system for this town of one hundred and fifty thousand? I think that reason and economy are both on the side of the proposed amendment, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I am very sorry that I cannot agree with my friend from Maryland as to the economy of his city; but I have some statistics also in regard to that city which I should like to present to him. The Senator says the total expenditures a year are only $57,000.

Mr. WHYTE. At that time, $57,300.

Mr. WINDOM. For what year?

Mr. WHYTE. For the year 1864.

Mr. WINDOM. They have been improving since that time under this economical system.

Mr. WHYTE. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. WINDOM. I have been able to obtain the report for 1873, which reports as follows:

For collecting and removing garbage, $125,148.19.

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. The expenditure for collecting and removing garbage of this extravagant city of Washington is $15,000. It costs about eight times as much, according to that report, in the city of Baltimore to collect and remove garbage as it does here, and the population is about double, so that it is about four times as expensive on that single item. I will read further from the report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does not that include all the cleaning that the streets get in the city of Baltimore?

Mr. WINDOM. It does not, because immediately following that are the following items:

For collecting and removing garbage	$125,148 19
For removing manure and sand from the streets and cleaning the several market-houses	46,319 64
For scraping and sweeping the streets and market-houses	33,378 00
For incidentals, scrapers, brooms, and rents	1,921 82
Making a total of	206,767 63

Mr. DORSEY. I simply rise to express the hope that now, after a debate of six or seven hours, we shall take a vote on this question and dispose of it one way or the other.

Mr. WHYTE. I am sure the Senator from Minnesota did not read this report, or he would not have cited it as contradicting the theory which I set forth. Forty-three thousand dollars of the amount was for the purchase of new carts to haul the garbage and so on five miles from the city. Thirty-odd thousand dollars was paid for preparing the place outside of the city, being permanent expenses that are not annual expenses at all, making of that sum $73,000 for permanent expenses.

Mr. WINDOM. Right on that point, that the Senator and I may try to get an understanding, I have another report from the city of Baltimore for 1872, in which I find the street and garbage account is $145,206. That is a little smaller than the other, but still it is very immense.

Mr. WHYTE. Then, probably there are similar entries for the purchase of grounds that have been bought to carry on the manufacture of fertilizers, which was contemplated at that time.

Mr. WINDOM. I understand that under that economical arrangement they do purchase these dumping-grounds once a year.

Mr. WHYTE. I do not understand it so. I am very sure my friend does not want to put himself in a false position, for he is not putting me in any. I am assured that this was a purchase for a permanent place, five miles from the city, to put the garbage, and it is not likely to have occurred since then. That was in 1873. I should like to see the report of 1876.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to say a single word. I understand that some Senators from their remarks seem to have been under the impression that the opposition to continuing the present board of health simply grew out of objection to the personnel of the board. I wish to say for myself that there is but one member of that board whom I know. I do not think I would know any one of them but him if they were all to march in here on the floor, although I may have seen them, and doubtless have. The one whom I do know is the gentleman to whom my colleague referred on Saturday, Judge Warden, and a very excellent man he is, and I have no doubt he makes an excellent member of that board. I have not one single thing to say against his fitness for that office or his efficiency, and certainly with the long friendship that has existed between him and me I could have no desire to turn him out of office. I disclaim all motive of hostility toward any member of that board, for I have none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	McPherson,	Sargent,
Beck,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Burnside,	Grover,	Merrimon,	Thurman,
Butler,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Kernan,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Coke,	McCreery,	Ransom,	Withers.

NAYS—23.

Allison,	Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Bailey,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Matthews,	Teller,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Morrill,	Wadleigh,
Conkling,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Windom.
Dorsey,	Ingalls,	Rollins,

ABSENT—29.

Anthony,	Conover,	Howe,	Oglesby,
Armstrong,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Paddock,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Patterson,
Blaine,	Dennis,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Wallace.
Bruce,	Garland,	Lamar,
Chaffee,	Gordon,	McDonald,
Christiancy,	Hill,	Mitchell,

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the existing debt of said District shall not be increased except by the loan of $200,000 authorized by this act.

That is substantially the same provision which was in the act of 1874. I had the statutes before me on Saturday and intended to copy it, but it is the substance of the act of 1874.

Mr. SPENCER. The tax bill so provided, too.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not suppose there can be any objection to it at all. It provides against any increase of the indebtedness of the District, except the temporary increase, authorized by this act, of $200,000.

Mr. DORSEY. I have no objection to it, but it is unnecessary. It is the law now.

Mr. THURMAN. That provision being in an appropriation bill, it might be doubtful whether it was a general law. It is safer to put it in here.

Mr. DORSEY. I think there is no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) There being no objection, the amendment willbe considered as agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I offer another amendment as a separate section:

SEC. —. That the term "school-houses," in the act of 17th June, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all establishments actually used for educational purposes; and that all taxes heretofore imposed on such establishments in the District of Columbia since the date of said act are hereby remitted, and where the same, or any part thereof, have been paid under protest, the sums so paid shall be refunded.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to hear some explanation of that amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I propose to give.

Mr. DORSEY. It sounds a little familiar to me.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, there are in this District certain educational establishments, the Columbian College, Georgetown College, and some others, which institutions were supposed never to fall within the tax-laws of the District until the last two or three years. The act of 1870, which is one of the first acts passed by Congress on this subject, for before that the taxes were levied by the municipal corporations of Washington and Georgetown and by the levy court of the county in respect to land that lay outside of these two corporations—the act of 1870 read in these words:

That from and after the passage of this act all churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national, municipal, or county.

Under that law these colleges never were taxed, the interpretation placed upon the word "school-houses" being that the term was nomen generalissimum; that it was not used in a limited popular signification, as meaning a little building in which a school was kept, but that it was used in an enlarged sense and included all educational establishments, because colleges are but larger schools and college buildings are but larger school-houses. The law remained substantially the same until the act of 1874, which established the present government, was enacted, and there the terms used were these; it provided for a levy of taxes—

Upon all real estate in said district, except that belonging to the United States and that used for educational and charitable purposes.

That plainly included in the exemption the college buildings as well as the school-houses; it included all buildings used for educational purposes, and was nothing in the world but embodying in the statute what had been the interpretation before placed on the term "school-houses" and what had been the uniform practice from the time there was any government in the District at all.

In the act of March 3, 1875, providing for levying taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the language was this:

There shall be levied upon all real and personal property in said District, excepting only the real and personal property of the United States and that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100.

Section 8 provided:

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: first, houses for the reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity; church buildings, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers; free public library buildings and cemeteries; secondly, the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other; but if any portion of any said building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds; thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States

Precisely the same or very nearly the same language was used in the act for levying taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and again in the act levying taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

Now, sir, it is a legal question, about which there possibly might be two opinions, as to whether the words "thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States" exempt these college buildings from taxation or not. My own judgment is that they do. I think it is pretty clear that if they are not exempt, the ordinary school-houses are not exempt; and certainly it never was the intention of Congress to tax the buildings in which the public schools in this city are located. But in order that there may be no doubt about this matter, about the intention of Congress, I have introduced this additional section. These colleges for one or two years have been taxed under this limited interpretation placed upon the term "school-houses," or else upon the idea that school-houses themselves are not exempt. Upon one or the other of these ideas the assessors have levied a tax upon the Columbian College, upon the college at Georgetown, and I do not know upon what other educational institutions in this District, and those taxes for one year at least, if not more, have been paid under protest.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment because I feel very sure it never was the intention of Congress that these educational institutions here should be taxed any more than it was the purpose to tax the school-houses of the city. Here are great school-houses in this city costing more money than the buildings of Columbian College; the Sumner school, for instance, the Franklin school, and other school-houses, having far more students than there are at Columbian College, twice as many, perhaps three or four times as many. It never was the intention of Congress that they should be exempt from taxation while this institution, the oldest institution perhaps in the District, should be taxed upon its college buildings and its campus and everything that is appurtenant to college buildings.

I think, therefore, that a section in this bill declaratory of the intention of Congress is proper and right. I do not, as a general rule, favor declaratory laws, and I admit that where declaratory laws are retroactive they ought to have no operation as against individuals; but a declaratory law may be retroactive in its operation as against the Government if the Government see fit to pass it, and that without any injustice or any violation of natural right. Here the only person to be affected by the retroaction of this section, should it be adopted, will be the Government, and if the Government sees fit to refund these taxes, collected under a misapprehension of the law, there is no injustice done to anybody nor is any principle of justice violated in the slightest degree.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it was the understanding that the bill as reported by the committee should be acted upon before subsequent amendments were made, and I ask the Senator from Ohio to withhold action upon his section for a moment until sections 11 and 12 of the bill are acted on.

Mr. THURMAN. I supposed there were no other provisions to be acted on.

Mr. INGALLS. There are two other sections, very largely formal in their character, to which I suppose there will be no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. I have said about all I care to say; and if the Senator having the bill in charge desires me to withdraw the amendment, for the present I will do so and offer it afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The Secretary will read section 11.

The Secretary read section 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the section just read. No amendment being offered and no objection made, the section will be considered as adopted.

The Secretary read section 12.

The section was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. The numbering of these sections will have to be altered, but that can be done by the Clerk. The amendment which was adopted on my motion to-day contains three or four sections; that makes it necessary to renumber the sections.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the last section is adopted, I desire to offer a new one.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio already has one amendment before the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If the Senator from Ohio will give way I wish to move an amendment to section 3 which I passed over, and the chairman of the committee requested me not to do it until the bill was through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be more regularly in order when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I would rather do it in committee now. It is an amendment giving the power to the commissioners to regulate hack-stands. I will give the reason for it in a minute.

Mr. THURMAN. If it is to section 3, of course I will give way to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to add at the end of the twenty-fifth line of the third section, after the word "Congress:"

The commissioners shall have power to license hackmen and to make reasonable regulations to govern their conduct, to fix the rates of fare for conveying persons, to locate the places where hacks shall stand and change them as often as the public interest shall require. Any person violating any orders lawfully made in pursuance of this power shall be subject to a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars, to be recovered before any justice of the peace in an action in the name of the commissioners.

The commissioners have exercised the power of changing hack-stands, but the supreme court of the District have recently decided that there was an ordinance in the way that located them and did not allow a change. An act of Congress of 1871 provided that all ordinances of the city of Washington not inconsistent therewith should continue in force until modified or repealed by the Legislative Assembly or by Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. The committee make no objection to the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS?] The Chair hears none, and it will be considered adopted. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to have that amendment again reported.

The SECRETARY. It is to insert as an additional section:

SEC. —. That the term "school-houses," in the act of June 17, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all establishments actually used for educational purposes, and that all taxes heretofore imposed on such establishments in the District of Columbia since the date of said act are hereby remitted, and where the same or any part thereof have been paid under protest the sums so paid shall be refunded.

Mr. INGALLS. This amendment presents a very grave question, and one that I hope the Senate will examine before they commit themselves to its provisions. While it is undoubtedly true that all educational and religious institutions that are used exclusively for those purposes ought to be exempt from taxation, yet it is a matter of very grave doubt whether educational institutions of a private and denominational character that are used for the purposes of private or corporate gain should be exempt from taxation. My own judgment is that they ought to bear their share of the burdens of the administration of the laws by which they themselves profit.

The effect of the amendment will be to exempt from taxation in this District property that is used for private and corporate gain but very little less than $2,000,000 in value. If the Senate think that will be a wise or proper thing to do, it rests with them to make that declaration. In my judgment it is unwise and injudicious, and in no wise in accord with that spirit which exempts from taxation property exclusively used for educational and religious purposes.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the property to be exempt, does the Senator know?

Mr. INGALLS. I understand it is several Catholic institutions in Georgetown, male and female, and one or two in this city, and that the aggregate of the property belonging to this denomination and used by them for purposes of gain to their church is not less than $2,000,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I understand that this amendment embraces other than Catholic institutions. Here is Columbian College, one of those to which my attention has been called, which unites in asking this exemption, and I suppose there must be others.

Mr. INGALLS rose.

Mr. KERNAN. Now, what are these educational institutions? Take Georgetown College, which I know. It is in charge of Catholics; but when I was a boy at school there from 1833 to 1836 about half of the boys were Protestants, and I think that is so now. They devote themselves, not to teaching Protestant boys religion in the sense of attempting to proselyte them, but they devote themselves to educating boys in the classical languages and full course of English education. The fact that the college is in charge of clergymen of the Catholic denomination is no reason why the institution should be taxed, any more than the schools in charge of those who are Methodists or Presbyterians or of the Episcopalian denomination. Georgetown College is not carried on for the purpose of private gain for the Church, as I understand the Senator to state.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator declines to be interrupted, and I will answer him after he gets through.

Mr. KERNAN. All right. I thought the Senator said so. They do not carry on a business to make money. They seek to sustain their college by moderate charges for tuition, &c., precisely as every other college does, precisely as do colleges in the State where the gentleman in the chair [Mr. HOAR] resides. These are in charge of gentlemen of one or the other of the various religious denominations, and they are laboring to educate those who prefer to go to them. Catholics, very properly, will generally send their children to schools in charge of those of their own faith and where the religious services are of that faith. Surely that is not a reason why they should be taxed, unless we are prepared to say that all the educational institutions throughout the country, some in charge of one denomination and some another, should be subjected to taxation.

I submit to my friend from Kansas that there is no justice except to have the rule which he says he concedes general that all property used for educational purposes exclusively shall be exempt. I understand that the institutions referred to do use their property exclusively for educational purposes. I submit that they should not be taxed. They seek to furnish education as cheaply as they can and sustain their institution without aid from the public Treasury; and I think we should, for the sake of education, for the sake of having people of every denomination educated in institutions preferred by them, exempt Columbian College as Georgetown College. The proposed exemption is of all institutions for education. I believe the language of the amendment applies to all property that is used solely for educational purposes. I hope all these institutions will be relieved. They are not able to pay the taxes. They are doing a great public good surely in trying to educate youths in morality and the higher branches of learning.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New York either purposely or inadvertently misapprehends the point I made.

Mr. KERNAN. The gentleman certainly does not suppose I purposely did so.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not state that I was opposed to this amendment because these institutions were controlled by Catholics. It would be the same to me whether they were controlled by Mohammedans, Swedenborgians, or Mormons, or Pagans. They are institutions that are conducted either by private or corporate authority for the purposes of gain. There is no such thing as free education of the young in the institutions to which I refer. The Senator states that from 1833 to 1836 he was a student in one of these institutions. He undoubtedly paid for his tuition. These are, in no sense whatever, public institutions; they are not sustained for the purpose of benefiting the public; and the attempt to create the impression that opposition is made to this amendment upon the ground that it affects institutions controlled by Catholics is very unjust and entirely unwarranted. As I stated, it happens that a very large proportion of the property that is affected by this amendment is controlled by Roman Catholics; but that does not affect the principle involved. The institutions are private institutions; they are owned either by individuals or by the church, and are conducted for the purpose of gain. The pupils that are instructed are charged for their tuition. And therefore they plainly do not come within the terms of any principle that exists of property that is employed for educational or religious purposes alone. It is upon this ground that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the property so held that will be exempted by the operations of this amendment is about $2,000,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, that I in the least intended to misrepresent the Senator who has just taken his seat is a very great mistake. The idea that I ever in the discharge of my public duties am moved by sectarian prejudice or act in any sectarian spirit is, I trust, an entire mistake. I alluded to the subject of religion only because a question was put to the Senator from Kansas what the institutions were exempted by this amendment, and he said, as I understood him, that they were Catholic institutions or Roman Catholic institutions. He may have said "mainly." I did not hear exactly his language. Therefore I said that the fact that they were in charge of Catholics, so far as this was true, did not affect the principle at all. The colleges in the State of New York—Union College, Hamilton College, the college at Syracuse, which is in charge of respectable gentlemen of the Methodist denomination, and I believe they established it as such—are all of the same character and we exempt them all from taxation because they are educational institutions and are not carried on for private gain in the sense that business corporations are, which make money for stockholders. Colleges get such endowments as they can from individuals. I am not one of those who have ever been desirons that they should get support from the public Treasury. They get what they can from donations, and as far as I am acquainted and I am sure in reference to the Columbian College and the others that have been named here, they do not carry them on for private gain in the sense of making money for stockholders or hoarding up money; but they take such compensation for boarding and lodging and teaching their students as will fairly and barely support the institution. If they are taxed they are compelled to charge the students just so much more. So far as I know these institutions—and I certainly know it as to one—they receive indigent students for really nothing, without ever parading it as a donation or wounding the feelings of him who has received its aid by letting others know that he did not pay. When I was there my father was fortunately able to and did pay, but it was moderate pay, cheap education. I believe the charge at Georgetown College when I was there in 1833 for tuition, board, and lodging was about $140 per year. It was not a money-making institution. It costs more there now because the times have changed, but then, adding a few charges for some extra branches, they gave a good English and classical education and board for the compensation I have named. Their charges now are only proportionately increased, as the times have changed. I understand from those connected with Columbian College that they do not carry it on for the purpose of private gain. They carry it on for the purpose of maintaining a good institution for educating boys in the higher branches of learning; and that they may give education cheaply they make their charges as low as they can, barely sustaining their institution.

I hope that we shall not depart from the rule that is applied in my State and every other so far as I know, where all incorporated academies and colleges are exempt from taxation on the property they use for educational purposes. I trust we shall act in that spirit by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN]——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me a grave error to speak of funds left by charitable persons invested in real estate for the purpose of endowing schools or colleges or churches as funds invested or used for the purposes of private gain whenever it happens that some slight compensation is paid by the beneficiaries of those establishments. The education of the people, like the public worship of God, is a public national want. It is something which, in some form or by some mode of instrumentality, every civilized, every religious nation, every nation that worships God, in some mode seeks to provide for its people. Now, happily, the people of this country are so made up that different forms of faith, different modes of worship, suit the belief, conform to the reason or the taste or the habits of different individuals; and so our people gather together in churches in their different sects; but the aggregate of these churches perform a public service for the rich and poor alike.

Now, when a beneficent individual leaves by his will or gives in his life-time property to found a church, is it just or fair to say that, as a condition of relieving the rest of the people of just so much of the charge of providing for that universal want of mankind, the funds so left by him shall be subjected also to a large deduction for other public wants? It seems to me not. So in the same way of the schools. Every American community recognizes that the education of the children of the whole people is a burden which ought to be imposed upon the entire property of the people, rich and poor alike. That is done chiefly in the common school, which is open to all. But the experience of all highly educated nations shows that, in addition to the common school, where there is one system of education, a Procrustes bed for all children who come, it is profitable and desirable to have these other endowed institutions where the teachers study the tastes and habits of every child, and these institutions have always in this country fallen more or less into the hands of the different religious sects; but none the less do they, combined and conjointly, perform this great public duty and fulfill this great public want—a duty which the State by some instrumentality is bound to perform; a public want which the public by some instrumentality or other is bound to provide for.

Sir, it is a gross injustice to say to the humane or liberally disposed individual who proposes to devote the proceeds of his life to this beneficent object, saving all the rest of his fellow-citizens from just so much of the public burden of education which they would be otherwise compelled to discharge, that the fund which he so sets apart from his own private property for a public use shall be taxed for other public uses in addition to the one to which he has especially devoted it.

I do not concede that Columbian College or Howard University or the college of Georgetown are doing anything for the purpose of private gain. They exact undoubtedly from the pupil, like the Senator from New York who was able to pay, some small and moderate payment toward paying for the instruction which he receives; but the fund is managed, not for the sake of making additional gain for the persons who manage it, but of giving to the pupil something more. The pupil receives not only what the money which he pays as his tuition fee purchases for him, but receives also the benefit of this large endowment which is found in buildings or in endowed funds.

My interest, of course, is not very much or specially for this Catholic institution in Georgetown; but I feel a very deep interest in the other institution on the hill, Howard University, where, partly by the contributions of the charitable people of the North of all sects, chiefly the orthodox denominations, as they are called, for the first time in the history of the world pupils of all complexions and of both sexes and of all races, the Malay, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Negro, the Indian, the girl and the boy, meet on the same benches to receive the same college education. I trust that Congress will not adopt or continue a policy which puts upon that heavily burdened fund the additional burden of being compelled to contribute a share to the other ordinary municipal expenses of this District.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] has spoken so conclusively on this subject that I feel almost like apologizing for adding a single word; but I will be brief.

I was sorry to hear my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] make any allusion to religious denominations. This amendment of mine has no reference to any particular religious denomination; nor is it for the special benefit of any particular religious denomination. It is just as much for the benefit of Howard University and Columbian College as it is for the benefit of the college at Georgetown. To speak of it in its true sense, it is simply for the benefit of the cause of education, without any regard whatsoever to religious doctrines or to religious sects.

And now I wish to correct a very great mistake into which my friend from Kansas has fallen, as I think. He speaks of this as exempting two millions of property belonging to the Catholic Church from taxation.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh! I did not make that statement.

Mr. THURMAN. I so understood.

Mr. INGALLS. I said the effect of it would be to exempt in the District property valued at about $2,000,000. I did not confine it to Catholics.

Mr. THURMAN. Well, I think that is a mistake; I do not think it will exempt any such sum as that, and certainly the section which I have offered cannot have that effect, because the section is limited to property actually used for educational purposes. If it is used for other purposes, if it is used for business purposes, or if no use is made of it at all, then it does not come within the exemption. I beg the Senate to listen to the section:

That the term "school-houses," in the act of 17th June, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all establishments actually used for educational purposes.

And then follows the remaining provision in accordance with that. It requires that it shall be actually used. In other words, this section simply provides that the law shall continue to be what it was from the very first organization of the city of Washington and the city of Georgetown, what it was from the time the United States became the owners of the District of Columbia, until within the last two or three years, when under a misconception, as I think, of the true meaning of these statutes these educational institutions were taxed. When I say a misconception I am fortified very much by what my friend from Maryland tells me has lately been decided in his city, that upon the very identical same words it has been held by the courts there that educational institutions are exempt, because colleges are nothing but larger school-houses. That is all they are; they are all school-houses, every one of them, and the term "school-houses" is used as nomen generalissimum, and not in its popular sense as confined to some little bit of a parish school.

Mr. President, I will not take up any further time. I hope this amendment will be adopted, and then I shall have done with this bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what number of institutions protested against the payment of taxes, because it is only such institutions that are embraced in the Senator's amendment, as I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. I know that Columbian College protested; I have been so informed by an eminent lawyer of this city. He also informed me that the Georgetown College protested; and I have heard—I have not heard it in such a way as to be able to assert it as true—that Howard University also paid under protest, if it paid at all.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the principle of the amendment is correct, should the repayment of the tax depend upon a protest at all?

Mr. THURMAN. The section will provide for everything for the future, and in respect to taxes already recovered and to be refunded, the section simply applies the usual provision, that if a taxpayer pays voluntarily, does not pay under protest, he cannot recover back. That may be taking advantage of a technical rule of law; I do not know but that the Senator's criticism is entirely right; but I imagine perhaps that that will cover all the cases, and therefore I was willing to put it upon the doctrine of the law.

Mr. BLAINE. I think, Mr. President, the distinction which should prevail in this matter is one to which I did not hear the Senator from Ohio call attention, and it occurred to me while the Senator from Massachusetts was addressing the Senate. The higher institutions of learning, which no public fund yet has ever been provided to establish and maintain, which go under the general name of college, it has been the general practice of the country to exempt from taxation. There are a great many reasons for that, which I will not detain the Senate by recounting; but when you come to say that every private school which comes into direct competition with the public-school system of the country shall be exempt from taxation, you are striking a blow at the public-school system. No public-school system yet has attempted to maintain colleges. We have to look to private foundations, with such public aid as they may get by endowment. I mean there has never yet been an attempt to maintain collegiate institutions by regular public taxation; but we have attempted in this country to maintain a system of common schools. Now, if you say that everybody who chooses to start a select school, as the phrase goes, shall not pay taxes, whether it be under a religious denomination or an association of private individuals or what not, you are striking a direct blow at the efficiency and the resources of the public schools, and you are drawing from the public-school what it should have to nurture and sustain it. There is a very wide difference (which will govern my vote wholly) between exempting schools of this character, primary and intermediate, and exempting collegiate institutions and university buildings. I would vote just as quickly to exempt Georgetown College as I would Columbian College or Howard University. I do not know but that I would willingly vote to exempt them all; but I would not vote to exempt from taxation everything that may be called a school-house, because I am conscious that in doing so I am striking a blow at the efficiency of any public-school system that this District may try to organize and sustain.

Mr. WHYTE. May I call to the attention of the Senator from Maine the fact that the difficulty is with the act of 1870, that it uses the term "school-houses?"

Mr. BLAINE. But we are now providing a new organic act.

Mr. WHYTE. I was going to say that now we ought to add to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio the words "not conducted for private gain," and leave all the charitable and benevolent societies and institutions of learning free from taxation.

Mr. THURMAN. I accept that.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think that covers the case.

Mr. SARGENT. It improves it.

Mr. BLAINE. It improves it, but does not cover the case. You may not be able to establish private gain as a motive, but you are establishing a school which is at war with the public-school system. Everybody has a perfect right to establish it; I do not deny that; everybody has a right to establish and maintain a select school, or a classical school, or a private academy of any kind; but I do not think they should take out of the public purse the exemption of taxation which that involves. They should not do it, because to do it is a detriment and a stab at the efficiency and support of the public-school system. Whether that be done by a private individual, or whether it be done by an association of individuals, or whether it be done by a church, Protestant or Catholic or Jewish, no matter, it is against the efficiency of the public-school system of any State where it is indulged in, or of this District, and does not come under the same head at all with the collegiate institutions which have no competitor in the public foundations.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Maine, does he not consider that both the public and private school are not rivals but co-operators for one great and common object; and therefore is it to be complained that the better the public school, the better the private school, and the better the private school the better the public school? They both run together and they cannot be considered in the least degree in collision.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Senator to understand me. I do not at all assume even to criticise the taste of a person or a family who choose or prefer the private school to the public school for the education of their children. That is a matter between parent and child, with which neither the legislator nor any other person has a right to interfere; but it is a part of the American policy, adopted with more or less efficiency, in the States of the Union and in this District, that there shall be public education for every child in the country, and that it shall be at the public expense. Now, I maintain it is not a part of wise public policy to say that whoever chooses to institute a rival school, either under church patronage or individual patronage, shall be favored by an exemption from taxation of the property involved in carrying it on.

Mr. BAYARD. Does not the Senator consider that every private school does in effect relieve the public from that very burden and therefore assists the efficiency of the public schools?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. THURMAN. Let me say to the Senator from Maine that there are now hundreds of children who cannot be educated in the public schools of the District of Columbia for want of public-school buildings.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the obvious duty is to provide the school buildings. It seems to me that the most palpable duty before us, if that be the fact, with which I was not acquainted, is right off, when we are making this provision for fixing the future taxation of this District, to provide public schools in which every child in this District may enter free, without charge. I shall govern my vote on that line. I certainly would not make any narrow distinction, any more than the Senator from Ohio would, whether I exempted a Catholic institution, or a Presbyterian, or a Methodist, or a Congregationalist one. As to all the higher institutions, such as universities and colleges, which it has never yet been considered the policy of our Government to enter into the foundation of and to maintain, I am perfectly willing to give them exemption from taxation; but I am not willing, much or little, to grant to private schools, that are the direct competitors of the free schools of the country, any exemption or favor whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say one word. This is the first time in my life that I ever heard that private schools were injurious in any sense to the public schools. I have seen with my own eyes the public-school system destroy all the private schools. I do not know a single private school in the city in which I live of fifty thousand inhabitants.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the "survival of the fittest."

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know whether it is the survival of the fittest or not. That is a question I shall not go into. I know very well that the public schools have destroyed the private schools in my city; but I always did suppose that they were sisters, all engaged in the same excellent purpose, and that, instead of being rivals, except that generous rivalry which is to be commended instead of condemned, there was no rivalry between them. But the amendment still being in my hands, I will modify it so as to remove all that objection by inserting the word "collegiate" before the word "establishments," and by inserting the words "and not for mere private gain;" so as to read

That the term "school-houses" in the act of 17th June, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all collegiate establishments actually used for educational purposes and not for mere private gain.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator why he wishes to say that the intention was so originally?

Mr. THURMAN. Because I have not the slightest doubt in the world that the term was used in that broad sense, and the proof is that that was the contemporaneous construction of it, and it never was until within the last two or three years thought otherwise.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator remember the debate that occurred on the occasion he refers to?

Mr. THURMAN. I recollect perfectly well the debate, and I remember that when we established the present government by the act of 1874, four years ago, we put in these words just precisely in accordance with the section I have offered now. The exemption was of all buildings "used for educational and charitable purposes." Subsequently, in appropriation bills Congress fell back into the old phraseology; but there is one of those acts, the act of March 3, 1875, which comes very near what is right, except that it has not "school-houses" in it at all, and it is this:

That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: first, houses for the reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings devoted to art or belonging to institutions of purely public charity, church buildings and grounds actually occupied by such buildings, houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers, free public library buildings, and cemeteries; secondly, the lands or grounds appurtenant to any said house or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any said house or building for its legitimate purpose and no other; but if any portion of any said building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same or a sum equal in value to such portion shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds.

That is the right principle and that was established in that law. Since that they have changed the phraseology again. Why they could not be content with that, I do not know; but the amendment which I have offered, which refers to collegiate establishments alone, and only where the property is actually used for educational purposes, it seems to me would receive precisely the interpretation of that. It cannot include property that is used for business purposes.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maine suggested a very just limitation upon the principle exempting property devoted to educational purposes from taxation; that is, that it should be confined to that class of educational institutions which are not in direct competition with the public schools. But there is a limitation which also ought to be made upon the generality of the principle of the Senator from Maine, which undoubtedly is sound. There are a very large number of endowed institutions in this country each performing the function which the common schools perform, and which are still indispensable to the education of the children of the whole people. The high school in Saint Louis and the high school in Boston are equal undoubtedly and have at times been superior to the endowments at Exeter or at Andover, but the children in the small and poor towns in the thinly settled agricultural communities cannot enjoy the benefit of such schools, and they must resort, therefore, to schools endowed by private charity, if they are able, to get such an education as the children in cities get gratuitously from the public. There are also many children to whom the discipline of a public school is totally unfitted by reason of feebleness of physical health or mental peculiarities; and that class of persons are to be looked to. Now, there are private schools in the neighborhood of Boston which perform the duty of education for children from the sparsely settled rural communities, although having very few pupils from the city where they are, because established in the city were better schools open to the children of the citizens. It seems to me, therefore, that all endowed institutions, all funds set apart for endowments for institutions of education, whether for school education or collegiate education, ought to be exempted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLAINE. Let it be reported as it now stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. —. That the term "school-houses" in the act of 17th June, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all collegiate establishments actually used for educational purposes, and not for mere private gain; and that all taxes heretofore imposed upon such establishments in the District of Columbia since the date of said act are hereby remitted, and where the same or any part thereof have been paid under protest the sums so paid shall be refunded.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the word "mere" should be omitted as a meaning or qualification for schools conducted merely for gain. It has other motives than gain and would therefore not come within that qualification. If gain enters into it at all, the exemption should not apply.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the word "mere" come out.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; strike out the word "mere."

Mr. THURMAN. I will so modify the amendment. The more I think of it, the more I feel the force of the remark of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN,] that the principle of this section requires that we should not take advantage of any technicality in regard to the making of a protest. I know there are some colleges which have made protest, Columbian and Georgetown, but I do not know that Howard University paid under protest. I think on the whole I will try the amendment with the words "under protest" stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to offer the following, to come in at the end of the amendment:

But this provision shall not be construed to embrace property let for hire or rent.

Mr. THURMAN. I accept that; but the language had better be made more perfect. I would suggest to my friend from North Carolina that he use the language of the act of 1875:

But if any portion of any said building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is the general idea I had.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will accept that instead of his, I will incorporate it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I accept that as the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas who has charge of this bill what extent of property is now exempt in this District. I find that in the act of 1877 certain specified property is exempt, and then certain other property exempt under the laws of the United States. I do not know what that phrase covers.

Mr. INGALLS. That refers to the property that belongs to the United States Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does it apply to churches?

Mr. INGALLS. Those are exempt by a specific provision of the statute.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not know how much it covered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say one word in explanation of the amendment I offered a moment ago. I concur most heartily in the general proposition that property devoted to purposes of religion and education directly ought to be exempt from taxation of all kinds; but where churches or colleges or corporations for purposes of religion or education have property, as they oftentimes have, of vast value that is not directly devoted to such purposes, I think such property ought to be taxed. It may be—I do not know how the fact is—that in this city a church corporation or an educational corporation may own a great many houses all over the city and receive annual rents from them; they may own other property, and from day to day and from week to week and from month to month receive pay for it. I would not be willing to see such property as that go free of taxation.

Mr. THURMAN. My amendment does not cover such property at all.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was looking at the act and scrutinizing the words. I am not sure that they do not bear the broad construction I suggest. They are:

All churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto—

If it stopped there it would do, but it goes on—and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia.

Now suppose an educational corporation has half a dozen houses and should let them for a certain rent, and this corporation should devote the rents to the purposes of education, they might say and would say, I have no doubt, that these buildings were used in connection with their educational purposes and to advance them, and therefore the property would not be subject to taxation. My purpose was to cut off that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] as modified.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, I do not know whether I understand precisely the scope of this proposition. If I do, the object of it is to exempt from its share of the ordinary public burdens in the shape of taxes property which is used for the purpose of education but not for the purpose of public education. All public property, that is, property owned by the state, and all property used exclusively for public purposes, that is, purposes which are free and equally to be enjoyed by all the citizens without distinction, without money, and without price, those descriptions of property, in my judgment, ought to be exempted from taxation, for the simple reason that there is no good sense that I can see in the public taxing itself. It would simply be taking money out of one pocket to put it in another. It would be taking money from the same body of people and giving it back to that identical body. Therefore there would be nothing gained or lost by it. But I understand this proposition to be to exempt property from taxation so as that the effect of it will be to take money out of the pockets of the whole and put it into the pockets of a part.

The theory of taxation is that all property not public in the sense which I have defined, inasmuch as it receives its share of the benefits of the government, shall bear its share of the burden of the government. Now it is proposed to exempt a portion of property not devoted to public purposes from bearing its share of public burdens, so as that private enterprises, however beneficial, however charitable, however much they ought to be encouraged as far as they may legitimately be encouraged by a wise public policy, yet nevertheless shall reap the benefit at the expense of the remaining portion of the community.

Now, Mr. President, I believe in the advantages of education. I believe in its advantages whether it is carried on as a strictly public business interest, whether it is carried on as a denominational business and interest, or whether it is carried on simply as a private speculation. It is education, and education is good, even although it may be mixed up with something that is not so good. But nevertheless there are limits, in my judgment, to the extent to which the state ought to go in its encouragement of education, and there are kinds of education in respect to which I do not think the state ought to go a step.

I believe also in religion, in religious instruction, in religious worship, and in religious practice; but that is a domain into which I think the state has no right to enter at all. It ought to be kept entirely separate and distinct. In that respect I am a secularist. I think the state should attend simply to secular functions and leave all education of a spiritual kind to institutions ordained for that purpose.

Now, if you exempt educational establishments under denominational control, you must not confine that exemption to one denomination, or to several, or to many, or even to all, Mr. President, because you do then the same partiality and injustice that you do if you make a distinction between denominations, for there are citizens whose consciences may be offended by the teaching of any denomination, as there are those of denominations whose consciences are offended by the teachings of other denominations. So, then, in order to preserve the principle of equity and justice in this matter, I see no course that can be taken except to exempt none, but to tax all equally and alike; and without entering into the discussion of the question, as I shall be called upon to vote, I have deemed it necessary to explain the ground on which I shall vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I concur in the view which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] expresses that questions of education and religion are specially questions wholly separate and distinct from matters of state, but I do not concur in the conclusion he draws from the premises that because this is true the state ought never to exempt from taxation any property belonging to religious bodies, whether schools or churches. I do not think the fact of exempting a church of any particular denomination or all churches or all schools under denominational influence necessarily in any respect connects the state with the church. If the opinions and conclusions of the Senator are right in regard to schools, then they are right in regard to all church property. If there should be no exemption because they are under certain ecclesiastical denominations, ought not the same principle to extend to churches as well as schools? That is the conclusion to which the Senator's argument would lead.

Now, what is the fact? There are no churches in this country but what are built and maintained by private contributions, and very few that are not burdensome to a few individuals who attend upon those churches. They are charitable institutions disseminating great good among the people, and yet usually the churches are such institutions as are supported by but comparatively few while they disseminate their good through all the persons who go and attend those churches. There are but few persons comparatively that bear the burdens of a church; and yet the conclusion to which the Senator from Ohio reaches is that churches should not be exempt from taxation, but that they should suffer the burdens of taxation as all other property. I cannot concur in that conclusion. I believe we ought to exempt all church property, and all property devoted exclusively to religious instruction. I believe, too, that we ought to exempt school property, the Georgetown College, the Columbian College, and all other institutions of that kind, because they are doing a great good to the community, and they are not deriving gain and profit therefrom.

Such is the competition between educational institutions at the present time that there is scarcely any institution in the land that charges exorbitantly for the instruction it gives. I know that in my own State our higher institutions, which are but few in number, are compelled to put down their tuition charge and their charge for board, and all the expenses incident to instruction, to a mere nominal price in order to be patronized, and I suppose that is the case with all institutions, whether in this District or in the States of this Union generally. There may be a few whose reputation is such that they command high charges for the instruction which they impart, but the great body of colleges and higher academies in the country cannot do that. Harvard College, I suppose, can do that, and Princeton, perhaps Yale, and a few others; but there are very few institutions in the country that can afford to charge more than the actual expense of the students at the institution.

I shall vote cheerfully to make this exemption, and I think in doing that we do no injustice to other persons—to private property-holders. The true basis of the taxation of property is the property which a man holds for his own benefit, for his own gain, for his own profit and advantage; but where the trustees of a college hold property, not for their own benefit, but for the purpose of adding to the educational advantages of the community, it ought not to be subject to taxation. I therefore shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. MORRILL. I notice that this amendment proposes to refund all taxes imposed since the act of 1870, that is, the assessments that have been made for the eight years past. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kansas how much this will amount to. It seems to me that it will amount to a very large sum, if, as has been stated, the amount of property which has been assessed is so much as $1,800,000. To refund the taxes for eight years on that amount will reach a very large sum. I doubt whether the District can afford to part with so much. It is, as I understand it, to be refunded whether paid or not; that is to say, it is to be exempted if it has not been paid, and it is to be refunded if it has been paid. I should like to know what the amount is.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand only one year's tax has been paid.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment proposes to refund all since 1870.

Mr. THURMAN. No, to remit. It refers to 1870 because that is the permanent law in which the term "school-houses" is used; but in point of fact it only goes back as I understand one year. Only one year's taxes have been paid, and I am informed that another year's taxes are claimed.

Mr. MORRILL. It will make no difference whether paid or not if so much is due.

Mr. THURMAN. Beyond all question those back taxes cannot be collected under laws which have become obsolete.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to hear from the Senator from Kansas what is about the amount.

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot inform the Senator from Vermont as to the amount that has been levied or the amount that is delinquent, and obviously that consideration is immaterial if this principle is to prevail. If it is right that this property should be exempt from taxation upon the grounds that have been stated, then the taxes that have been paid heretofore upon this property ought to be refunded irrespective of the amount.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I agree with the sentiment expressed by a number of Senators that if we are to exempt the property of any denomination or denominational school or of any church, we should exempt that of all; we should treat all precisely alike; and the only difference between me and the Senator from Delaware who just now addressed the Chair is this: he thinks they ought all to be exempt and I think they ought none of them to be exempt. It is a slight difference perhaps; but the principle with me is this: a very large proportion of our population belong to no church and no denomination whatever. Now, if the property of any denomination or of all denominations is to be exempt from taxation, it makes the tax of those who belong to no denomination whatever so much higher. I therefore agree in principle precisely with the Senator from Ohio to my right, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] that no property ought to be exempt from taxation upon any such ground, and I shall so vote.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have only one sentence to utter in answer to the gentlemen who think that all churches and all educational buildings should be taxed. I understand that the principle of taxation in every civilized country, at least so far as I know, is to levy taxes upon property that is used or may be used for gain, and not to raise taxes on property that is not used for gain at all, but is devoted to some charitable or educational purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Ohio if every college that charges tuition is not used for gain?

Mr. THURMAN. How much money do they make? They are as poor as rats, the most of them. Every single one of them in my State is exempted by the constitution.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Ohio if his purpose is to take an account between the various collegiate institutions for the purpose of ascertaining whether they have realized much profit, or little profit, or any profit. The true rule, as it seems to me, is that your common schools that are a common charge upon the whole people are to be relieved from taxation and every other burden; but wherever the school, no matter of what denomination, makes terms with its pupils and charges tuition it should be taxed. Where is the difference between the capital invested in that character of business and that invested in any other character of business that is conducted in this country for profit and reward? Where is the dividing line? By what rule can you tax the one enterprise and fail to tax the other?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SECTION —. That the term "school-houses," in the act of 17th June, 1870, chapter 30, was intended to embrace all collegiate establishments actually used for educational purposes and not for private gain; and that all taxes heretofore imposed upon such establishments in the District of Columbia since the date of said act are hereby remitted; and where the same, or any part thereof, have been paid, the sums so paid shall be refunded; but if any portion of any said building, house, or ground, in terms, excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed.

Mr. CONKLING. In one instant, and I will occupy but one, for the Senate is impatient to vote—I wish to state why I shall vote against this amendment. I shall vote against the first part of it which affirms the original intention, because I believe the assertion of the amendment unfounded in fact. I think I remember and know that the original intention was not that which this amendment asserts. In the second place, I shall vote against it because as an original question I believe it to be wrong, founded in error and founded in a violation of the principles on which just taxation rests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Anthony,	Cockrell,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Armstrong,	Coke,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Bailey,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Wallace,
Bayard,	Hereford,	Merrimon,	Whyte,
Beck,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Withers.

Conover,	Edmunds,	Howe,	Ransom,
Davis of W. Va.,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. There was an amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio some time ago and agreed to, which I think is a little imperfect. I dare say the Senator intended to have re-enacted, in regard to the increase of the debt, the section in the law of March 14, 1876. I have therefore prepared a section in conformity with the existing law, which proposes some penalty provided the indebtedness shall be increased by any officers of the District government. I send it to the Chair.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that by unanimous consent the amendment covering that point which I offered and which was agreed to may be considered as not having been agreed to, in order that this amendment, which makes it much more perfect, may be offered. I suppose by unanimous consent that can be done.

Mr. ALLISON. There can be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] taking the place of that of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] which has been agreed to?

Mr. DORSEY. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. — That there shall be no increase of the present amount of the total indebtedness of the District of Columbia; and any officer or person who shall knowingly increase, or aid or abet in increasing, such total indebtedness, except to the amount of the $300,000 as authorized by this act, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding ten years, and by fine not exceeding $10,000.

Mr. DORSEY. It seems to me that that is simply cumbering up the statute-book with a law that has been already in existence four or five years and has not been repealed, and so far as I know no one desires to have it repealed. If the Senator from Vermont thinks it important, I hope there will be no objection to letting it go in. It is simply repeating the present law.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been already adopted in substance without the penalty, and there is some doubt as to whether that law would apply to this new bill.

Mr. DORSEY. There is no objection to it if the Senator wishes it to go in.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the honorable Senator from Vermont what is the object in penalizing so highly the attempt to do something that is invalid. These officers are under superior powers. If you shall prohibit the incurring of this debt their attempt to do so will be entirely invalid.

Mr. MORRILL. I will only say that this is an exact copy of the existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment just reported takes the place of the amendment relating to the same subject agreed to on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I wish to offer an amendment to come in as section 2 of the bill:

All citizens of the United States who now or may hereafter reside permanently in the District of Columbia, and have no other place of fixed abode, and none others, shall be deemed citizens thereof.

Mr. SARGENT. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. MERRIMON. I mean to say that it is very important and might become a very important matter that citizenship in the District of Columbia should be defined. Questions as to citizenship very often arise in the courts. I find here, upon the subject of jurors, that persons who select jurors are required to select them from the citizens of the District. Who are citizens of the District? How long shall a man live here before he is a citizen?

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator propose to fix a term of residence to constitute citizenship here?

Mr. MERRIMON. No; by the proposed amendment I do not require that a person shall live here any fixed time in order to become a citizen; it is a question of intent, a question of domicile. Does he come here for the purpose of citizenship; does he abandon his home everywhere else? If so he is a citizen, and ought to be entitled to the benefits of citizenship. I make it as broad and liberal as possible. It seems to me a very important provision. Very high rights might turn upon it; and I have been astonished, taking a legal view of it, that in no law in the past, so far as I can learn, has citizenship of this District ever been defined. I can see no objection to the amendment in the world, and I think it should be adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator from North Carolina what he thinks will be the result of this amendment? What are the consequences of citizenship here other than follow from mere inhabitancy? There are no political rights to be enjoyed here. The amendment undertakes to define citizens of the District of Columbia. What is meant by that? We all know that a citizen of the District of Columbia has no right to vote for an officer. He has no suffrage, no privileges of any kind. The word "inhabitant" or "resident" has an intelligent meaning, but when you say "a citizen of the District of Columbia," it is meaningless. I must confess that I should like to have the Senator explain it so that I may vote intelligently.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am very sorry that my friend cannot see as plain a proposition as that. I always gave him a great deal of credit for being able to understand a proposition.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I confess I do not understand this.

Mr. MERRIMON. A person who remains here permanently may be required by the public to discharge a great many duties that a citizen here temporarily would not be required to perform. I point to one which I have in mind just now. There are hundreds and perhaps thousands of men required to perform the duty of jurors here every year. I remember that as one instance which occurs to me. The law requires that citizens of the District of Columbia shall discharge those duties. Now, sir, who is a citizen of the District of Columbia? Is it a member of Congress? Is it one of the employés of the Government? Is it a man who is here for only three months, intending to go home after that time? Then it is competent for Congress to require the citizens of this District to discharge a great many other duties. They might be required sometimes to perform a quasi-military service in the District of Columbia. They might be required to work on the streets. They might be required to do a great many things, it seems to me, in which case it would be very important that there should be some law defining who should be subject to such duties.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me a moment? I am troubled just as the Senator from Florida. I know of but two kinds of citizenship under the Constitution: one a citizen of the United States and the other a citizen of a State. If the word "citizen" can have any other meaning I am willing to agree to support the amendment.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am astonished to see my friend from Texas sticking in the bark. I do not think there is any occasion for it here. It is true that in one sense there are two classes of citizens in this country, or rather the same person may have two qualities of citizenship embodied in himself, one as a citizen of the United States, another as a citizen of the State where he resides; but that does not exclude the logical possibility that he may have a third character of citizenship, to wit, a citizenship of the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. Or of a Territory.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir, or of a Territory, or there might be a dozen sorts of citizenship; so that the suggestion that the Senator from Texas makes has no logical force or power in it.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask to interrupt the Senator a moment on that point. It occurs to me that under the Constitution a citizen of a Territory having no State citizenship is a citizen of the United States and no other citizen, and so of a citizen of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MERRIMON. He certainly is a citizen of the United States for certain purposes, and then for certain other purposes he is a citizen of the Territory where he resides. So here as a citizen of the District of Columbia he may be a citizen of the United States. He may also for certain other civil purposes defined by statute, which may be changed by Congress from time to time, be a citizen of the District of Columbia, and it may be all-important in judicial proceedings. Such proceedings occur to me as the most likely to make it necessary why citizenship of the District of Columbia should be defined by law.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the Senator if there is no law now on the statute-book prescribing the qualification of jurors in the courts of the District?

Mr. MERRIMON. None, except this law:

> The names on the lists shall be selected, as near as may be, from among the citizens of the several wards or districts of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the three divisions of the District outside the limits of said cities, &c.

I will put the question I put a while ago to my friend from Texas, and my friend from Florida, of what class of citizens of the District of Columbia may these jurors be?

Mr. MAXEY. Citizens of the United States residing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That law was passed at a time when the people of this District had the privilege of voting, and it was simply coupled with the condition of residence for a certain period.

Mr. MERRIMON. My friend cannot get out of his head the idea of voting. Voting is not essential to citizenship. There are thousands and thousands of people in this country who are citizens of the States and citizens of the United States who never voted.

Mr. THURMAN. All women.

Mr. MERRIMON. All the women of this country are citizens, all the children of this country are citizens in some sense. It is a false notion that the right to vote and citizenship go hand in hand. They do not. I submit this amendment because I think it is wise and proper. I have no more interest in it than any other Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. One word on this amendment. The first section of this bill declares that the District of Columbia shall remain and continue a municipal corporation. It is true the District of Columbia has not one single attribute of sovereignty; it is not an autonomy that has sovereign power; but it is competent for Congress to create it a municipal corporation; and I suppose it is competent, if there may be such a thing as citizenship in a municipal corporation, for Congress to define it. I think, therefore, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina is well enough.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The other day, the Senator from North Carolina will remember that he brought before the Senate the subject of education in connection with this matter, and gave notice to the Senate that at a future day he intended to submit an amendment to this bill, the effect of which would be that none but citizens of the District of Columbia should be permitted to send their children to the public schools here. If that consequence is intended to result from this amendment I shall vote against it. It is not expressly avowed, but the Senator stated that the other day.

I admit that the inhabitants of the District may be called upon to discharge some local duties here that a mere transient wanderer cannot be asked to do. Jury duty is referred to as one of them. I imagine that the courts have had no difficulty hitherto in ascertaining who are liable to jury duty within this District. I presume the citizens referred to in the statute which the Senator has read were persons who at the time that act was passed enjoyed the right of suffrage within the District. That I presume, although I am not familiar with District matters at that time.

In regard to the question of education in the public schools of the District, I have to say that inasmuch as the Government of the United States proposes to pay one-half of the expenses of this District, including the expenses arising from the maintenance of the public schools, there is no great inequity, so to speak, in a transient inhabitant sending his child to school, if he happens to be for a limited period within the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia. I admit the force of what was said the other day by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in regard to these costly streets. I think in all candor and justice that the Government of the United States ought to bear more than half of the expenses of maintaining these costly drives; but with respect to the subject of education in the public schools the matter is entirely different. While the Government of the United States, which is the common agent of all the States of this Union, pays one-half of the expenses of the schools here, it is not inequitable or unjust to ask that occasionally the children of the citizen of an adjoining or a distant State may be admitted to them. I say I do not know that the exclusion of a child from the public schools because its parents are not citizens of the District will follow from the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. It may be proper for me to say that I am not one of the members of Congress to whom he alluded the other day whose children attend the public schools; but I think that education ought to be as free as air, and that you may as well refuse to the dusty traveler the privilege of tasting the waters of the fountains of this city as to close the door in the face of the child who might seek to improve his mind and his morals within these schools.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina had the kindness to say that in the argument which I made I stuck in the bark. If that Senator or any other living man can find under our system of law more than two kinds of citizens, he can do what I cannot do and never have done. What constitutes a citizen of the United States was never thoroughly well defined until the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. What constitutes a citizen of a State was well known long before the adoption of the Constitution. That what constitutes a citizen of the United States was not well understood or defined is clearly shown in the Dred Scott case, and it was not defined until the adoption of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The inhabitants of the District of Columbia or of any other Territory may be citizens of the United States or they may be citizens of a State, temporarily residing here. They are citizens of the United States at the same time, and if they were born here and never resided in a State, and thereby acquired no State citizenship, their citizenship is only that of the United States. So it is in the Territories. Those who inhabit the Territories are citizens of the United States.

Of course I did not say that a voter was necessarily a citizen or that a citizen was necessarily a voter, for in a number of the States persons who have simply filed their papers for naturalization are voters before they become citizens. The two do not necessarily concur; but a citizen of the District of Columbia, I respectfully submit, who is not a citizen of the United States or of a State, is an anomaly, and to employ the phrase is the misuse of a well-accepted legal expression.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 9, noes 30.

Mr. MERRIMON. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section on the subject of schools:

Only the children of citizens of the District of Columbia shall be entitled to attend the public schools of the same free of charge; but persons within the age prescribed for pupils attending such schools may attend the same, first paying reasonable tuition fees, to be fixed by the trustees of the public schools.

I want to say that I concur most heartily in the beautiful sentiment expressed by my friend from Florida awhile ago. My regret is, however, that it is purely poetic; that it is not practical in the nature of things that we should hand out to the people of the United States free as air education in this District. If the doctrine he contends for and the doctrine that is practiced upon in this District be true, then we can establish a great national school in the District of Columbia and have all the children, black and white, from one end of the nation to the other, here in the District at the expense of the nation. Will my friend from Florida, or will any Senator pretend for one moment that Congress could establish a free school, or a free college, or a free university in the District of Columbia, and allow all the people of the United States to educate their children in it? I apprehend not, and I so contend. Yet the principle that is contended for here is a principle that will allow that thing to be done. As I stated the other day, two-fifths of the thirty thousand children who go to school in this District are not children of citizens who reside here, and the number of this class is increasing every year. The amount estimated for next year for educating not only the children of this District but such children as may come here is $400,000, and the trustees ask $400,000 more to build the school-houses that are needed to supply the children here now. Six thousand children in this city now who are going to school are not being educated in school-houses; they are being educated in sheds, and shanties, and wherever they can find a place of shelter at all. Can the proposition be true—it seems to me monstrous—that the Government of the United States can from year to year go on and appropriate by the half million to educate the children of anybody that will come here for that purpose or for any other purpose? It looks very handsome to educate such children. I wish it to be done; but it seems to me that such a principle has not the sanction of the Constitution, nor does it seem to me to be sound. I state again what I stated the other day, that twenty citizens of the State of Maryland may send their children into this District, put a matron in charge of those children, and educate them free at the expense of the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States. That is plainly wrong. I have discharged my duty in endeavoring to remedy the evil.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, in the few observations I made awhile ago I did not say anything about the establishment of a national college for the education of the children of the country. When the question arises of the establishment of a university here to be supported by the Government of the United States, I shall express my views upon that question. That question is not now before us. I am, however, a friend of education without any qualification, and I do not desire to see any principle adopted by the Government of the United States in regard to this District, in matters of this kind at least, that does not prevail in the other States of the Union. I will say that in my State a citizen of Alabama may come within our borders, and, if he only remains there for two or ten days, he may send his child to a public school without any questions being asked, and he can get all the education that our schools afford at the expense of the tax-payers of Florida.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly, I will.

Mr. MERRIMON. Where does Congress get the authority under the Constitution to appropriate $200,000 from the Treasury to educate the children of such people as happen to come into this District?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I can answer that question very readily. The jurisdiction of Congress over this District is just the same as the jurisdiction of the State of North Carolina over the territory embraced within its limits. Anything that the State of North Carolina can do within the confines of its territory the Congress of the United States may do within the limits of this District. I am not very well acquainted with what is being done in the public schools here, but this much I know: that we propose to defray one-half of the expenses of the schools of this city, and if you undertake to say that it is the duty of the United States to educate exclusively the children here you will see that it would be inequitable to shut out the child of a citizen of another State when that State and other States are contributing to the expenses of the District. If the proportion paid by the Government were confined simply to local improvements there might be something in the argument, but when it comes to education, in which all the people of the Union are contributors of one-half the expense, I say there is nothing in the argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia, as amended, was agreed to as a substitute for the House bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERRY, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) I ask now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes, which is the bill reported last week by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will not take up the bill proposed by the Senator from Michigan. The Committee on Appropriations are prepared to proceed with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It has been already pending for three days ready for action, but, owing to the strong desire manifested on the part of many members of the Senate to complete the bill which has been under consideration, the Committee on Appropriations have not seen proper to press it. I want to say with reference to the bill that it covers ninety-four pages and embraces ten or twelve hundred amendments, I do not know how many. I apprehend that there will be no very serious trouble with the amendments in the Senate, but it will require a very long time in conference. I understand that there is some probability that the resolution which passed the Senate some time ago fixing the time for adjournment on the 10th of June will pass the House. If that resolution shall pass fixing the adjournment on the 10th of June it will be utterly impossible to complete the appropriation bills unless we devote every moment to them that we can. If they are laid aside for other bills it will be impossible to conclude them. This appropriation bill will require several days in conference, I know not how many. Two years ago the conference committee were in session upon the similar bill for six weeks. There is not a greater difference of opinion between the House and Senate committees this year than there was two years ago. I now desire to particularly impress upon the Senate the fact that unless we have the right of way and can proceed with the consideration of this bill we cannot adjourn on the 10th of June, even if the House shall agree to the resolution of the Senate, but an extra session will be absolutely necessary.

Mr. FERRY. I have no idea that the House will agree to the resolution of the Senate to adjourn on the 10th of June; neither have I any apprehension that the appropriation bill referred to by the Senator from Minnesota will be lost. I have no desire to antagonize the appropriation bill; but I feel it my duty to urge the Senate to the consideration of this financial bill. It is no time now to appeal to the Senate in my own words; but the condition of the country appeals far stronger than any language I can employ in asking the consideration of this measure. When the bill that has just passed was taken up, I urged the consideration of this bill that I am now pressing, but I yielded as gracefully as the circumstances would justify to the consideration of the bill to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, which has now occupied over four days. The country is demanding the passage of this bill, which has now been before us I think nearly a month. On the 29th of last month it passed the House, if my memory serves me correctly, and it is nearly one month old in the Senate. I do not apprehend that it will provoke much discussion. I understand the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] desires to address the Senate on the subject, and I think one or two other Senators. As for myself, I am willing to forego any other submission of views in order to hasten the time and pass the bill. I think if the bill were submitted to the Senate to-night without debate, Senators are prepared to vote upon it. I think their judgments are made up. Mine is; and I am as ready to vote now as I shall be next week, and I think other Senators are. But in deference to those who have expressed a desire to speak, it is courtesy and my duty to allow them an opportunity. What I want is that the Senate shall now take up the bill and let it be the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. When did the Senator say it passed the House?

Mr. FERRY. Last month.

Mr. CONKLING. This bill?

Mr. FERRY. This bill which I have now moved.

Mr. CONKLING. The bill to which this is a substitute?

Mr. FERRY. No, it is the very bill. It passed April 29, House bill No. 4663, and all that is necessary is for the affirmative vote of the Senate for it to become a law, with the approval of the President.

Mr. BLAINE. It is the bill that stops contraction.

Mr. FERRY. It prevents further contraction of the greenbacks on the passage of the bill. It contains simply that idea and none other.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise to support the motion of the Senator from Michigan. I hope every opponent of the further contraction of the volume of our circulation will vote to sustain that motion. In fact, if much further contraction goes on, as was suggested to me a while ago by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] the bills brought forward by the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will not be of much consequence; we shall not have anything to appropriate with. We want something to pay with, and if the present Secretary of the Treasury is allowed to run his mad and destructive career much longer we shall be left here passing appropriation bills on an empty Treasury; there is no doubt about it. We have given away on this financial question quite as long as has been right, and a little longer in my judgment than we should have done. I have been nervous and anxious during the protracted discussion that has taken place upon the District bill. I consented that that might take precedence, not thinking it would occupy more than half as long as it has, though nobody is to blame for its unexpected length. But now we have reached a point where we hope that every Senator who is a friend of this House bill and who thinks the Secretary of the Treasury should be limited in canceling the currency any further, will insist on the matter being disposed of and a vote reached at the earliest moment possible upon a fair presentation of the question.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say that six months ago the House of Representatives passed a bill to repeal the resumption act, and that bill lay in the Committee on Finance over four months. That measure was reported to this body at least a month ago.

Mr. BAYARD. This was reported on the 21st of May.

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; I beg your pardon; I am right. I say that the bill to repeal the resumption act, with the amendments thereto, was reported from the Finance Committee not less than one month ago; and yet we have been delayed from day to day on one pretext or another. Six months have elapsed since that bill came to the Senate. One of the great political parties of this country pledged itself in national convention to repeal that act. The people demand it. As was very well said by the Senator from Indiana a moment ago, unless this contraction that is going on by the million every day is stopped, there will be no money with which to meet the appropriations that may be passed by Congress. Talk about voting to provide for armies to keep down mobs! No wonder there are mobs when all of your laws are against the wishes of the people, as they have said, and against their interest. Make your laws in consonance with the wishes and the interests of the people, and then there will be no necessity for an Army except a mere skeleton of one. I hope that every Senator in this Chamber of both political parties, who is in favor of stopping this contraction of the currency, will not yield until this matter is disposed of one way or the other, and let the country know what the Senate of the United States intends to do.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall vote, Mr. President, to take up this appropriation bill as proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, and I shall vote in that way for the purpose of facilitating the business of the Senate.

As was truly said by the Senator from Minnesota, this appropriation bill is a long one, although one that will occupy the Senate but a very brief time most likely, as I understand there are no differences on either side of the Senate with reference to the general conclusions reported by the Committee on Appropriations; so that if we take up this appropriation bill we can pass it to-morrow and next day, and most likely to-morrow, if it can be read in that time. Then we can go to the consideration and discussion of this financial measure; but I cannot understand why we should press that at this moment, when at any other moment there has been no great haste with reference to it.

The Senator from West Virginia says that the House of Representatives six months ago passed a bill repealing the resumption act and that that was held for four months in the Committee on Finance. True; and when that bill was reported back here more than a month ago with the acquiescence of the committee, it proposed to commence the contraction of the currency on the 1st day of October next, and pending the discussion of that measure, as Senators very well know, it was considered by having one brief speech a day, and then an executive session at two o'clock. There was so little haste on the part of Senators that we adjourned over from Thursday to Monday by universal acquiescence because Senators were not ready to speak. That is why that bill has hung here, as the Senator from West Virginia says, for nearly a month. Then a week or more ago the Committee on Finance reported the bill proposing an immediate stoppage of the contraction of the currency. Now what is that bill? It is a bill in the exact language of the House proposition. The Finance Committee did not cross a t nor dot an i, nor put in a paragraph in that bill. As has been stated by the Senator from Michigan, if we are unanimous with reference to it, it can be passed without an hour of debate; but, as we all know, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] wishes to express his views upon the financial question at considerable length, occupying a day. Other gentlemen desire to do the same thing. Now, then, when this bill passes the Senate, as I believe it will receive a large majority—it certainly will receive my vote when the time comes—it becomes a law practically so far as the two Houses are concerned without any further action of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it is to become a law ought it not to become a law at the soonest possible moment? The sooner the better? Is not that true of this proposition? My judgment is that we can do all the talking that will be elicted upon this proposition and vote in the same day, and pass it beyond a doubt.

Mr. ALLISON. If that be true, then we can pass both these bills before we adjourn this week. Now, in reference to the question of contraction——

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if there is a single appropriation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill that will be available before the 30th of June?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not; and the Senator need not ask me the question.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not know how the fact was, because sometimes there are appropriations made available at once.

Mr. ALLISON. Generally that is not so.

Mr. THURMAN. If that be so I do not see why the appropriation bill cannot just as well lie aside one day for this bill, as this bill lie aside for the appropriation bill.

Mr. EATON. There is another reason, and that is that paper will soon be worth as much as gold if we let this alone. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to enter into the discussion of the merits of either of these bills, and I will only say in reply to the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from West Virginia that this question of the contraction of the currency is not within the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. He can only contract a certain amount of currency as national banks are started, and it is not likely that any considerable sum will be contracted within a day or two. I only express my view in reference to the convenience of the transaction of the business of the Senate. This appropriation bill will last some days in the Senate; it will last many days, as Senators on the Appropriations Committee well know, in a conference committee. The service of every Department of this Government has been radically changed in this appropriation bill in its personnel and in the salaries of its officers, and it will require, therefore, a long and tedious effort in a committee of conference to adjust this bill. If, then, we desire within a reasonable time to adjourn this session, it seems to me the appropriation bills should, as they always have done heretofore, take precedence of other business of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will withdraw that motion to let the Senate decide which bill shall be taken up. I am not disposed to further discuss the question, but I think it is very important that one or the other bill should be taken up, one appropriating money out of the Treasury and the other preventing the curtailment of the currency of the country. Let the Senate to-day decide which they will take up first and which is of more importance to the country.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It can be decided as well to-morrow.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be glad to say a word or two as to the necessity of taking up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Pennsylvania insists on his motion, which is not debatable.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senate will not adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I think if the Senate will look at this question for a single moment they will not hesitate to take up the appropriation bill for the reason that it will not require very long to consider it in the Senate, and while the other question is under discussion, after the appropriation bill has been completed, the conferences can proceed with other appropriation bills, so that there will be no time lost and no inconvenience will be suffered by the Senate.

I said a moment ago that if the House should pass the adjournment resolution as we have passed it in the Senate and adhere to it, an extra session would be necessary. Of course I presume that we might extend the time, I do not doubt that; but it certainly will be a very great convenience if we can work up to the time that we ourselves have set for the adjournment. I only want to say to the Senate that if it shall decide to lay aside the appropriation bills the Committee on Appropriations will certainly not be responsible for not completing their portion of the business by the 10th of June. We shall endeavor to get through with it as rapidly as we can, but unless we have the ear of the Senate and can be heard when our bills are ready, we certainly cannot be prepared to adjourn at that time.

There are three appropriation bills yet pending in the other House. The Army bill has not been passed, the sundry civil bill has not been reported to the House, or at least has not been acted upon at all, and the general deficiency bill is still there. So that after this is completed there will still be three more appropriation bills to come from the House.

Mr. MORRILL. How many have become laws?

Mr. WINDOM. Only two or three have become laws at this time; but there are two or three pending in conference committees. If we take up this bill I am satisfied that one day will finish it. There are a great number of amendments, probably ten or twelve hundred, but the settlement of four or five general propositions will decide this whole bill, and I am satisfied that it can be passed in one day if the Senate will give its attention to it, and we can then proceed with the consideration of the bill in conference while the Senate is discussing the finance question. We have already spent some six or eight weeks of the session in the discussion of one single finance bill. I think the country really will not suffer if talk on the finances should be suspended for a few days longer. I know it is very painful to do it—painful to members of the Senate, but not to the country.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am assured by Senators sitting aroound me, whose experience in matters of appropriation bills is much larger than my own—the Senator from Kentucky, for instance, and others—that the measure brought forward by the Senator from Minnesota will occupy a week. Now, I am perfectly satisfied that the people of this country are much more deeply interested in the measure moved by the Senator from Michigan and in having it properly disposed of than they are in the appropriations that are proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator will allow me a word at that point?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. I dislike to interrupt him, but I will say that this bill is unanimously reported with reference to every item in it, by the Appropriations Committee; so that it cannot take much time. There is not a division in the committee on a single item in the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. There are a great many men, however, to convince before we can have unanimous action in this body.

Mr. BECK. I did say to the Senator from Indiana that I believed this appropriation bill would take a long time. The House has made very radical changes. Many of them very likely will meet with the concurrence of a large portion of the Senate. The Fourth Auditor is stricken out and his office abolished. The Fifth Auditor is stricken out and his office abolished. And so with many other very important matters. We should not deceive ourselves about its being a short bill, with a thousand or twelve hundred amendments and such radical changes as those I have suggested being urged through in an hour or two, unless the views of the House are much weaker here than I expect they are. I am a member of the committee and expect to vote with the committee in retaining the Fourth and Fifth Auditors, and so with many other things; but I know that it will take a long time to dispose of that bill.

The Committee on Appropriations are now up with their work except on this single bill. The Army bill has not come to the Senate; the sundry civil bill has not yet come here; the river and harbor bill is still behind, and if we are going to do anything for the country in regard to stopping contraction it is time we were doing it. I agree with the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Indiana that we can dispose of that matter certainly in two days. I am willing for one to sit it out to-morrow night if necessary, or the next day, or any other reasonable time, so as to give a definite conclusion to the public. As to the committees of conference, they sit during the session, they sit at night, they take no time from the sessions of the Senate.

I presume nobody assumes that we are going to get away from here on the 10th of June. The House Appropriation Committee do not expect to let us off till about the 30th of June. If we get away then we shall be very lucky, in my opinion. Although I am a member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, I shall vote with the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Michigan to settle the question of the financial policy of the country. We have spent a good while on that, and we had better settle it one way or the other.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, the questions that are now before the Senate I discover are going to take up a great deal of time, they are going to be discussed, both of them, and I think we should take up the Calendar and go through with it. There is no use in having a Calendar and having a rule laid down to proceed with it if we do not live up to it some time. I have given way on the subject of the bill for the organization of Lincoln Territory time and again with an understanding that it should be taken up in its order on the Calendar. Now if these questions could be settled, as these Senators believe, now, without debate, I should still yield, but seeing that they will be debated and knowing that the debate will take up a great deal of time, I insist on the regular order, which is the Calendar, being proceeded with. I think we have a right to do that, and I am sure that the frequency with which I have given way in this matter entitles me now at any rate to have it considered presently or within some short time. I insist upon the Calendar being taken up in its order.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call again the attention of the Senate to the fact that this financial bill can pass to-morrow. It is not necessary that it should consume any more than one day. As far as I know, there are but two Senators who desire to speak upon it at any great length. There may be others who may wish to express their views briefly, but, as far as I am advised, there are but two Senators who will take up much time to-morrow or whenever the bill is taken up.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the contraction of the greenbacks is constantly going on. So far this month about a million and a half have been retired. The contraction is going on every day. If this appropriation bill is to consume ten days of the time of the Senate, during all those ten days the contraction will proceed, so that when we reach the conclusion of that bill, we shall have so much less currency in the country. I think Senators who are anxious to stop this contraction ought to be willing at this time to take a vote upon the question and have the bill considered at once. ["Vote!" "Vote!"] Senators say "vote." I will stop, and I ask a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill suspending any further contraction of the currency.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAMLIN, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired in all votes with the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is absent, and paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on the finance bill. If here, he would vote against the motion. I do not know how the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Armstrong,	Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Oglesby,
Bailey,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Spencer,
Beck,	Grover,	McCreery,	Teller,

So the motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice that after the morning hour to-morrow I shall move to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. FERRY. It seems to be the wish of the Senate that we adjourn. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan who has charge of the bill now to yield——

Mr. FERRY. I will yield to any business. All I desired was to have the bill taken up and left as the unfinished business.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Michigan said he thought this bill could be disposed of to-morrow. I hope by unanimous consent now, as that seems to be the impression, we may have it understood that the bill shall be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will not agree to that unless we have some understanding.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest that by unanimous consent we vote at five o'clock to-morrow. I make the suggestion in the interest of the public business, not because I think the Senate should pass the bill, though I suppose it will, that to-morrow at five o'clock we take the vote. We are assured by the advocates of the measure that they do not wish to take up time by discussing it. They are aware of only two Senators who desire speak at length. That will give them ample time and leave something more for others who may want merely to explain their vote. I propose myself, with such an arrangement, not to say a word but to allow the bill to pass, though I should like to speak to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I object, and give notice that immediately on the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Delaware to-morrow I will move to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire to give notice, so far as I can express the wishes of the friends of this bill, that I am willing to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from California. I am disposed to agree that we take the vote at five o'clock to-morrow on this bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not vote now?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not want to say anything on the bill, and do not care whether the bill passes or not. I do not think there is much good or harm to be accomplished by its passage. But I am opposed to any such arrangement as that which is suggested.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. FERRY. And I will show my disposition to accept it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I give notice that I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to-morrow morning, after the morning business, to submit some remarks to the extent of about twenty minutes on an amendment to the river and harbor bill, of which I gave notice the other day.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and sixteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 27, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. DOMER, D. D., St. Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

BRANCH MINTS.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which, under the law, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 10,000 extra copies of the House Miscellaneous Document No 54, embracing arguments made before and testimony taken by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures upon the subject of the establishment of branch mints in the United States, be printed for distribution.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to this House all papers relative to the convention for establishing an international bureau of weights and measures which was ratified by the Senate.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour, which begins at eleven minutes past eleven o'clock a. m. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, commencing with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures are in order.

SALE OF UNITED STATES SECURITIES.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4994) to regulate the sale of United States securities; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I ask that the bill may be read at length.

The bill was read at length, and was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PERMANENT SINKING FUND.

Mr. WOOD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4995) to establish a permanent sinking fund; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WOOD. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read at length, and was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TITLES IN UNPATENTED LANDS.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4996) to invest the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear all titles and claims of titles in the unpatented lands in the southwest fractional quarter of section 10, township 39 north, range 14 east of the third principal meridian, in the city of Chicago, county of Cook, and State of Illinois, and to invest the proper claimant or claimants of said lands with the legal title thereof by the decree of said court; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY D. DOYLE.

Mr. MAISH (by request of Mr. STENGER) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4997) granting a pension to Henry D. Doyle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEAD-STONES OVER SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Mr. WALSH introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 185) authorizing the Quartermaster-General to erect head-stones over the graves of deceased Union soldiers interred in private cemeteries or burial places; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WEST POINT COMMERCIAL COMPANY OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. TUCKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4998) to authorize the West Point Commercial Company of Virginia to do business in foreign countries; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM MILLER.

Mr. TUCKER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4999) for the relief of William Miller, of Winchester, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SECURING HOMESTEADS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5000) to secure the homestead under the bankrupt laws and prevent frauds in the obtaining of a discharge in bankruptcy, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF MARTIN ROBERTS.

Mr. WADDELL (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5001) for the relief of the children and heirs of Martin Roberts, a revolutionary soldier of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. SCALES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5002) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Warm Spring, Umatilla, Chippewa, Ute, and certain other tribes of Indians of the United States, for the extinguishment of their title to the lands occupied by them and for their removal to and consolidation upon certain other reservations established by law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4233 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARTRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5003) to amend section 4233 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WAGON-ROAD FROM NIOBRARA RIVER TO VIRGINIA CITY.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution: which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish this House with a copy of Colonel Sawyer's report as superintendent and disbursing officer of Government expedition to construct a wagon-road from Niobrara River to Virginia City, Montana, in 1865.

OBSERVANCE OF DECORATION DAY.

Mr. BANNING. I rise to a privileged question. I move to suspend the rules for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the 30th day of May is generally observed and reverenced throughout the country as the day upon which the graves of dead heroes of the late war are decorated: Therefore,

Resolved, As a mark of respect to the memory of the illustrious dead, that when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the 29th instant, it be to meet again on Friday, the 31st instant.

The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am directed by the select committee charged with the consideration of the law relating to the election of President and Vice-President to report a bill to amend sundry provisions of chapter 1, title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to presidential elections, and to provide for regulating the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The bill (H. R. No. 5046) was read a first and second time.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I move that this bill be printed and recommitted, and I give notice that I will call it up for consideration and disposition on Thursday, the 6th day of June.

Mr. HALE. Let it be understood that this is recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. This committee has leave to report at any time.

The motion of Mr. SOUTHARD was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

RECONSIDERATION OF REFERENCES.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to reconsider the reference of all matters referred to committees this morning; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOUSE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Claims:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to cause to be prepared an alphabetical list of private claims which have been before the House of Representatives, from the commencement of the Thirty-first Congress to the close of the Forty-fifth Congress, inclusive, with the proceedings of the House of Representatives and Senate thereon, showing the names of the claimants; the nature or object of each claim; at what session and in what manner it was brought before the House; to what committee it was referred; the nature of the report and the number of the report, if printed, and, if not, the date of the report; the number of the bills, distinguishing between the Senate and House bills; the manner in which the claim was disposed of in the House and, in cases where it passed both Houses, the date of the act of Congress; the whole to be compiled from the Journals of the House of Representatives and by reference, when necessary, to the Journals of the Senate, the reports of the committees, the bills of the two Houses, and the laws of the United States. And that the Clerk be authorized to employ Rolfe S. Saunders, with a compensation not exceeding the sum now paid the engrossing clerks of this House, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and that the Clerk of the House furnish such aid by the clerks in his office as may not be inconsistent with the discharge of their ordinary duties.

CLAIMS ARISING UPON INDIAN TREATIES.

Mr. THROCKMORTON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 5047) to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to all claims growing out of treaties between the United States and Indian tribes and the laws pertaining thereto; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

JUDICIAL POWERS OF CONSULS.

On motion of Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1272) to amend section 4127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the judicial power and functions of consuls, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

MEXICAN AWARD BILL.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I will move to take up the Mexican award bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will of course remember that the House has control of its own business.

Mr. WILSON. I will at any rate make the effort to bring up that bill.

EMILY HUGHES.

On motion of Mr. TURNER, the bill (S. No. 1206) granting a pension to Emily Hughes, alias Berch, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

PRESTON BYRGE.

Mr. THORNBURGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5048) to place on the pension-roll the name of Preston Byrge, private Company I, Seventh Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, respectively, be requested to inform this House of the number of male employés in their respective Departments serving in this city, with a list of persons holding positions in their respective Departments who were honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM C. HEACOCK.

Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 186) for the relief of William C. Heacock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REAR-ADMIRAL DAHLGREN'S ESTATE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5049) authorizing the settlement of the claims of the estate of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Dahlgren; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying report, recommitted.

MRS. MARY O'LOUGHLIN.

On motion of Mr. ELLSWORTH, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2499) for the relief of Mrs. Mary O'Loughlin was taken from the table of the House and recommitted to the Committee of Claims, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to go on with the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending proposition.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move, Mr. Speaker, to limit all debate on the pending amendment in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to one hour.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to make it thirty minutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I made it an hour to accommodate all sides, but if the disposition of the House is to limit debate to thirty minutes I am very willing to agree to it. I modify my motion so as to move that all debate on the pending amendment in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I hope we will have at least an hour.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not amendable, as the gentleman moves to suspend the rules for the purpose of closing debate.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 150, noes 30.

So (more than two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to, and it was ordered that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending amendment be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in committee on the Army appropriation bill and the Clerk will read the pending amendment moved by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] on which the House has ordered all debate shall be limited to thirty minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1879, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

That the Secretary of War shall make such details of officers of the Army as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian branch of the War Department.

That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector-General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes. And such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war. And the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof is concerned.

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army who when on such duty shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and as far as practicable at the same time provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspectors of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent, and subagent in the Office of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, not including the clerks of the Indian Bureau, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of January, 1879, on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus superseded.

The annuities to be paid to any Indians and the supplies to be furnished and issued to them shall be paid and issued through the Quartermaster's Department and the Subsistence department of the Army, under such regulations and directions as the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe. That all moneys appropriated during the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress in the bill known as the Indian appropriation bill, or so much thereof as shall remain unexpended on the 1st day of January, 1879, shall after that time be disbursed in accordance with the provisions of this section, and that all laws and clauses of laws which may come in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask unanimous consent to print some remarks on the pending amendment, and on the Army appropriation bill generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. It is suggested to me to make a general motion in that regard that all gentlemen who wish to print any remarks on the Army appropriation bill shall have leave to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, gentlemen who desire to print remarks on the pending amendment or on the Army appropriation bill generally will be granted leave to do so, and can file their remarks, for printing in the RECORD as part of the debates, with the reporters.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

Mr. NEAL and Mr. JACOBS gave notice under the order just made they would submit some remarks to be printed as portions of the debates. [See Appendix.]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I was not here during the previous discussion upon this amendment. I do not know what reasons have been assigned for this proposed transfer of the management of Indian affairs from the civil to the military department of the Government. I am prepared with no argument. But I wish briefly and simply to state that it would require grave reasons—perhaps they have been offered, I know not—to induce me take this step in reference to this most important measure of public administration. In the beginning of the Government, under the Federal Constitution, Washington instituted the policy of confiding the administration of affairs relating to the Indian tribes to the civil rather than the military authority. They so remained under the control of the civil department for half a century, I think. The policy so long as adhered to was attended with most beneficial results. It was afterward changed for a while, but returned to again. The military policy did not work well. Why should we not then adhere to that policy which did work so well so long? Moreover, the chief men and the delegations of all the civilized tribes or nations now in this city have entered their earnest protest against this transfer. This protest it was my honor, as well as pleasure, to present to this House several weeks ago. If there was nothing else but this unanimous protest of these delegations that would be sufficient to cause me to vote against the transfer. Sir, all just governments, as well as all wise governments, are founded upon the consent of the governed.

Our whole system of American Government, grand as it is and grander as I hope it may become, rests upon the principle of local self-government. Why should we undertake the government of the Indian tribes upon any other principle? Some of these nations under Washington's policy are rising in civilization. With them military rule is the announcement of war. As with all of us, they want peace and prosperity. They desire to come in contact with this Government through its civil Departments. If you put them under the Military Department they apprehend, as I learn from them, that peace will not be the result.

In my judgment the management of Indian affairs will cost more under the Military Department than under the civil. At the best, the change back will be but another experiment. We tried it once and it did not work well. I say let well enough alone. Under the system hitherto we have had peace with the Indians except where they have come in contact with the military, and there we have ever had war and, I apprehend, will continue to have it.

I have said all I intend to say. I think what is now proposed is a bad step, an unwise step, and may prove to be an unfortunate step. Let well enough alone is my advice to the House in reference to this subject as well as all others.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, two things forcibly strike every observer of the history of the American Government. First, the high conception of general principles and admirable symmetry of proportions exhibited by the founders of our Government; second, the imperfect material, incongruous character, and defective machinery of much of the structure reared on that foundation. The old Colonies were singularly fortunate in possessing representatives who were at once gentlemen of culture and capacity and who had the rare fortune of possessing in no small degree the public confidence. They clearly defined and outlined the three departments of government, legislative, executive, and judicial. In monarchies the ruler was the supreme fountain of law and justice. Parliamentary bodies, when evolved from the chaos of protests and petitions, were mere checks on the abuses of his power. Ours is a Government of the people; the written Constitution a charter of their reserved rights. Under it the legislative function is supreme. The executive branch merely executes law. The judicial administers law and determines the rights and duties of all under it. In maintaining the distinct boundaries of those powers lies the vigor and genius of the American Government.

Upon this theoretical structure grew our Government of fact. We copied British names, and, while denouncing European ideas, borrowed from them. Conflicting local interests, the jealousies of small States, different phases of society and civilization, and the natural difficulty of reconciling our almost faultless theory with defective administration were all encountered. Take it all in all, the founders and those who followed them did about as well as could be expected.

The natural tendency of all governments is to grow, and our executive has been no exception to this rule. First we had the Exchequer, borrowing the British name, which finally crystallized and settled into the Treasury Department. At first, beside this Exchequer or Treasury Department, we had the War Department, which then included the Navy, the Post-Office Department, which was a very inconsiderable affair, and a Foreign Department which grew into a Home and Foreign Department which was called the State Department. Although there is not the least analogy the Secretary of State has been styled the premier. In the course of time the War Department split into two, and we had the War and Navy Departments. Then we got the Attorney-General. He was merely a legal adviser, however, for the Department of Justice was only created in the past few years, many members on this floor participating in the work. The Interior Department was created by act of Congress in 1849, and I say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] that from the foundation of the Government up to that time the Indian Bureau was in the War Office.

The precise functions and boundaries of the new Department were not very clearly defined. An amusing story is told of its organization, which will perhaps illustrate the matter better than anything I could say:

Hon. Thomas Ewing, sr., of Ohio, was first appointed Secretary. Daniel Webster was then Secretary of State. Mr. Ewing called on Mr. Webster, at the old State Department, to arrange the matter, as I have been informed.

"Mr. Secretary,"

Said Mr. Ewing,

"you are aware I have been appointed Secretary of the Interior, and I have called to consult with you as to the branches of business to be embraced in the new Department."

"Ah, certainly, certainly,"

Said Mr. Webster.

"I was thinking, Mr. Secretary."

Resumed Mr. Ewing,

"that all connected with the public lands, being purely an internal matter of administration, would necessarily belong to the new Department."

"Yes, certainly; I think so,"

Was the response.

"And I was thinking, Mr. Webster, that all pertaining to the census, or statistics, would fall within the jurisdiction of the new Department."

"Yes, yes; I believe so, I think so."

"And I was thinking, Mr. Secretary, that all connected with education and agriculture, being purely local, domestic matters, would fall in its jurisdiction."

"Yes."

"And I was thinking, Mr. Secretary, that all connected with patents, being purely a domestic matter among the people, would belong to it."

"Ah!"

"And I was thinking, Mr. Secretary, that all connected with the payment of pensions, being purely a matter of internal administration, would belong to it."

"U—m!"

"And I was thinking, Mr. Secretary, that the administration of Indian affairs, as it concerned a people in the Interior, would of course belong to the Interior Department."

"Mr. Ewing,"

Said the sage of Marshfield, fixing his eye on the Ohio statesman,

"why do you not take it all?"

They say he is a good judge who wishes to increase his own jurisdiction, and, if we had always possessed as able Secretaries of the Interior as the gentleman from Ohio we might have had less occasion to regret the great mass of incongruous material that has grown up in the Interior Department. In all candor and experience there never was any reason why the Indian Office and the Pension Office should have been taken from the War Office. The necessary records for the Pension Office are at the Surgeon General's; nor can we see a sufficient reason why a soldier who is discharged for wounds or disability should cease to be paid under the War Office and be transferred to the Interior Department. But if that is true of the Pension Office, it is much more true of the Indian Office. Ever since the transfer was made there has been a conflict or divided jurisdiction. Into the same regions of country we send supplies by two sets of contractors and by two sets of freight agents. Each accuses the other of dishonest practices, and, even if both spoke falsely, the wounds on the public reputation are a calamity. Certainly the duplicated machinery is a waste.

I do not agree with many gentlemen here that Army officers are more honest than other men. If I believed it I would want all our children educated at West Point. There may be something, however, in the fact that an Army officer has a life position, and, even if no more honest, might hesitate more about risking his place. While I favor the transfer of the Indian Bureau back to the War Department as the proper place, I do not agree with those who would give the entire administration of Indian matters to Army officers. These are two very different things. In the first place, it would be impossible to take so many officers from the Army without detriment to the service. I must confess, also, to an innate dislike to conferring the administration of civil affairs to the Army. As Indian management is partly of a civil and partly of a military character there could be no impropriety in permitting the management of the wild tribes to go into the hands of such officers as could be spared. It ought to be the privilege of the Secretary of War to use officers in such cases, but I shall offer an amendment giving him the privilege, but not making it obligatory. I think it entirely proper that an officer of rank, retired or otherwise, should be placed at the head of the Indian Bureau, but even that is not necessary. When the Indian Office was in the War Office before, such civilians as Thomas Hartley Crawford were Commissioners of Indian Affairs.

Some worthy gentlemen may oppose the transfer who have tears to shed over the downfall of the "Quaker policy." I have a very great respect for the Quakers and their history, from the days of William Penn down, but the warlike nomad of the prairies as a Quaker is not a success. The number of them actually converted to that faith is, I am afraid, frightfully small. Neither am I prepared to admit that the Quakers are more honest than the Presbyterians, or Methodists, or Catholics. Establish the fact that they are, and I would like to encourage the growth of that religion. And if I think the Quaker policy is something not necessary to weep over, neither do I approve of giving any branch of the civil Government to any one church or to any set of churches. One thing we have to guard against is established churches, or churches with political power. To allow churches to name officers of government is therefore obnoxious to the genius of the American Government. The only parallel case I ever heard of occurred in the time of Oliver Cromwell when Praise-God Barebone's parliament resolved that no man should hold office who did not possess veritable godliness.

When we tempt a clergyman to become an Indian agent, we are apt to get the most selfish and least conscientious man in that denomination. His inducement to take it may be clerical bronchitis or the certainty of fifteen hundred a year. When we permit a religious denomination to name even a layman on account of his extreme piety, we run a risk of getting what Macaulay speaks of, a man who sings psalms through his nose and calls his children Mahal, Shalal, Bashhaz. Whatever the effects of such a system on civil administrations, its effect on the church cannot be good.

We talk of our Indian policy. We never had an Indian policy. Our dealings with the Indians have been a chapter of accidents, wretched wars, and bad faith. We made treaties with them when they were strong, and broke them when they were weak. To gain some temporary advantage we made them promises which we might have known when we made them we would be unable to keep. I hope to see the day, sir, when an act of bad faith to any one will never be permitted to tarnish American legislation.

There is no reason for assuming that the transfer of the Indian Office to the War Office is a policy of extermination. Without being invidious to others I know of no gentleman I esteem so highly as I do our honorable Secretary of War. A man of invincible integrity, he adorns capacity of a very high order with the simple unpretensious style of an American statesman. Does any one fear for its administration in his hands. The duties are twofold; first, to so manage the affairs of those people as to avoid all war, disturbance, or lawlessness on the frontier; second, to take care of the Indians and lift them to the standard of American civilization as fast as we can. No task is more difficult. It took our ancestors many generations to attain the position of which we boast. The visionary who thinks he can convert a nomad of the plains into a civilized American man by an act of Congress is unfit to grapple with the subject. Neither can we permit those to manage Indian affairs who wish to profit by the destruction of those people. Let us be cautious how we listen to the suggestions of their enemies. Of whatever errors the War Office may be guilty in Indian management, I am sure that they will never put arms or ammunition in the hands of Indians whom they may have to fight.

This is another reason for this transfer. By putting this bureau back in the War Office we simplify government. Our government machinery expands like a balloon. Rooms grow into bureaus and bureaus expand into departments. The Bureau of Agriculture escaped from the Interior Department, and struggled across the canal, and has got a greenhouse of its own and become a department and wants to get in the Cabinet. I expect one of these days to hear of the department of petroleum as an offset to the department of rutu-bagas or a department of iron and steel, or to hear that a department of fisheries has swam into the pool at the back of the White House; so rapidly does this machinery grow. With such a ponderous dignity do all these officials confront us; so begirt are they with imposing ceremony and the panoply of place, that I expect before I die to see the colored boy who cleans spittoons in the Treasury Department, for lack of a better reception-room, take refuge in the lumber room and swinging back on his shoe-blacking box in an official attitude talk civil-service reform and receive by "card alone."

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to occupy but a single moment.

When this matter was before the House heretofore we gave it elaborate discussion. I believe it was clearly demonstrated at that time that this transfer would not be economical, would not be humane, would not be judicious, would not be right. There are Indians in New York State that do not want this military power over them. The Indians in the Indian Territory desire their autonomy; they desire, as the gentleman from Georgia well said, to enjoy local self-government when they are now rising into civilization.

Without going over in detail matters which have already been elaborately discussed in previous Congresses, I beg to say now, once and forever, that the gentlemen who take the responsibility of making this transfer will live to repent it, not merely on account of the extravagance that will ensue, but on account of the wrong that will be done to an innocent race of people who ought to have our utmost care and vigilance in every regard in place of being put under military control.

Mr. BANNING. At one time the management of Indian affairs was in and under the control of the War Department. While there, Army officers acted as superintendents and agents. The management was satisfactory to the Indians, and highly advantageous to the Government, because it was economical. In 1848, the last year that Indian affairs were under the War Department, the total appropriation for the maintenance, support, and annuities of the Indians was $874,478. In 1849 the management of the Indians was transferred to the Interior Department. In the limited time allowed me I cannot give the history of the management since this transfer, nor is it necessary to do so. Every one who knows anything about the present system must be aware that it is of the very worst character. The record of last Congress is full of the evidences of the corruption and mismanagement of Indian agents, of the starvation and dissatisfaction of the Indians, and of Indian wars resulting therefrom. The appropriations for the Indian Bureau for the fiscal year 1875–'76 were $7,063,201.96, being $6,188,723.96 more than those for 1848, the last year it was under the War Department. So we find the War Department in 1848 managed the Indians with less than $1,000,000, while the Interior Department requires more than six millions to manage them.

I submit herewith a statement of the Inspector-General of the Army upon this subject which establishes all and more than I have said on this subject:

The following is an exhibit of the appropriations for the Indian Department for the current fiscal year, as compared with those made for the same purposes in 1848, just before the bureau was transferred to the Interior Department, namely:

APPROPRIATIONS FOR 1875–'76.

For contingent expenses and for fulfilling treaty stipulations	$6,851,681 96
Pay of officers and clerks in Commissioner's Office	75,520 00
Pay of superintendents, inspectors, agents, and their clerks	135,000 00
Total appropriation in 1875–'76	7,063,201 96
The appropriations for the same purposes in 1848 were:
For contingent expenses, &c	$843,100 00
Officers, &c., in Commissioner's Office	18,700 00
Superintendents, agents, &c	12,678 00
Total appropriation in 1848	874,478 00
Difference	6,188,723 96

The disbursement of the large appropriations that have been made for several years past, however carefully guarded by superior authorities, must necessarily have furnished a prolific source for frauds when intrusted to dishonest men; and as the Commissioner himself admits that his agents have proved themselves by no means above suspicion, may it not be reasonably conjectured that a large percentage of this money went into their pockets?

The evidence herein adduced renders an admission of the following logical sequences imperative, namely:

First. The conduct of Indian affairs under civil administration, after a practical experiment of twenty-seven years, has proved fraudulent in the extreme, immensely expensive, and unsatisfactory to the Indians, provoking them to hostilities that have cost the lives of hundreds of border citizens and the destruction of their property.

Second. Whereas the management of this branch of the public service while controlled by the War Department was eminently judicious, firm, and economical, and in every respect accorded with the Indians' sense of just and humane treatment.

Third. If this compendium be correct, why not go back to a system so conducive to peace and so certain to avert the evils that will in the future, as they have in the past, inevitably follow the continuation of a faulty policy?

In conclusion, it is but an act of justice to remark that no one acquainted with the character of the gentlemen composing the Indian commission (who perform their duties gratuitously) entertains a doubt that they have labored zealously and efficiently in reforming abuses, and their efforts have unquestionably contributed largely to that end; but as their visits to the agencies have necessarily been at wide intervals it could not be expected that they would be able to exercise much control over the operations of agents during their absence.

Should the transfer of the bureau be consummated, Army officers would undoubtedly rejoice in having the assistance of such men and would have no objection to their supervising purchases and issues or verifying accounts.

It is believed by many that the restoration of the Pension Bureau to the War and Navy Departments, from which it was taken in 1849, would conduce greatly to economy.

The military history of every soldier who served in wars for which pensions are given is contained in the records of the Adjutant-General's and the Surgeon-General's offices; and before any pension can be granted these records have to be searched to ascertain whether the applicant comes within the requirements of the law. As this constitutes a large item of the labor connected with the issuing of pensions, why not return the entire management of the bureau back to where it was in 1849? The ponderous machinery of this bureau, under the present working, may be inferred from the fact that in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, in addition to the officers, there are three hundred and thirty-nine clerks and copyists, thirteen messengers, ten laborers, four watchmen, one engineer and one assistant, and one skilled mechanic, the aggregate of whose salaries is $490,960.

Very many of the retired Army officers, although too much disabled or too infirm for the active military service, are fully competent to take the direction of all the work now devolving upon pension agents.

Under their supervision the duties of the office would be faithfully and honestly discharged, and without additional compensation, unless it should be deemed expedient to allow them fuel and quarters.

In addition to this authority I will add that General Sheridan testified before the Military Committee of the last House that the saving in the expenditures for the Army which would result from the control by the War Department of the Indians would ultimately be over $3,500,000 per annum.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, it is sought here to tack upon an appropriation bill an amendment of the very greatest importance, which has no relation to the objects and purposes of the appropriation bill itself. To my mind the bill upon which it is sought to ingraft this amendment is objectionable in that it seeks to reduce the Army and to reorganize it; and whether it is contemplated by this amendment to make it more palatable and secure to it greater strength in this House or not, I know not, but if there were no other reason I would oppose this amendment for that. But, sir, I have not yet heard from any source any reason which satisfies me that it is either wise or judicious to undertake to clothe the Army with civil administration beyond that which is necessary to operate the Army itself. Every argument that has been adduced in this House or elsewhere in support of this transfer would justify the transfer of every bureau almost of the civil departments of the Government to the military department. It would annihilate the Interior Department. It would transfer the Pension Bureau; it would transfer the Land Office, and so on all the way through. It is maintained here that by this transfer we shall secure to the administration of the Indian department greater economy and greater honesty; that Army officers are, by reason of their relations to the Federal Government, by reason of a commission which they bear, necessarily more honest and economical in the administration of those matters intrusted to them than others. If that be so, it is a reason why they ought to administer the Pension Bureau, instead of civilians.

Why not put one in charge of the Pension Bureau? It will save the salary now paid the Commissioner of Pensions. Then Army officers might take charge of the pension agencies throughout the country. It would save the large sum paid for services of the present incumbents.

Why not also embrace the General Land Office in this scheme? It will enable you to get rid of the salary now paid the accomplished gentleman and efficient officer in charge of that bureau. There are about two hundred registers and receivers. Why not economize here by assigning Army officers to these duties?

If the application of the principle is good for one Department, it is good for all. Corruption is liable to creep into all the Departments, except of course the War Department. In fact, all indiscriminately are said by our democratic friends to be corrupt. Why not purify them by turning them over to the War Department? The Indian Bureau may be worse than the rest, but still, if our democratic friends are correct, the difference is one of degree merely.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the present Secretary of the Interior has weeded the Indian Office very largely of its abuses. He has exerted his great ability to purify his Department and elevate the civil service. Then why strike at his Department? Is this a blow aimed at him? My colleague [Mr. PHILLIPS] speaks in high praise of the Secretary of War. If I knew how, I would go him one better in that respect, for the Secretary of War is worthy of the highest possible commendation.

But this is a question of governmental policy, and rises above our personal likes and dislikes. It will not do, in a matter of this kind, to act merely to build up or strike down some officer.

But, sir, I have no confidence that in the end this measure will be found economical. The training of the soldier has taught him to maintain inviolate his personal honor, but I have yet to learn that he is an economist. As a rule, he is big-hearted, whole-souled, magnanimous, generous, liberal, extravagant; he despises the littleness of the Jew and the parsimony of that class of business men commonly known as close-fisted; he has no sympathy with anything of the sort. An examination, I think, will show that, as compared with civil officers, he has been accustomed to pay extravagant prices. Nor is he apt to be niggardly in regard to supplies. I call to mind an illustration: an Army officer, the soul of honor, humane, and noble, has charge of a certain tribe of Indians. That tribe do not suffer for the want of supplies; on the contrary, they have a surfeit, and have been able to smuggle from their surplus to a neighboring tribe a hundred barrels of flour. Such is my information from what I deem a reliable source. I suppose the kind-hearted officer is unconscious that he is fatting two tribes of Indians upon supplies distributed to one.

To the Indian, the presence of a soldier means force. Put him under the domination of the Army and you can manage him, but it will be by the bayonet. He is doing well enough. In the language of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] "let well enough alone." He is making some progress in civilization. He is peaceable wherever treated well. But you will find him as impatient of bayonet rule as you gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to have been.

It is possible that the change might bear some of the good fruit which the friends of this measure claim that it will certainly produce, but I do not believe it. At best it is but an experiment. And it does not seem to me that the facts, the circumstances, the interests of the Government, the welfare of the Indians, justify the adoption of a policy so doubtful and perilous.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] tells us what the bureau cost prior to 1849 when under the War Department, and then he tells us what enormous proportions it has now reached under the Interior Department, and evidently wants us to infer that the increase is due to corruption or mismanagement. That there has been more or less corruption and mismanagement may be admitted. It would be absurd to contend that the administration has been pure and perfect. But the increase is traceable chiefly to legislation. Just before the transfer, in 1849, from the War Department to the Interior Department, Congress provided for enormous expenditures for the Indian Office. The expenditure under that legislation was made under the Interior Department immediately after the transfer. This enormous excess of expenditure under the Interior Department immediately following the change is often referred to by the advocates of this measure. They ought to be fair enough to the House, to the Department, and to the country to state the case correctly. If I had the time I should like to refer to the legislation in detail bearing upon this increase of expenditure. If Congress by law compels a bureau to expend large sums of money, it is as ungenerous as it is unfair to call public attention to such expenditures as evidence of corruption and gross mismanagement.

Mr. HANNA. The proposed amendment contemplates that the entire and absolute administration of our Indian affairs shall be under military rule. The language is broad, sweeping, and comprehensive. We are not left in doubt as to the object and purpose of the friends of the measure. I object to the abandonment of the peace policy. We cannot afford to take this backward step. We may not without just cause for censure thus array ourselves against the well-settled conviction of our enlightened Christian civilization. The proposed change is and would be regarded not only by the Indian but also by the better element of society as a declaration of war. You thereby say to the Indian: henceforth the methods and appliances of peace, of education, of Christianity, of American civilization are to be abandoned and in lieu thereof the inexorable code of war is to intervene. It is a mistake which we cannot afford to make. Our better natures revolt at the idea and we should pause and consider well the consequences. He who cannot keep pace with the progress of our Christian civilization should not attempt to block the way by a resort to the law of force.

I further object to the proposed amendment upon the ground of its anti-republican features. We are now and have been for many years engaged at national expense in educating a class of men for a particular pursuit. West Point has been fostered by the Government for a special and particular purpose. As Americans we feel a just pride in the success of that institution. The primary object was and is to educate men for the Army and the pursuit of arms. It certainly never was the intention of the founders of the Republic or of that institution that it should be diverted from the object of its creation and become the nursery of a class to be known as the office-holding class. The proposed amendment in effect says to the country that a graduate of West Point is to be preferred over all others for official position. It is a long and dangerous stride in the direction of creating and preferring by law a class to be known as "we of the office-holders," and the passport which is to insure admission to this favored class is a diploma furnished at West Point. It is said that the number of graduates are in excess of the demands of the Army, and hence first one bureau and then another must be wrenched from the civil departments of the Government and attached to the War Department, to the end that it may be managed and officered by a special class who must be provided for upon the theory that they are better than all others. This is called civil-service reform. I denounce it as anti-republican, as the most pernicious form of class legislation. I trust the time may never come in this Republic when at public expense we must educate a class for the especial purpose of filling the various civil offices within the gift of the Government, and that such class must be preferred to the exclusion of worth and merit wherever found in the mass.

Sir, the hope, the future strength and glory of the Republic, are the youth of the field and shop, who, knowing that according to the genius of our institutions the highest positions are within the reach of earnest effort and laudable ambition, enter the race for the coveted prize. Shall we attempt to fetter and dwarf this spirit by class legislation? Should you pass this amendment, then next the Pension Bureau will be demanded upon the ground that you desire to further utilize this special class. Inaugurate this anti-republican scheme and you will have from time to time encroachments upon the various civil Departments of the Government. We owe it to ourselves and to our posterity to guard with vigilance the republican simplicity of our institutions and to at all times maintain the theory that this is "a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people," and that every civil office is within the reach of the humblest boy in the land.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] at the close of his remarks, stated that if the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department is accomplished those who voted for it would live to regret it. If the gentleman was conversant with the woes and sufferings that have befallen the Indians on account of the weakness and imbecility of their management during the last ten years, he would regret that he had ever advocated the maintenance of the Indian Bureau as a means for their government. Mr. Chairman, independent of any question of economy and simply as a matter of humanity and justice to the Indian and the settler upon the frontier, I claim that the present management should cease and a system be substituted which while it would be humane would at the same time be strong and powerful. There should be no conflict of authority. The moral effect of the presence of the Army should not be lost in the dishonesty and feebleness manifested in the government of the Indian agent. The Army under its present organization furnishes all the elements of force and morality necessary for the just and proper government of these wards of the nation. Though living upon an Indian border and conversant with the cruel and treacherous character of the Indian I have no other feeling than that of kindness toward him, nor wishes other than for his welfare.

I have often wondered if the Indians of Cooper and other writers of fiction ever existed. If they did, they are now extinct. I grant the possibility of their once existing, but I readily account for their disappearance or transformation into human fiends by the rapacity, treachery, neglectfulness, and heartless frauds which are linked all through the intercourse of the Government with them through its representative, the Indian Bureau, and the swarm of licentious agents sent out from it to cheat and rob them under the mantle of some Christian denomination. The present system is all wrong. It is built upon a wrong basis. The theory of its advocates is that the Indians are thirsting for Sunday-schools, plows, missionaries, instruction in the art of farming, and the enjoyment of a civilized government. They mourn because they come not. Sir, if these mistaken humanitarians would but read the reports of the agents themselves they would learn how erroneous is this notion of Indian character. In Colorado we have a tribe of Indians who for sixteen years have been at perfect peace with the whites. They have a magnificent reservation of twelve million acres. For sixteen years appropriations have been made annually for schools, blacksmiths, farmers, teachers, and all kinds of implements and utensils to aid in their advancement; and their affairs have been administered by the most approved Christian agents. With what results? There are about three thousand Indians occupying this twelve million acres; over four thousand acres of land to every buck, squaw, and papoose in the tribe, and yet out of it all during the year 1877 just twenty-two acres were tilled by Indians, a few bushels of vegetables raised, and twenty rods of fencing built. Says Mr. Wheeler, one of the agents upon their reservation, in his last annual report, (page 43, Report of Commissioner of Indian Affairs:)

> The Ute considers it a disgrace to labor and ridicules the very idea of his ever being required to do anything of the kind. The child who has been trained under the influence of civilization and taught to regard labor as an honorable pursuit is seldom or never proof against the sneers and taunts of his Indian associates, and is pretty sure to yield to the common prejudice, and before arriving at manhood exhibits as strong an aversion to toil as the most ignorant of them.

To the same effect is the report of Mr. Weaver, another of the late agents, found on page 45 of the same document:

> Little can be said in relation to the civilization, missionary work, and industry of these bands. They regard any labor whatever with contempt, and their civilization and general education must be necessarily tedious, if with any success whatever, unless they can be taught to labor.

Their educational advancement is no more marked. The statistics furnished by the Indian Office show that these three thousand Indians have one school, and six scholars. The school was taught eight months and the largest average monthly attendance was five. This marvel of intellectual activity cost the Government the modest sum of $1,260, or $252 per annum for each Ute child taught.

I give these illustrations because they show the progress of the average Indian under about the best conditions attainable through the present system. Sir, the Government might pour money into these reservations through a mouth as big as that of the Mississippi to be dispensed under the present system, and the results would be no more cheering. The trouble is, the character of the Indian is not understood, and the system and implements for governing him are wholly foreign to his nature. He should be honestly and humanely dealt with. His rights should be respected. His better nature should be cultivated assiduously; but while this is being done, the power should be ever present to repress the brute instincts of his nature and to teach him that they must be held in subjection when to indulge in them would imperil the lives or property of the settlers. The present system cannot furnish the machinery or the men for this work. They despise the weakness of the rulers put over them. They sneer at and reject the instruments by which they are to be elevated. They find themselves cheated, betrayed, and the agent and his satellites growing rich on their plunder.

In the present system there is a divided allegiance for the Indian. The agent and the Army officer are in his vicinity. There is no cordiality between the two; on the contrary, the Army officer despises the peculation and littleness of the agent, and the agent fears the officer may retrench him in his plunder. There is no necessity for this dual system. The Army furnishes the practical methods and the character of men necessary for the proper government and civilization of the Indian. The officers are men of honor. Their good name is their talisman to respect. It is the one jewel treasured by them. Honesty would be at once brought to the administration of affairs under them. With the responsibility resting upon the War Department, a rigorous system to direct the intercourse of the soldier with the Indian would at once be adopted. The schools would be fostered; agriculture would meet with greater favor, a paternal and humane system for their government would be instituted, every treaty stipulation would be rigorously adhered to, and white men would be prohibited from infringing upon their rights. Sir, no man who has intelligently watched the operation of the present system can hesitate to favor the change.

The necessity for a strong government for the Indian is daily becoming more evident. Economy, safety, and humanity will soon require that the greater number of reservations be abolished and the Indians all be removed to a few within easy reach of supplies and accessible to all the influences which are needed for his elevation. This removal must inevitably take place. He cannot remain forever a barrier to the development of the vast interior of the continent. The pioneer must not be compelled to take his every step to the front in the sight of a murdered child and outraged wife and by the light of his burning roof-tree. There must be a gathering together of the tribes and the Military Department alone is capable of the task. I desire in this connection to call attention to a remarkable treatise upon this topic. On Tuesday last, in the city of Cincinnati, before the social science congress there assembled, General Pope delivered an address upon the subject of Indian government, which has arrested the attention of the country. It is so clear, so true, and withal so philosophical, that I do not hesitate to ask the Clerk to read it for the information of the House, and if my time expires before its reading is completed I desire that it may be published entire in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE INDIAN QUESTION.

Unlike the nations of Europe, who have owned possessions on this continent, we are the only people who have ever recognized Indian titles to land within our borders. The theory as well as practice of the Government has been to recognize this title, and to extinguish it for such portions of the land as we acquired by actual purchase. While this policy has, in theory, been eminently just and humane, its practical workings have entailed more suffering and wrong upon both races than would have attended or followed open conquest. How a condition of things so deplorable has been evolved from a policy so humane can best be determined by a short history of systems adopted and carried out under it.

To make this explanation clear, it will not be necessary to review the history of our colonial relations with the Indian nations further than to express the opinion, which examination will either confirm or disprove, that in the administration of a policy so humane as that of William Penn will be found the seeds of most of the shocking wrongs, both to Indians and whites, which have smirched the history of this country. I do not wish to be understood as in any manner opposing myself to the system of Penn as embodying a principle eminently just and humane in its purpose. It is possible that, if its details had been arranged and administered by pure and honest men, thoroughly familiar with Indian life and character, the history of our Indian relations might have been widely different. Unfortunately, however, while the theory has been the basis of all our dealings with Indians since, the pure and honest men, capable of doing the work and possessing the requisite qualifications, have been sadly wanting, and the results have been almost the exact opposite of what was hoped and no doubt intended. It will, however, be sufficient for the object I have in view to give a brief account of the systems adopted, with that theory as a basis, and the manner in which they have been administered.

EVILS OF THE TREATY SYSTEM.

The beginning of this century found us in possession of vast districts of country, at least one-half of which consisted of the most fertile lands in the world and the other half about equally divided between rich mineral and vast grazing districts. This whole region was practically in possession of numerous tribes of Indians, whose pursuits and habits of life varied as widely as they vary among the same number of white races. A policy of dealing with the Indians, based on that of Penn, was adopted; a policy which, with some not very important modifications, to be hereafter referred to, has been pursued by the Government to this day.

That policy is briefly as follows, namely:

Whenever the march of immigration began to press upon lands claimed or roved over by wild tribes of Indians, a treaty was made with the Indians which provided for the surrender of that portion of their lands which was immediately in demand, leaving to the Indian what remained. Treaties with Indians are made by the Government for one of three objects: first, to buy land; second, to buy peace; and third, and generally, to buy both. It is hardly necessary to say that of all modes of keeping the peace the most ineffectual is to buy it; and if this policy be extremely unwise when civilized nations engage in it, how much more impolitic when dealing with a savage people. The Indian's first idea is that you pay him because you fear him, and he acts accordingly. As every treaty involves large expenditures of money, it is of course a popular transaction and especially so when Indian agents are not perfectly honest. To the Indian agent of fifteen years ago the idea of Indian administration was a war with Indians every alternate day and a treaty on the intermediate days.

This, then, briefly, is the sort of treaty through which we have acquired from the Indian races one-half this continent, and through which we seem to intend to possess ourselves of the rest. By introducing the element of money, it has made the Indian an object of cupidity to the white man, and has placed on the low level of sharp trading the policy intended to be humane and worthy of a great government. That it demoralized the Indian by teaching him vices and indulgences of a novel kind, and prepared him to sell his lands for almost any price offered him, in order that he might enjoy them, will not, I think, be disputed. That it placed both whites and Indians in a condition in which they could not avoid constant broils and difficulties, is also clear, nor is it less plain that, in the long run, the Indian was sure to be worsted.

Often and again has the Indian, goaded by swindling and wrong, or maddened by drink, broken out against the whites indiscriminately, and committed those dreadful outrages at which the country has stood aghast, but I do not myself hesitate to say that, in my opinion, a large proportion of these outbreaks has been in the way of retaliation. With the great throng of emigrants still pressing westward with equal eagerness and in greater numbers every day, who can tell what is happening to the Indian? The Indian country is penetrated everywhere by the seekers for gold or for land; highways are made through it without his consent, and the game driven off or destroyed. No one will say, even if he can, what outrages are committed upon the Indian by irresponsible crowds of white men, the bummers of the real emigration, flocking into his country, but judging from what these same whites do to each other, the imagination must be highly inflamed to conceive what they would do and doubtless have done to the Indian. What the white man does to the Indian is never known. It is only what the Indian does to the white man which reaches the public.

Less than a century ago this system was applied to the great Indian nations which occupied the vast region between the Allegheny Mountains and the Mississippi River. Where are those nations now? What has become of the great tribes once famous in our history? The Delawares, the Miamies, the Wyandots, the Shawnees, the Sacs and Foxes, the Pottawatomies, the Kickapoos, and many others—where are they, those beneficiaries of a wise and humane policy? Only a few feeble, helpless, and hopeless fragments of these great Indian nations yet remain. Transferred, through scenes of violence and bloodshed, from one reservation to another, they have at last been established on small reservations in the Indian Territory and on the Upper Missouri—poor, forlorn dependents upon the insufficient charity of the Government and the forbearance of the imperious white settlers. There, let us hope, they may be left to die in peace, and their race and name to pass out of the history of the country and be comfortably forgotten by those who have suffered this wrong to be inflicted upon them.

A HISTORY FULL OF HORROR AND BLOODSHED.

What, also, has been the history of the white settlers, the pioneers of the great States of the West? It is a history full of horror and of bloodshed; of massacres of women and children, accompanied by horrid atrocities which the imagination refuses to contemplate; of tortures and final death to thousands of men guiltless of any wrong to the Indian, the victims of the lawless crowds of adventurers who precede the real settler, and whose acts of outrage were retaliated upon the innocent and helpless. A history so full of bloodshed and misery, both to Indian and white man, and involving such immense expense to the Government, cannot, even at this day, be read without amazement and indignation. This process of exterminating the Indian race by a nearly equal sacrifice of innocent white people has been rapid almost beyond belief, and furnishes a record of inhumanity to both races which will long remain a reproach to this country. Yet, by such a process has this Government, unconsciously to itself, become possessed of all the vast region between the Allegheny Mountains and the eastern border of the great plains, and to this process, unless it be arrested, will we be indebted for the acquisition of all that remains. I may pause here one moment to note the extraordinary fact that, although for a century we have been engaged in carrying on wars and making treaties with Indians almost continually, and that our history is full of horrid atrocities and massacres in which Indians were the offenders, and although we have stood aghast at these horrors so often that that attitude has become almost chronic, yet nowhere in any treaty with Indians do I know of a single protest against these practices, nor an intimation even that we object to a war in which the rules of civilized warfare are thus shockingly violated. Nor do I remember any official fact or word on the part of the Government directed against it. Knowing for all these years that such are customs of Indian warfare, and having permitted them to be continued up to this day without remonstrance so far as I know or have heard, it appears scarcely reasonable to permit ourselves to be so horrified at this late day as almost entirely to lose sympathy for the Indian. He knows no better and has been taught no better by those who shudder at his outrages, and it is very certain that the example of the whites with whom he has been brought into hostile relations has tended to confirm and not to cure these practices. But to proceed:

In the case of the Indians of the Gulf States—mainly the Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws and Cherokees—the details of dispossession and the treatment of the Indians were somewhat different, and in the results will be found important facts bearing upon the discussion of future methods. It does not appear that this change in details was dictated by any consideration of past experience or by any purpose to make the history of these Indians more humane than that of the tribes north of Tennessee, but rather to the fact that the Indians were within the limits of organized States which asserted and, to an extent, exercised jurisdiction over them. The demands for the Indian lands were far more extensive and urgent and the action of the State government seemed to force more complete and general dispossession than had been actually required before. An extensive region of wild lands west of the State of Arkansas was selected for the occupation of these tribes, and they were at once removed to it with more or less bloodshed and difficulty, but without undergoing the intermediate stages which had marked the retreat of the more northern tribes. The result is, that the tribes thus removed at once and in a body to this region, remote from settlements, and not possessed of mineral resources, have not lost, if they have not gained, in population, but remain substantially what they were. They were from the beginning partially civilized; that is, they lived in villages and cultivated the soil. They do so still and much in the same manner, and until recently have not been pressed upon by white emigration.

The movement upon their lands has, however, now begun, and must of necessity lead to the same results as are familiar to the experience of the northern Indians. Every proposition to build railroads (and some are already built) through the Indian Territory and for the establishment of a territorial government has but one object and leads to but one result, namely, the dispossession of the Indian and the occupation of his lands by white men. That this result can be reached by the same process without a reproduction in a greater or less degree of the broils, troubles, and strife characteristic of our Indian history is not to be believed. It is a certainty in the near future, and if we are to do anything to prevent another stain upon our history we must act vigorously and at once.

NO SYSTEMATIC EFFORT TO CIVILIZE OR CHRISTIANIZE THE INDIAN.

Up to a recent period no systematic nor official effort was made to civilize or Christianize the Indian. It is true that many of the religious denominations sent missionaries to the Indian tribes living on reservations, who, no doubt, did all in their power in this direction, but being without official status or aid they were unable to do the work to which many of them devoted themselves with rare sincerity and self-denial. Through the Indian agents greater or less effort was made, or seemed to be made, to teach the Indian in a rudimentary way how to support himself, but such an effort was neither systematic nor energetic, and little, if indeed anything, was accomplished that in any respect benefited the Indian. Within the past ten years, however, another class of Indian agents, largely selected by religious denominations, has replaced the agents of old times. In point of morals and character these later agents are far superior to their predecessors, and, perhaps with few exceptions, have addressed themselves in all sincerity to the work of civilizing the Indian. Unfortunately, they are men unacquainted with the Indians or Indian character, and are equally ignorant of the character and habits of the frontier whites, and therefore wholly incompetent to deal with either. Of the country and its capacities they know little or nothing, and, indeed, they are, in general, inexperienced in almost every kind of occupation to which the Indian can be induced to resort. They are not, as a rule, business men, and yet they are expected to manage large business affairs involving the actual existence of thousands of human beings. I know of no occupation requiring more thorough acquaintance with business methods, greater knowledge of men and power to influence and control them, than the supply, management, and control of Indian tribes. The man whose life has been devoted to religious duties as a clergyman cannot of necessity have had the training and experience to conduct large business operations carried on with business men sharp and unscrupulous, nor to be the best judge of those who can; nor can the duties of religious instructor and business manager, especially for large bodies of wild Indians, be combined without injury to both. The results, so far, have completely illustrated the incompatibility of such pursuits. The business of the Indians has been very inefficiently done, and badly as it has been done, it has been at the expense of his moral or industrial improvement. It is not too much to say that what we have gained in moral character by the recent changes in methods of selecting Indian agents has been gained at the expense of practical sense and business capacity.

Whether these opinions be accepted or not it is certain that the physical condition of the Indian is as bad if not worse to-day than I have ever known it. It is a fact so notorious as to require only the statement of it that the reservation Indians are insufficiently fed at all times and that for considerable periods during each year they are in a condition of want and suffering revolting to humanity. It is also true that in many cases the articles of food to be daily issued to them are specified in detail in the treaties, but only in part are furnished, and at times not furnished at all. In short, it is the fact that thousands of Indians placed on reservations by the actual use of superior force are slowly starved. By some persons these well-known facts are attributed to insufficiency of appropriations; by others to misuse of the money and bad administration; by still others to fraud on the part of those charged with the expenditures and issues or of their agents. There is no doubt some truth in all these explanations, but the Indian is the victim whatever be the cause, and to expect him slowly to starve and to see his wife and children suffer in like manner without losing patience and helping himself is to expect what no white man would think of submitting to or would be expected to submit to. The Indian sees around him herds of cattle, store-houses of agents and traders, numbers of persons living on money paid out of the appropriations made for his tribe, large amounts expended for schools and school-teachers, farms and farming implements, practical farmers, mechanics, and employés of various descriptions, while he himself is destitute of the very food necessary to keep body and soul together, abundance of which is guaranteed to him by solemn treaty. Why should he be content? He is sent out from time to time with his tribe to hunt, and on game to make up the deficiencies of food he ought to receive from his agent. But whatever game was once to be found is now remote from his agency and is already so scarce that it is impossible to depend upon it even for temporary support. All game which once furnished food for the Indian is rapidly disappearing, and the Indian must soon find some other means to live or confront absolute starvation. As the whites have deprived him of his means of subsistence for their own benefit, without supplying him with others, theirs should be the duty to see that he does not suffer thereby. There can be little said for the practical sense of people who, in view of this result, insist upon making the Indian support himself by becoming a day-laborer on a farm with the idea of making the whole Indian race an agricultural people. What would be thought of the same attempt upon the white people of this or any other country? The idea of such people seems to be that all Indians are alike, and that an Indian is the same wherever he is found.

I presume there cannot be found greater diversities in the white races on all these matters than actually exist among the Indians, and the attempt to make all white men exactly alike and to compel them to precisely the same pursuit is not more absurd, impracticable, and injurious to all interests than is the same attempt with Indians. The nomadic races might probably be occupied without overthrowing every habit and inclination of their lives, and without violent and abrupt change, in herding cattle, which they could drive from one pasture and water to another on the great plains. This pursuit would be more nearly in the direction of their usual habits than any farm labor, and it has the advantage that it might be successful, while the latter never can be. I have myself, with such restricted means as I can command from the sale of ponies captured or surrendered, been trying this experiment on a small scale with the Kiowas and Comanches, and so far it promises well.

The extent to which the Indians under charge of these Indian agents, performing the incompatible duties of business managers, religious instructors, and practical administrators, as well as makers and enforcers of laws and regulations, have been civilized or Christianized, I will not undertake to say. I only express the belief, founded on facts known to me, that the results are precisely what might have been expected from such measures so conducted. It may be safely said on this subject that none among the races of men are in a condition to profit much by lessons of kindness and charity taught by well-fed apostles while they themselves are suffering from want and hunger. I do not myself understand upon what theory the Indian is to be Christianized in this manner and under these circumstances, but I certainly hope that the measures pursued may lead to far more satisfactory results than I can bring myself to expect. The obligations entered into with the Indian are not observed, and whether the failure be due to the Indian agent, the Indian Bureau, or Congress, it is plain enough that the effect upon the Indian is not salutary.

RELATION OF THE ARMY TO THE INDIAN SYSTEM.

In order that the whole subject may be clearly understood, it seems necessary to explain the relation of the Army to the Indians and the Indian Bureau, and I will therefore state it as succinctly as possible. While the Indians remain on their reservations and are peaceful, the troops stationed near them have no jurisdiction whatever, and, consequently, no certain knowledge of their feelings and purposes, and no power to take any action, either of a precautionary or aggressive character. The Indians thus placed are frequently furnished with passes, signed by the Indian agent, permitting them to go almost anywhere or for any purpose except war. The first that is known by the military of Indian hostilities is a sudden report that they have begun a war a hundred miles or more distant from a military post, and have devastated settlements and killed people. By the time such information reaches the military commander the worst has been accomplished and the Indians have escaped from the scene of outrage, and in most cases have again rejoined their agencies. Nothing is left to the military except pursuit, and generally unavailing pursuit. Should the Indians succeed in regaining their reservations before they are overtaken they are safe from punishment, as the military cannot act against them at all unless they are beyond the limits of their reserved lands. In point of fact, the troops are kept near the agencies practically to protect the civil agent and his employés, and are without the slightest authority to interfere in any manner with whatever transactions may be carried on by them.

It is a most painful duty to be forced to witness suffering and privation day after day, and to see whole tribes of Indians so destitute that it makes the heart sick to witness it. The military authorities have not even the right to relieve the hungry and the destitute from the public stores in their charge, but whatever goes on, they must remain silent and on no account interfere with the transactions of the Indian agent, whatever he does or fails to do. It has often happened, and indeed is of frequent occurrence now, that urged by spectacles of suffering, which human nature could not contemplate without horror, the officers have exceeded their authority and laid themselves liable therefor, by issuing scanty supplies of food to the starving Indians from the public stores under their charge, * * * but even this interference is not lawful, and is only put up with without complaint because it in no manner touches the jurisdiction of the agent. In short, it appears to be the only function of the Army, stationed near the Indian agencies, to force the Indian to submit to suffering quietly and without disturbance, whether the necessity results from the deficiency of appropriations, bad management of the agent, or actual fraud. If the Indian, pressed by want, leaves his reservation, the troops are ordered to attack him, and he is treated as the common enemy of mankind. I need not say that such a position for the United States forces is the most painful that could be imposed upon civilized man, and it has nothing except the power occasionally to help the suffering to redeem it from utter detestation. Exactly what constitutes peace and what is a condition of war is not clearly defined, but before any force can be used against Indians, either to prevent or suppress hostilities, the Indian agent must ask it, unless, indeed, the Indian is beyond the limits of his reservation. It sometimes happens that the condition of affairs becomes so bad and so dangerous that the military commander is ordered to supersede the agent and perform his duties, but only for the moment, and as soon as the immediate danger is over the pressure again replaces the civil agent, who is reasonably sure to bring about the same state of affairs.

To the Army officer a state of peace with Indians is, of all things, the most desirable, and no man in all the country, East or West, would do more to avert an Indian war. To the Army, war with Indians means long and toilsome marches, with scanty supplies of food and clothing; it means exposure to the elements at all times and at all seasons; it means death, certain and cruel, if wounded or left; it means separation from wife and children and deprivation of everything that makes life desirable to civilized man. It means more than all this; it means harsh and unjust censure, whatever the result. If successful, it is a massacre of Indians; if unsuccessful, it is worthlessness or imbecility; and these judgments confront the Army in every newspaper, and in public speeches in Congress and elsewhere—judgment passed by men who are absolutely ignorant of the subject at all or by those who, knowing better, misrepresent for a purpose. For purposes which I will not discuss, there has been a continuous and apparently successful effort to make it appear that there is a conflict between the Indian Bureau and its agents and the Army serving on the frontier, the former being gently insinuated into the attitude of protectors of the Indians against the warfare which it is also insinuated that the Army is perpetually seeking to bring on. The object of this adroit but not overscrupulous undertaking is sufficiently obvious to those acquainted with the facts, but it should be denounced as an outrage upon the truth, and is contradicted by almost every page of Indian history. The administration of Indian agents and the encroachment of the whites are what generally lead to war with Indians, which the Army has nothing to do with beginning and which it only engages in in compliance with the orders of the Government, which are usually made on a demand from one or both of these sources. The Army is the victim and not the author of wars with Indians. Whether the opinions I express be accepted or rejected, the facts set forth in this paper cannot be successfully controverted. I assert this with perfect confidence, since the official records of my own office will abundantly justify me, and could and would have been embodied in this paper but for the limited space which of necessity can be devoted to any subject.

I do not propose in what remains to be said to lay down any detailed plan for improving our relations with the Indian tribes so as to avert a continuance of our melancholy history in that connection, but upon the facts set forth I intend simply to offer a few suggestions which appear to me to be calculated to obviate the principal evils which have become manifest and which threaten with absolute certainty to make our future history as regards Indians as bad as our past. Having deprived the Indian of all his usual means of subsistence, without supplying him with other means or teaching him other modes of life, and with no purpose except our own interests, it is, beyond question, our duty to shield him from any other suffering than that actually unavoidable in the process. We have the greater part of the Indian's lands; we are bound to see that he does not undergo physical suffering through his own ignorance or our superior "cuteness." I do not suppose that any Christian man will contest this proposition, and, relying upon its soundness, I proceed to make one suggestion for improving our treatment of the Indians:

THE RESERVATION SYSTEM THE BEST.

It is manifest that, in the progress of settlement of a country occupied by barbarous tribes of Indians and the gradual dispossession of the savage, the time always arrives when Indians and white settlers are brought into contact at so many points and with such conflicting interests that the security of both is jeopardized to such an extent as to require the interposition of some power stronger than either. It then becomes necessary for the safety of both to restrict the Indian to certain localities, where, protected and controlled for a time by force, partly subsisted by the Government, he can neither commit violence upon the whites nor be subjected to it from them. This necessity has created the "reservation system," to which many of the Indian tribes have been subjected already, and which is assuredly the future condition of all. * * * I suggest, therefore, that whenever an Indian tribe is in a condition to be placed on a reservation or is so placed now, it be removed to the rear and not to the front of the advancing emigration; to the vicinity of communities where no feeling against Indians exists or is exercised; where the law is equally enforced against all, and where provisions are plenty and cheap. The Indian placed in this position, and well cared for as far as his physical needs are involved, would be harmless and unharmed, and, so far as his tribe is concerned, wars and atrocities would cease. One after another of the Indian tribes, as necessity demanded, should be treated in like manner, and the first and most important result would be secured completely. There would be no need for a large quantity of land to be assigned to any tribe, since it is not proposed that the Indian shall continue to lead his wild life, but that he shall, as far as possible, assimilate himself to his white neighbor. It may be objected that such a system would involve large expense for purchase of land and for the transfer of the Indians to it. But whatever the expense, which certainly would not be so large as we now incur, it would be but a small fraction of the value of the lands we become possessed of, and probably would be actually less than we now pay for the same land in driblets. The great trouble in the first place lies in getting a tribe together to transfer to a reservation. The cost of getting the Indian to it, under proper management, is trifling in comparison with the expense of keeping him at remote points, where articles of actual necessity become through cost of transportation expensive luxuries. With the removal of every tribe comes also the removal of considerable military force to points where its cost also would be greatly decreased. In this manner one tribe of Indians after another would disappear from the frontier and the expensive military establishment of necessity kept up near them would also cease to exist.

The second suggestion I shall make relates to the civilization of the Indian and his conversion to Christianity. However the capacity of the Indian in this direction be determined from the scientific stand-point, it is certain and it is right that this people should deal with it from the sentimental point of view, and should make the earnest and honest effort to civilize him, whatever may be the result. Whatever theory, also, scientists may hold concerning the fitness or the unfitness of a race so distinct to partake and become a part of the civilization of the white race, it remains to be said that the Indian has not yet had the chance to test it practically. No man possessed of ordinary common sense would imagine that it was reasonable to expect that his children should become worthy men and women were he to place them in the surroundings to which we have forced the Indian, and subject them to such influences as afflict him every day of his life. The condition which I have described as essential to his own security from want and violence, and to that of the whites also, appears to me precisely the most favorable to civilize the Indian, and where we may, at least, make a hopeful attempt in this direction.

Having a good and careful business man to regulate his business affairs so that he shall not suffer, I suggest that through the agency of teachers, both religious and secular, an earnest and consistent effort be made to instruct the Indian in all matters conducive to his moral advancement and to his acquisition of the methods and industries which characterize the civilized races among whom he is placed. If the Indian prove capable of becoming a part of our population, pursuing the same avocations and restrained by the same influences, we shall have accomplished a great and beneficent work. If, however, he be unable to profit by the opportunity, and, as a necessary consequence, disappear from among us, we at least shall not be in fault, but must accept the melancholy result as the unavoidable failure of an honest and earnest effort to do right in the right way. Nothing then will be left us except to care for him as he is, and, as far as possible, smooth his pathway to inevitable extinction. If God indeed will it that the once populous Indian race—our predecessors on this continent—shall shrivel up and disappear before us, let it at least be truly said that we, a Christian people, played our part in its melancholy history and awaited its final obsequies as mourners, and not as executioners.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask to have read a letter from Colonel W. B. Hazen, United States Army, to General BANNING, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. The letter is written by one of the most experienced and intelligent officers of the Army, having been in active service on the frontier for twenty years past, and is now absent in Europe by order of the President of the United States to examine into and report upon the military establishments of Russia and Turkey. His views are disinterested, formed after years of experience and intelligent observation, and it seems to me ought to have great weight in deciding the question of the transfer of the Indian Bureau, controlled as it now is by corrupt and trafficking agents, to officers of the Army, who ought to have the pride as well as honesty to administer Indian affairs for the greatest good of the Indian and the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

In reply to your inquiry, "Could the Indian Bureau be advantageously transferred to the War Department?" I would respectfully say it could; for the following reasons:

First. It would secure honest administration, and, hence, an immense annual saving of money to the United States. From twenty years' service in the Indian country and its vicinity, and a very extended observation of Indian administration, I am entirely convinced that Indian appropriations are not, as a rule, honestly disbursed, nor do I believe, owing to the entire centralization of this administration in Washington, so far from the Indian country, that it is possible to administer honestly, except by the well-tried and positive means of military control, because the difficulties in the way of civil management are so many and strong. At present, owing to the causes before mentioned, it is impracticable and almost impossible to get evidences of these frauds, such as courts would require to convict. In this connection, and to more thoroughly elucidate, I call special attention to what I have personally known and witnessed, in a paper accompanying, marked "A." The facts there given are in every case accurately stated, but would at the same time be difficult to substantiate before a court. The cases there narrated are but a few examples of similar ones that come often to the notice of the Army when near Indian reservations.

I do not claim that officers of the Army differ from other people, only in this, that in their positions they cannot afford to be dishonest. Their administration of Indian affairs would be more economical. Food would be issued only when needed, while it is now issued frequently when not needed, particularly the flour ration, which is then sold to the Indian trader for a mere trifle, and again turned over on the Indian contract.

Second. It would insure the constant attention of the officers of the bureau to their duties, while now the agents spend much of their time away from their posts.

Third. The Indian service would then be susceptible of being organized with a continuous plan, which would at last be understood by the Indians, and be followed by success; while now all plans and systems are changed, and pledges violated, with each change of administration, thereby destroying the Indian's confidence in the Government, while the Government is led to enact the farce (vide the case of the Comanches and Kiowas) of sending commissioners and treating a half-dozen times for the same terms, each treaty to be violated by the Indians as soon as made.

Fourth. It would furnish the Indian service with a class of men acquainted with Indians and their affairs, in place of men who, from want of experience, are incapable of dealing with them, as is often the case under the present system.

Fifth. By placing the entire control of Indian affairs with the military arm, Indian troubles could often be checked in their incipiency, where now it is only called in when it can do nothing but fight.

Sixth. The Indians would be controlled, instead of controlling their agents as they now usually do.

In fact, it will place them with the only branch of the Government which can at all times keep control of them. Whenever the desire of Indians to be separated from soldiers is manifest it invariably arises from their wish to govern their agents. The great peril and absence of glory of Indian wars would always be a great incentive with the Army to prevent them.

Seventh. The great tendency of agents to become possessed of choice Indian lands would also be prevented. This was the main cause of the Modoc war; and at the present writing Agent Pease, formerly with the Crows, is located in a stockade at the mouth of the Big Horn River, calling for a military post and protection against Indians, he having become interested there while Indian agent.

Eighth. It would save the cost to the United States of the present civil servants of the Indian service.

Ninth. By being under the continuous control and direction of a permanent body of intelligent men the instruction of the Indians in agriculture, stock-raising, and all the civilizing arts would become a strong and active sentiment with the Army; and not, as now, subject to the caprice of a stranger every four years, who has spent much of his term of office before he comprehends the real needs of his wards.

Their control would become in a measure patriarchal, which is the natural government of all barbarous people. The main cause of the little progress now made is that, from the rotating system of civil office in our highly civilized republican Government, everything is frittered away in beginning, and nothing is ever completed.

Respectfully submitted.

W. B. HAZEN,
Colonel Sixth Infantry, Brevet Major-General.

Hon. H. B. BANNING,
Chairman of the House Military Committee.

Mr. HASKELL. I am opposed to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. I am not surprised, however, that every military man who has made a report on this subject, every officer of the Army that has been quoted here is in favor of this amendment. They all know that an attack has been made upon the Army in the hope of reducing the number of officers. It is very natural that they should advocate a measure which would provide places for forty or fifty superannuated officers or officers who are without active employment in the service to-day.

I tell you that this proposition is not for the purpose of administering affairs in a single bureau of the Government. It does not by its terms provide simply a method of distributing stores and supplies. But at one fell swoop it proposes an entire abandonment of that policy which has worked so well for the control of these Indians; that is, the absolute peace policy. And it proposes that the Indians shall be taught the arts of peace, shall be taught to turn their spears into pruning hooks, by men bred to the art of war, by men who beat pruning hooks into spears. Will this civilize the Indians? Will this the better fit him for citizenship? Will this tend to prepare him for self-government? Will this hasten the day when this Territory will be fit for a territorial government? Will this increase his love for the white man and the white man's institutions?

I deny that in the great Indian Territory, where more tribes in number are congregated than in any other given area of this country devoted to Indian reservations—I deny that any of these Indians have left their reservation and wandered off for the purpose of pillaging neighboring settlements. There has been but one instance of the kind for ten years past. And even when the Osages left their agency at that time, their chiefs and many of the settlers declared that the first trouble arose from a hunting party being fired upon by the militia; a hunting party that was not out for the purpose of war. Whichever statement is true is of little moment here. It is the only instance of the kind.

What is it that you propose to do? Instead of placing men among the Indians who are skilled in the arts of peace so that they may be able to teach those arts to the Indians, instead of giving them schools, and providing agents who will go among them unarmed, you propose to send down there as agents men who for thirty years have been fighting these Indians on the plains. We are at peace with them now; why make any change in our policy. If any man can suggest changes in addition for the better, do it, and let Congress order such changes at once, right wrongs, detect frauds, remedy defective methods, but do not change the general outlines of a policy that has brought peace to at least my State and protection and a sense of safety to my people. I dare not advocate such a change as this and run the risk of another outbreak similar to the horrors of the Minnesota Indian war. Suppose, for instance, that you send these old Army officers into the Kiowa agency; suppose you send these Army officers whom the friends of Santanta, Yellow Bear, Satauk, and others of the head men of that tribe recognize at once as the Army men who have flogged them all over the plains. Will you tell me that that will be in the interest of peace and harmony? No, Mr. Chairman; I tell you that in the proportion that intelligence is possessed by the Indians as compared with the white man, in that proportion will they feel keenly and resent military control; and the cry will come up from these Indian tribes against military supervision, and it will be as strong and as defiant as the cry which came up from the Southern States to take away the bayonets from their territory. You cannot deal with them in that way. Agent Haworth, who for five years has had control of the Kiowa nation, has been in charge of them ever since they were put upon their present reservation, told me the other day in an ante-room of this House, that he had never had a cross word from one of them in all the time that he had been there. He said that but one complaint had ever come to him from an Indian in regard to their treatment, and the next day that same Indian came to him and took back the charge and asked the agent to dig a hole and bury it that it might be forgotten.

I tell you, gentlemen, that I cannot stand here representing the people of a State on the border of this Indian Territory and not enter my solemn protest against a movement which as surely as the sun shall rise to-morrow will corroborate the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] that the members of the House will one day repent and bitterly repent their action in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, of course, it is not to be expected that much can be said on a subject of this importance in five minutes. I regret exceedingly the view that my friend from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has taken of this matter. I think that in his speech there is an admission that he has not given the subject much attention. I am sure if he had given it the attention which it deserves he would have come to a very different conclusion in regard to the policy and duty of the Government to the Indians. I, in common with the entire country, have much veneration for him and the highest respect for his opinion, but his error in this matter, to me at least, is manifest.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SCALES. I have but five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. And I want but one.

Mr. SCALES. I cannot yield.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I want to correct an error of the gentleman.

Mr. SCALES. Very well.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I said that I had not read the arguments which had been made here on this subject; but I have given a vast deal of attention to the subject.

Mr. SCALES. However that may be, the gentleman said we must not take a step backward, that we must let well enough alone. I judged from that that my friend had not given much attention to the subject.

What is the condition of these Indian tribes now? They have advanced but little, if any, in twenty years. What is the character of the system which has been provided by the Government for bringing about their civilization and education? It had its origin in the best motives and purest intentions, but the system now in use is covered all over with fraud; the whole country throughout its length and breadth has lost all confidence in it; its agents are corrupt and the Indians are swindled; suspicion of fraud and venality covers every effort and taints every action looking to the advancement of the Indians, and stands in the way of success. The reports of your committees and peace commissions sent out for investigations, as well as the whole history of Indian civilization in the last twenty-five years, show the system cannot be carried out without fraud and is an entire failure.

Not only so, but the Army of which gentlemen manifest such holy horror is now near the reservations to keep in subjection the Indians. Gentlemen talk about the Army, and about the injurious influence of the Army upon the Indians. Do they forget the fact that the Army is there now? Do they forget the fact, of much importance in considering this question, that you cannot maintain an agency among any of these wild tribes a day without the Army? You must have it, and dare not take it away; if you do your system tumbles for the want of support. This begets a divided jurisdiction. Two-thirds if not three-fourths of the Army are kept from year to year on or near these reservations, and that is about the only use you now have for them. They are paid for this service, and must be always on hand in an emergency. The Indians must see and, if necessary, must feel your power. Why not then turn the whole thing over to them and save money and fix responsibility?

As long as the Indians are quiet and will starve and be swindled without resistance the agent has absolute and almost unlimited control. But when flesh and blood can endure no more they leave their reservation, defy their agent, and of necessity are turned over to the Army. It is sometimes exceedingly difficult to mark where one jurisdiction begins and the other ends. And then there is a divided responsibility and it is difficult to fix it. The agent will blame the Army and the Army the agent. This should and must cease. You cannot do without the Army; no one will dare assert it; but you can do without the agent. If you would have one jurisdiction and one responsibility, then you must either put the Army under the Interior Department, or put the Indians in the care of the War Department. Certainly no one can hesitate which ought to be done.

We do not mean, we do not want war with this race; in God's name let us have peace, and to have peace we must have one responsibility. It must be undivided, and this must be in the War Department. We will then as now call to our aid all the religious denominations. We will invoke the press, the pulpit, the schools, the mechanics, and the agriculturists, and all else which may promote success. But we want a religion and a gospel of their own choice. Now it is not so. Now they take such religion as you send them. Then we will open the doors wide to all and bid all God speed in this great work. Now there is no religious liberty. Then there will be the largest liberty and this great principle of the Constitution secured even to the poor Indian.

The tide of emigration flows irresistibly to the West. It finds its way to the reservations in search of wealth and adventure. You cannot stay this tide; it will flow on; it will and does often come in conflict with the Indians, and this often produces wars and bloodshed. We must protect both in their rights, and to do this effectually we must have the Army.

My friend from New York [Mr. COX] says we must take the responsibility. I gladly accept it. I have given much consideration to this question. When I entered Congress I was opposed to this transfer, but my investigation led me to favor it and in the interest of the Indian and the country I accept it, and as long as I have a seat on this floor it shall be my earnest, untiring, persistent effort to promote the good of these Indians, and in my view it can be done only by a change and by some such bill as this. Those who assert that the Army has been mainly instrumental in bringing on Indian wars are laboring under a sad mistake. While the Indians are at peace they are under the charge of the agents; when they leave the reservation and commence hostilities, then they are turned over to the Army. Bad white men and unfaithful agents bring on the wars and the Army is made responsible. Since what is falsely called the peace policy has been established, disturbances and wars with the Indians have increased in number, violence, and cost.

The entire cost of the War Department for eleven years prior to the transfer to the Interior Department, leaving out the time between 1845 and 1849 because of the Mexican war, was $80,716,086.74. While from 1850 to 1860, eleven years since the transfer, the whole expense of the War Department was $168,079,707.57. In all this time we had no wars save Indian wars, and this proves beyond all controversy that we can best promote peace and economy by the transfer. For ten years prior to 1849, the time when the Interior took charge of the Indians, the Indian Bureau cost $17,611,837.98. From 1850 to 1860 it cost $34,169,799.82. From 1870 to 1876 it cost $44,303,332. This showing, in point of economy, is certainly in favor of the Army.

The board of Indian commissioners, in their report, institute a comparison between the years 1868 and 1877 in order to show the great progress made by the Indians toward civilized life. This comparison proves nothing. It is neither candid nor reliable. This report gives the number of houses in 1868 occupied by the Indians at 7,476; in 1877, 22,199; while in 1866 the number of houses was 8,639, showing that between 1866 and 1868 they had retrograded or fallen off in houses over 1,100. Bushels of corn raised in 1868, 467,363; and yet in 1866 they raised 821,569 bushels, over 300,000 more in 1866 than in 1868. Sheep raised in 1868, 2,683; in 1866, 14,244. In two years they had lost over 11,000. And just here I ask that the table, which I append, be printed as a part of my remarks.

These statistics show how utterly worthless and unreliable are all the reports we get from this bureau. They must in many instances be false, and it makes no difference whether from ignorance or design. They are interested in sustaining the bureau, and it is fair to infer that such a statement is founded upon ignorance rather than design, inasmuch as the statement proves that the Indians are retrograding rather than advancing. But there is no certainty in these figures, and I am forced to the conviction that all their reports are worthless and that we learn from them nothing of the true inward working of the system. Then, sir, let us get rid of it. It has already cost us and the Indians that which it will take years to recover.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by order of the House for discussion upon this amendment has now expired. It will be in order to offer amendments but not to discuss them.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of third paragraph down to and including the word "Army" in the thirteenth line of said paragraph, and insert: "The commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in general charge of all Indian tribes in their respective departments. And the officer in command of any military division of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall have ex officio the immediate charge and control of all such Indians in his military division. The annuities to be paid to any Indians and the supplies to be furnished and issued to them shall be paid by and issued through the Quartermaster's Department and the Subsistence department of the Army, under such regulations and restrictions as the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe."

Mr. SCALES. I understand no debate is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SCALES. I would like to say that this bill has been considered by the Indian Committee and I hope it will pass as presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the words which the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin proposes to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army.

Mr. BRAGG. May I state the object of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SCALES and others objected to debate.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as impairing the binding force of any treaty stipulations or interfering with the government or present rights of any tribe, and that all payments now required to be made under existing law with any tribe or tribes shall be so paid by the Secretary of War instead of the Secretary of the Interior.

I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will accept this amendment.

Mr. SCALES. I have no right to accept any amendment. I do not see any objection to this, nor do I see any reason for it. I think the point is sufficiently covered in the amendment I have offered.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. PHILLIPS, there were—ayes 46, noes 81; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PHILLIPS and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 86.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I desire to offer an amendment to exclude from the operation of this provision the Indians of the State of New York. A large number of Indians residing within the bounds of my district——

Mr. SCALES. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. Then I will not say anything more, but will offer my amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

But nothing herein contained shall apply to any of the tribes of Indians in the State of New York or to any money or property belonging to them in charge of the Interior Department.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I move to amend by striking out so much of the amendment as provides for the assignment of officers from the retired list to the discharge of this duty. The words I propose to strike out are the following, in lines 6 and 7 of the third paragraph of the amendment: "or on the retired list."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend by striking out, in the third paragraph of the amendment, the words, "shall, subject to the approval of," and inserting "the."

Mr. SCALES. I do not understand the bearing of this amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. It will leave the assignments with the Secretary of War instead of the officers commanding the departments. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina gives these assignments to the local officers; this will confine them to the Secretary of War.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any Indians now upon the reservations under treaty with the United States.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Indian Territory nor to any Indians that may be located therein.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being ayes 16, noes not counted.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, after the word "law" in the fourth line of the fourth paragraph, the following:

And its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who, when on such duty, shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SCALES, there were—ayes 103, noes 96.

Mr. HASKELL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCALES and Mr. HASKELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 107.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRAGG. Would it be in order for me to give notice that in the House I shall call the yeas and nays on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. In the House any gentleman will have the right to call the yeas and nays on any amendment. It will be for the House to decide whether the yeas and nays shall be ordered.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to amend by inserting the following as an additional section:

From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus or otherwise under the pretext or for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by act of Congress; and no money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any of the expenses incurred in the employment of any troops in violation of this section; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation and does not come within the rules permitting amendments to appropriation bills.

Mr. KNOTT. I would be obliged to the gentleman from Ohio if he would state the grounds upon which he makes his point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Nakedly, upon the ground that it is a change of law without any retrenchment in it, and therefore against the rules.

Mr. KNOTT. What law does it change?

Mr. GARFIELD. The burden is on the gentleman to show it is in accordance with law, as I have made the point of order upon it.

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman state what law it changes, as he makes the point of order that it changes the law?

Mr. GARFIELD. It imposes a new penalty; it makes a new penitentiary offense rather than new provision; it puts the command of the Army into the hands of the Congress as well as various other changes.

Mr. KNOTT. Here is the rule, Mr. Chairman, under which the gentleman makes his point of order:

Nor shall any provision in any bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

Now, I presume the gentleman will not pretend this amendment is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill. The only question then remaining is whether it tends to retrench expenditures. I presume it is not necessary for me to say to a gentleman of the acknowledged military experience of the gentleman from Ohio that the movement of a detachment of troops for any purpose must necessarily be attended with expense. There can be no doubt about that; and the object of the amendment is, should any officer of the Army disregard this provision and provide payment out of moneys appropriated here of any expense incurred in violation of law, he shall be liable to this penalty. Even without this amendment it will be unlawful for an officer of the United States to use any portion of troops under the pretext of enforcing the law unless he is expressly authorized so to do by an act of Congress. In my humble opinion, Mr. Chairman, the amendment comes strictly within the very words of the rule and is certainly within its spirit.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will simply say if what the gentleman has now said be true it would be against the law as it now stands. In addition he has put in a provision requiring conviction, prosecution, and imprisonment of people, which would certainly incur expense. So all this does that is new, according to the gentleman's own statement, is to create expense of trial, conviction, and cost of imprisonment, and therefore is against retrenchment instead of being in favor of it.

Mr. KNOTT. The conviction of an officer violating the law will not inflict additional expense to the Government. I suppose the gentleman understands upon conviction the party convicted pays the cost as well as the penalty prescribed. And moreover, sir, so far as the vindicatory part of this amendment is concerned, I wish to say I am tired of congressional action without penal sanction. Without a sanction of this kind, sir, any provision we might make here would be a mere brutum fulmen, and if we undertake to say this thing shall not be done which is now unlawful it is evident we should say, "if you violate this you shall pay a certain penalty." No harm can come to any one by such a provision.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the same point of order now made by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky was made in the Forty-fourth Congress when a similar provision was moved in regard to the uses which should be made of the Army, and it was overruled. And at the extra session, when the Army bill was then under consideration, I had the honor to offer an amendment to the bill in substance the same as the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, which had for its office and its object precisely the same purpose as my amendment now has, to enable the legislative department of the Government alone to say in what mode and manner the Army raised, equipped, provisioned, and paid by the legislative department of the Government according to the provisions of law shall be used. And it is a safe interdict at all events to place on those who have the Army under command to say that the legislative department of the Government, which creates it, which regulates its numbers, which provisions and equips it, shall direct in what manner it shall be used, or at all events shall put an interdict on its use by officers in any manner inconsistent with the purpose expressed in the law. I take it for granted this is all the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to do; and I think in the Forty-fourth Congress that amendment was attached to the Army bill and defeated it. In the extra session of this Congress, when that amendment was offered, the point of order was overruled and it was not considered liable to the objection now urged by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have the decision.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to say there is no such ruling as the gentleman refers to in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. HOOKER. What do you say?

Mr. BURCHARD. That there was no point of order in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. HOOKER. I am sure there was one in the extra session of this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi direct the attention of the Chair to any decision on this question heretofore?

Mr. HOOKER. I have sent for the Journals.

Mr. GARFIELD. There was no such ruling.

Mr. LAPHAM. My recollection is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] was voted on and rejected.

Mr. ATKINS. In the Thirty-fourth Congress a similar amendment was offered to the Army appropriation bill and was adopted. It was stricken out in the Senate, but passed in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think in the cases which have been referred to the amendment was that no money appropriated by the bill should be paid under the circumstances indicated, but no penalty was prescribed.

Mr. KNOTT. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to hold that it is incompetent for Congress to say a certain penalty shall be incurred for violating an enactment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am expressing no opinion whatever as to the question before the committee; I am merely giving my recollection of the character of the amendment on which the Chair has heretofore ruled. I think all the amendments of this nature to appropriation bills simply directed that none of the money appropriated should be applied to pay for the Army being used at elections, &c.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to say the precise point is this: whether the House can say that no part of the money appropriated by this bill shall be used for the purposes contemplated in the bill. If it is competent for the House to put on an amendment of that kind, it is certainly competent to make that amendment effective by attaching a penalty to its violation. No lawyer can doubt that. It is idle for us to say you shall not do this thing unless we affix to our mandate a penalty for its violation. And if we have a right to prescribe how the money is to be used, we have an equal right to prescribe a penalty for its misappropriation.

Mr. CONGER. Then if you have a right to affix a penalty you have a right to provide a court with which to try the charge; you have a right to institute a tribunal and all its paraphernalia. If you have a right on an appropriation bill to change the law and make a penal law prescribing imprisonments and fines, you have a right to establish the tribunal to whom the charges of violation of the law shall be referred.

This is a military offense. You may say it shall not go to a court-martial, but that there shall be a special tribunal in one or more of the military departments. I submit to the Chair that if the reason assigned by the gentleman from Kentucky is good for anything it must run clear through; it must run throughout all the remedies which may be proposed, which is absurd.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has asked for previous rulings on this subject if such rulings have been made. No gentleman has yet furnished him with such rulings.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have a very distinct recollection that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi in the extra session of this Congress was voted down in the House, only about thirty members voting for it; and no point of order was made upon it.

Mr. HALE. I desire to say the recollection of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] is correct. In previous cases the amendment has been offered in such a form that it was not subject to the point of order. It was simply a limitation of the appropriation in the bill to certain uses; a practice long recognized and sustained by many chairmen and Speakers and so well established that no point of order could be raised. But the gentleman from Kentucky has not contented himself with that; he goes further and seeks to legislate beyond that mere limitation. That is the trouble with the amendment. The Chair will find no ruling that covers this point.

Mr. BANKS. According to my understanding of this amendment, it takes from the President the power that is expressly given to him by the Constitution, in providing he shall not use the Army for the purpose of keeping the peace, unless authorized by act of Congress. It cannot be in order to introduce legislation of that character.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. COX, of New York. I find in the Journal of the Thirty-fourth Congress, first session, on the 29th of July, 1856, certain amendments reported with the Army appropriation bill by the Committee of the Whole to the House. Of these the first amendment provided that—

No part of the military force of the United States shall be employed in aid of their enforcement—

That is, the enforcement of the laws enacted by a body claiming to be the territorial Legislature of Kansas—nor shall any citizen of Kansas be required, under these provisions, to act as part of the posse comitatus of any officer acting as marshal or sheriff in said Territory.

No point of order was made.

The third amendment was even more express; it provided—

That no part of the military force of the United States herein provided for shall be employed in aid of the enforcement of the enactments of the alleged Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas, &c.

These various amendments were offered by gentlemen who were then on the republican side of the House, and no question was made then of the power of the House to direct the use of the military force as the House chose.

Mr. HALE. Those were merely limitations on the appropriation.

Mr. COX, of New York. Limitations and directions.

Mr. HALE. Limitations of expenditure and nothing more. There was no penalty, no legislation.

Mr. COX, of New York. It was distinctly declared that the military force should not be used for such and such purposes.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman from New York knows that an amendment without objection makes no precedent.

Mr. COX, of New York. I have heard that side of the House frequently quote such things as precedents.

Mr. BURCHARD. When an amendment is offered to which no objection is made then it establishes no precedent, the point of order not having been raised.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would prefer to have a precedent made after objection. But when precedents are made by such eminent men as those who started the republican party, the men who gave the very first impulse, the glorious impulse to the formation of the republican party, I think it is a strong precedent against the gentlemen on the other side now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule upon the point of order. That part of this amendment which provides that no money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any of the expenses incurred in the employment of any troops in violation of this section, and that any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and that part of it which provides that no part of the money appropriated shall be paid to persons used as a posse comitatus for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases as Congress may provide, is clearly a limitation upon the appropriation, and such amendments have heretofore been held to be within the rule. The first portion of this section merely recites what is the existing law as appears from the face of the amendment, and it is therefore but a re-enactment of what the law now is, and the Chair is of the opinion that that portion of the section is clearly within the rules. As to the latter portion of the proposed section, the Chair is in some doubt as to whether it is within the rule; but as this kind of legislation in appropriation bills has been customary heretofore the Chair will not take the responsibility of ruling it out, but will submit the section to the committee.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of attempting an argument in five minutes about the danger or impropriety of using the military arm of this Government for any purpose not expressly authorized by congressional enactment. I simply desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that Congress has heretofore undertaken to prescribe the circumstances under which the military arm of the Government may be invoked for enforcing the civil laws. In order to carry out the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution, title 69 of the Revised Statutes has been enacted and in addition to this the civil arm of the Government is authorized to call to its aid the military power in the enforcement of what is known as the civil-rights bill and the enforcement of the collection of the customs, and also to enforce the removal of vessels from our ports when they are there in violation of our neutrality.

Congress has therefore undertaken to say in what manner the civil power shall be served by the ministerial officers of our military force.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the gentleman from Kentucky is discussing the merits of his amendment, and I understood that the Chair said he would submit to the House the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair said that he would submit the section to the committee.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the Chair to say that he would submit the point of order.

Mr. BURCHARD. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not understand the Chair to say that, because if he did then he made no ruling upon the question as to that part of the amendment which relates to penalties.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that he would not sustain the point of order, and would submit the question to the committee.

Mr. BURCHARD. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the effect of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not have any such understanding, and I was listening closely to what the Chair said. My understanding was that the point of order should be submitted to the House.

Mr. KNOTT. I understood that the Chair had overruled the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. He did not say so.

Mr. KNOTT. I understood that I was recognized by the Chair to speak to the merits of the amendment, and I do not understand by what authority gentlemen rise and take me off the floor in such a summary way.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not a summary way at all. I do not think that any gentleman upon this side of the House understood the Chair to overrule the point of order; we understood that he said that he would submit it to the House, and therefore it was that I arose to inquire as to whether the penalties provided for in this be in order. Let us know that. That is all I want. Let us have a ruling from the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expressed a doubt as to whether a portion of this amendment was within the rule, but he also stated that he would construe the doubt in favor of the precedents heretofore sustained of allowing such sections to be added to these bills, and therefore the decision of the Chair substantially overruled the question of order and he then recognized the gentleman from Kentucky to discuss the merits of the proposed section.

Mr. KNOTT. Now, in reference to the enforcement of civil process. The Congress of the United States has made this provision, which is the only one that can be found upon our statute-books beyond what I have already alluded to:

Marshals and their deputies shall in each State have the same power in executing the laws of the United States as the sheriffs and their deputies in such States may have in executing the laws thereof.

There is the statutory provision.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KIMMEL] laid this House and the country under obligation to him by calling attention in one of the most eloquent and able speeches to which I have ever listened on this floor to the fact that the Army of the United States has been used in a hundred instances under the pretext of enforcing the laws without one scintilla of authority to be found in any enactment of Congress; and further, to the manly and dignified protest of a distinguished and patriotic general of the United States Army against the continuance of so dangerous and pernicious a practice.

It occurred to me that now, when this country is in the enjoyment of profound peace, is a fitting time for us to say that this practice shall no longer continue; that the Army of the United States shall be amenable to the civil law; that it shall not be employed under the pretext of enforcing any law, unless authority is expressly conferred by statutory enactment. And in making this provision, if we have authority to make it at all, it is eminently proper that we shall give it force by imposing penalties for its non-observance. I repeat, it is worse than idle for us to say that this or that thing shall not be done without saying that if it is done such and such a penalty shall be incurred.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Is this the effect of the amendment of the gentleman: that the penalties therein provided shall attach to all the officers and all the men who may be engaged in the execution or the prosecution of the alleged violation of the section? Is that the effect of his amendment?

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman can put his own construction on the amendment at his leisure. My construction of it is this: that no officer of the United States Army is bound to obey an illegal order, I do not care from whom it emanates.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Allow me another question, because I am seeking to ascertain what is the full force and purpose of the amendment. Is it not a universal principle of military law, and does it not come within the very oath of every officer and soldier, that he is bound to obey the orders of his superiors?

Mr. KNOTT. The lawful orders of his superiors.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Is he allowed to determine whether they are lawful or not?

Mr. KNOTT. An officer is bound to obey only the lawful orders of his superiors, not an illegal order. If he has refused to obey a legal order he will be held guilty of disobedience.

As I have already said, it is time for the Congress of the United States to put a stop to the illegal use of the military arm of the Government under the pretext of enforcing the law of the land.

Mr. HALE. It is a remarkable thing in the present condition of the country that an attempt should be made to ingraft such a provision as this upon the Army appropriation bill. Do gentlemen on the other side, does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] offering the amendment, believe that there is any danger of executive action in the direction which his amendment seeks to prevent? Or is the amendment offered simply because in his party there is a chronic fear upon this subject, whatever may be the condition of affairs?

There is no danger that the President of the United States will use troops improperly. Now, upon the point of the record of the gentleman's own party in this matter allow me to say that if the gentleman had been for the last day or two delving in Floridian literature he would have found certain things there that would have been instructive to him. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a copy of a telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

LAKE CITY, FLORIDA, November, 1876.

General RUGER:

Can you not have troops at Tallahassee and Monticello, Florida, on election day. We desire them.

G. F. DREW,
Democratic Candidate for Governor.
S. PASCO,
Chairman Democratic State Committee.

Mr. HALE. It is amazing. We have been in the habit of seeing democratic governors, when the spirit of violence was abroad, and mob rule was imminent, sending to the President of the United States for troops to put down and suppress violence. We have been in the habit of seeing republican governors, when beleaguered in their States, sending formal calls under the Constitution to the President of the United States for help. But what kind of a democratic candidate for governor is this who sends before election day to the general commanding the military district and asks for troops to be sent there? What kind of a chairman of a democratic State committee is this who calls lustily for the intervention of the Federal power as represented by the Army of the United States to be present upon election day at important places in the State of Florida? What kind of democracy is this that calls for troops and expresses a desire for them, and when we get into the House seeks to incorporate upon an Army appropriation bill provisions forbidding the performance of the very duties which its own chieftains in the States in the recent presidential election have invoked and resorted to in order to obtain assistance?

Sir, the fact is that this amendment is not needed here in the least; it is not called for. Heretofore, as the dispatch which has been read proves, men in both political parties have requested the intervention of the General Government because they believed that violence in some way or other was impending and that the Federal arm should be interposed to arrest it, and that suffrage should be free.

We want no amendment that will prohibit the President of the United States, when in good faith either republican or democrat calls upon him, to see that the ægis of the General Government shall be extended over all the States, and to see to it that there are fair elections. There is no danger at all of the power being abused, and I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] knows that as well as I do.

Mr. KNOTT. I have not been as much interested in Floridian literature as perhaps some other gentlemen on this floor may have been; consequently I have not delved in the archives which seem to have attracted the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] within the last few days.

He asks me if I am afraid of the President of the United States, of the Executive. I am no more afraid of his violating the law in this regard than I am of any other officer of the United States Government. The amendment I propose is comprehensive. It reaches from the Commander-in-Chief down to the lowest officer in the Army who may presume to take upon himself to decide when he shall use the military force in violation of the law of the land. It is not only the Executive who has been guilty of using troops under circumstances not authorized by law, but officers of various grades. And it is to prevent a recurrence of this usurpation of authority by any grade of officers that this amendment is proposed. It is not a party question. It is a question that rises above party. It is a question that addresses itself to conservative men, whether upon the other side of the House or this.

There is no danger that this amendment, if enacted, will interfere with the protection of any citizen in the exercise of the elective franchise. If the gentleman had looked into the law, which he himself I believe took a prominent part in enacting, he would have found that provision is amply made for such contingencies as he proposes. The passage of this amendment will not interfere in the slightest degree with the enforcement of what is known as the civil-rights bill and the employment of troops in order to protect the elective franchise. Congress has provided for that by express statutory enactment; and when acting under the authority of that law no officer of the Army of course could be held guilty of violating the provisions of the amendment I have offered, because this amendment expressly excepts those cases and those circumstances in which troops are now authorized by any act of Congress to be employed in the enforcement of said law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I do not oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] for the reasons indicated by the gentleman from Maine. I would be gratified if in discussing these matters some gentlemen on this floor would address themselves to the amendment without continually and upon every occasion bringing in the troops in Louisiana and the late presidential election. For one, I am heartily tired of it. But, sir, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky strikes me as impracticable in this: subordination is the very foundation of military affairs; and how would it be possible for a lieutenant of the Army, sent out with a detachment to do a certain thing—how would it be possible for him to look into the legality of the order which was given to him and to say, "I will not obey the general who has ordered me to do this thing?" Why, sir, such a thing as that would breed insubordination. Our officers and soldiers would have to study the civil law of the country in order to protect themselves from the severe and rigid penalties imposed upon the military branch of the Government. Our soldiers are not so fortunately situated as to be able to do this. I have always maintained, and I maintain now, that it is the duty of a subordinate military officer to obey the commands of his superior.

Mr. ELAM. Can any person in any position plead ignorance of the law in order to exempt him from the penalties attached to its violation?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Why, sir, this amendment does not attempt that. It does not seek to provide punishment for any criminal offense; for the law is already abundant upon that subject. The law does not excuse any soldier or officer for committing a crime. He is as completely amenable to the law for any offense of that kind as he can be.

Mr. KNOTT. Suppose that a captain should order one of his lieutenants to go and burn down a citizen's house in time of peace, would the lieutenant be subject to indictment for arson?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Certainly. Both those who gave and those who executed such an order would be liable to punishment, for it would be a violation of all law.

Mr. KNOTT. Then the gentleman concedes that there are cases where the military subordinate is not bound to obey the orders of his superior.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Such a case as that comes within the purview of the criminal law. The criminal law excuses no man for offenses of that sort; every man is bound to take notice that they are crimes.

Mr. KNOTT. Does not this amendment make any violation of its provisions a misdemeanor?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. You make it penal for any military man to violate the civil law; you impose a penalty for anything done in violation of law. So far as regards crimes—murder, arson, or any other criminal offense known to our law—no soldier and no officer would be excused for the commission of such an act.

Mr. MAYHAM. Suppose that a captain should be ordered to take his men to a particular polling-place and to allow no persons but those of one political party to vote there; would not that be a violation of law?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I say that the soldier could not stop to inquire as to the legality or illegality of such a thing; but the civil law of the country, the political power of the land, would declare such an election null and void and would secure the rights of the parties wronged by ordering a new election. That is exactly where the remedy is.

Then there is another consideration. The President, as Commander-in-Chief, is not supposed to do these illegal things. It is not to be supposed that he is going to command his generals, and that his generals are going to command their subordinates, to do these unlawful acts.

A MEMBER. But suppose they do?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. Well, sir, I come from a section of country that has had as good reason to complain as any other; but I do not think the trouble has arisen at the hands of the soldiers, but rather with the political power exercised by men who have controlled perhaps a few soldiers.

Now, sir, this amendment would not be objectionable if it simply provided that any commanding officer who should order his soldiers to do an unlawful act should be held responsible.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRIDEMORE I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I can see no object in offering an amendment of this kind at the present time unless it is to cripple the civil administration of the Government in the prevention of violations of law. In some of the interior districts of the United States—the mountain regions—there are men engaged in illicit distillation. I do not know that there is in our internal-revenue law a provision (there may be such, but I do not call it to mind) which expressly declares that if there be resistance to an officer engaged in seizing an illicit distillery the soldiery of the United States may be used to assist the officers in the execution of the law. Now, this amendment provides that the soldiers shall not be used unless there is an express provision of law; I see that the words "expressly authorized" are emphasized in the amendment. It seems to me, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PRIDEMORE,] that the amendment, if adopted, would require a lieutenant, for instance, when ordered to use the soldiers under his command for a specific purpose, to go to a lawyer and inquire, "Is there an express provision of law authorizing this to be done?" He must do this before he dare obey, unless he is willing to incur a liability to the punishment here provided.

Why is there any necessity for ingrafting such a provision as this upon the Army appropriation bill at this time? It seems to me it can only have some such object as I have indicated; and therefore I hope the Committee of the Whole will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Is it in order to offer amendments to the proposed section;

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Then I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not apply on the Mexican border or in the execution of the neutrality law elsewhere on the national boundary line.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that one of the great difficulties in the way of the efficient protection of the Mexican line and in the prevention of the robbery of cattle on that line is the absence of the power in the soldiers to inquire when they meet Mexicans driving cattle as to the business in which they are engaged.

Many of the owners of Texas cattle live in Mexico, and frequently men come over as employés of the Mexican owners. If they happen to meet a scout of soldiers, the soldiers are not bound to inquire whether they are robbers or employés. Consequently it has been the custom, as it was the only efficient mode of service, to send some civilian along as deputy sheriff, who had the right to find out and if necessary to assist in making the arrest. That would be completely broken up unless this amendment to the amendment is adopted.

The other matter about neutrality laws I do not care so much about, but I will suggest to gentlemen there may be, in the case of war between England and Russia, a necessity for such provision on the Canadian frontier and elsewhere; that the execution of the neutrality laws will make it necessary for civil officers to accompany the military.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the objection which has been offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PRIDEMORE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] it will be found that our laws now, as they exist upon the statute-books, provide penalties precisely like that provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky for violation of the law. They apply, of course, to the officer in command who issues the order to his troops in contravention of the law.

And the penalty objected to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] as being attached to the violation of this law—the penalty provided in this amendment is no greater or severer than that provided in other cases. There is a law, for instance, upon the statute-book, often disregarded in these latter days, providing that no military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the military or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control any troops or armed men at places where any general or special election shall be held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or keep peace at the polls. A further provision of the statute prescribes penalties for violation of the law. Here is the section of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 5528. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

So in reference to other existing laws upon the statute-book. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky simply proposes to affix a pecuniary penalty: to affix fine and imprisonment as penalty for violation of the law for use of the Army in contravention of existing law.

I have said, sir, at the extra session, with reference to this use of the Army at the polls, I had the honor to offer to the Army bill an amendment which looked to the prohibition of the exercise of functions by the President or any subordinate officer of the Army at the polls. On an occasion which transpired not long ago, when the Army was ordered to the polls, I called the attention of the Federal judge to the fact that the officer who issued the order and who compelled its execution was liable to the penalty prescribed by the statute. The Army, sir, is the Army of the people, in sympathy with it, created by it, and controlled by the legislation which the representatives of the people choose to enact in reference to its exercise.

And in answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] that there is no reason now to apprehend the present Executive of the United States will exercise the power with which he is invested under the Constitution and the laws, as they now exist, they use the permissive word "may"—the President of the United States may send troops in order to preserve the peace—and it ought to be put in the negative form, in an inhibitory manner, that he shall not do it unless he is called upon by the Legislature of a State while in session, and, in the absence of the Legislature, by the executive of the State, in the mode and manner prescribed by the Constitution. If there is safety in the provisions of the Constitution, if there was necessity for this in the fundamental law of the land in guarding this power at the hands of the Executive, why should it be objected to that there should be an inhibition expressed in plain and decided terms in the language of the law itself restraining him from the exercise of such power? I say no reason can be offered why it should not be expressed in the law in the very language in which the gentleman from Kentucky has expressed it, and the penalty he proposes to affix for violation of the law in this amendment is no greater than those already upon the statute-book for the use of the Army at election places in the States.

It was intended and designed by this constitutional provision and the laws which have been enacted in pursuance of it to give to the States and to the people of the States that freedom of election with which the Federal Government should never have any power to interfere. And whenever the Commander-in-Chief of the Army or any subordinate under him undertakes to use the Army in any portion of the United States in contravention of these statutes, then he properly falls under the penalty which the law affixes to its violation.

Mr. HANNA, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. LAPHAM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HANNA. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already pending an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. MILLS. If my colleague [Mr. SCHLEICHER] will withdraw the amendment I will renew it. Or the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] can renew the amendment and I will reply to him.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM. I renew it.

I must confess my surprise that the gentleman from Kentucky should seriously propose such an amendment as is embraced in the section he has offered at the present time and in the present condition of the country. If I understand the language of the amendment, there is something very peculiar in it as showing the state of mind of the gentleman from Kentucky. It says that the Army should not be used by the President under the pretense of enforcing the laws. I suppose if he honestly uses the Army to enforce the laws it would not be a violation of this section; but he must not do it furtively and deceitfully when the real purpose is not to enforce the law. That is the interpretation I give to the language employed.

But passing that it certainly is a very extraordinary proposition to lay down in the broad terms of this amendment that the President of the United States, who by the Constitution is made Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, shall not employ that Army in any case, no matter what the emergency, unless there is an express statute providing the mode in which he may employ it. In other words, the President of the United States by this enactment is to be placed in the position where he is to obey his idea of his constitutional duty and his obligation to the country at the peril of punishment by fine and imprisonment. How is it with subordinate officers?

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAPHAM. In one moment. When a subordinate officer receives a command from his superior what is his position? He is to obey the command at the peril of being punished for a violation of this law on the one hand; he is to disobey at the peril of being punished by a court-martial on the other. If this system of the administration of the military law is to prevail it would be far better, Mr. Chairman, to adopt the sentiment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING:] refuse to make this or any appropriation and disband the Army at once. I cannot believe that this House will deliberately sanction any such proposition as is contained in this amendment. I will now hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman if he holds that the President has the right to employ the Army for any purpose not authorized by law.

Mr. LAPHAM. I will answer the gentleman by saying that when General Beauregard fired upon Fort Sumter it was held by a considerable portion of the American people that the President had no right to raise seventy-five thousand men for the purpose of enforcing the laws and putting down such resistance to their execution. Yet the supreme necessity of the hour was his justification, and the Constitution was maintained and the Union preserved by an act which his enemies denounced as a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. KNOTT. I asked the gentleman a very respectful question, and I apprehend he has not understood it. I asked him the simple question, if he holds the President of the United States can employ the Army for any purpose not authorized by law.

Mr. LAPHAM. Clearly there are emergencies in which the only guide to the President as Commander-in-Chief is the Constitution of the United States, which he has sworn to support, which is the supreme law, and which governs any enactment Congress may make. If I were the President of the United States, and such a law as this were placed before me, and I were called upon to exercise the military authority in order to preserve the Government, I would disregard such an act as an infraction of the Constitution of my country.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman from New York expressed some surprise at the language I employed in this amendment. Had he observed it a little more minutely he would have found there was nothing furtive in it. It provides that it shall be unlawful to employ any part of the Army under the pretext or for the purpose of enforcing the law except in cases and under circumstances where such employment is authorized by express congressional enactment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is recognized.

Mr. HANNA. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what class of cases is his amendment intended to meet?

Mr. KNOTT. With the permission of my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] I wish to add just another word. If the gentleman from New York could be surprised at the language I employed in this amendment, what must be the surprise of every intelligent lawyer on this floor at the announcement of the astounding proposition that the President of the United States, who is to enforce the law, can himself rise above the law and do with the Army what the law does not authorize him to do. If that principle is true, our pretext that we have a republican form of Government is a sham and a fraud; we are under a complete, absolute, unlimited, unrestrained, military despotism. Whatever the President of the United States may in his own discretion claim to be lawful he can do, and there is no remedy for it.

Now, my friend from Indiana [Mr. HANNA] asked what particular class of cases this amendment applies to. It applies to every employment of the Army or any part of the Army of the United States in cases for which there is no congressional authority upon our statute-book. I repeat for his edification what I said a while ago, that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KIMMEL] no longer ago than last Monday called the attention of this House to official proof that the Army of the United States had been used in hundreds of cases without authority of law, to assist marshals and deputy marshals and sheriffs and deputy sheriffs when there was no law authorizing any such employment.

The section of the Revised Statutes to which I called the attention of the House a while ago authorizes the marshal to enforce judicial process in the same manner that the sheriff of a State is authorized to enforce and execute State process under State laws. Beyond that the marshal of the United States has no authority to go. There are, as I have already remarked, particular cases in which Congress has provided that the Army may be used, which this bill does not militate against, such as the case of the enforcement of the neutrality laws, the enforcement of the collection of customs duties and of the civil-rights bill, and one or two other instances. But this amendment is designed to put a stop to the practice, which has become fearfully common, of military officers of every grade answering the call of every marshal and deputy marshal to aid in the enforcement of the laws. The Constitution, sir, guarantees to every State a republican form of government and protection from domestic violence on the call of the governor of the State, when the Legislature cannot be convened, and that provision is enforced under a statute sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all possible cases that can arise under it. The amendment proposed does not conflict with that and it is surprising to me that gentlemen should be so sensitive when an attempt is made here to prescribe the limits and bounds beyond which the Army of the United States cannot go.

The Army was made, sir, as the servant of the people. It was not made to override or trample in the dust their rights. Civil law is made for the protection of the people and is paramount to any officer of any grade in the Army, from a corporal up to the Commander-in-Chief. The subordination of the military to the civil power ought to be sedulously maintained.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw my amendment and renew it. I agree perfectly with the gentleman from Virginia, that discipline and subordination are necessary to the efficiency of the Army. But I go further and agree with him who asserts that discipline and subordination of the Army to the Constitution is more imperative than the subordination of a lieutenant to his commander. Our fathers in framing this Government made a written Constitution as a law for that Government. It is not like the British constitution, that is to be gathered from old statutes-books, from edicts and history; it is not like the government of countries which have no written constitutions at all, but when this Government was created by the Constitution, a written law, our fathers required all officers to take an oath to support the Constitution and the laws originating under it as the supreme law of the land. They did not make that Constitution subordinate to the Army but the Army subordinate to the highest authority of the law.

We find in article 6 of the Constitution that all Senators and all members of the several State Legislatures and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and a statute enacted in pursuance of that article lays down the oath to be taken by all officers, either in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States. They are required to take an oath to support the Constitution, and that is the highest law of the land.

Now, when an officer issues an order to his subordinate he always obeys that order at his peril; if that order is in violation of the Constitution of the United States or overthrows any rights which that Constitution guarantees to any citizen, he obeys it at his peril. Suppose a general commands a subordinate officer to disperse this House of Representatives; is he bound to obey that order? It is a part of the constitutional guarantees for constitutional government, and if he dares to transgress that guarantee he must be punished. Suppose a subordinate officer were ordered by his commanding officer to disperse a State Legislature, he can only do it when that Legislature calls upon the President of the United States to lend aid against domestic violence. A lieutenant or a major or any other officer of the Army cannot disperse the Legislature of a State, nor can he employ the force under his command to aid a marshal in executing the laws without violating those guarantees which the Constitution provides for the protection of life, liberty, and property. He can do nothing except what is in obedience of the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance of that Constitution; and I venture to say that every officer, whether he be in the Army or Navy of the United States, when he takes the oath on the back of his commission swears to obey his superior in all lawful orders. I venture to say that every commission in the Army or Navy contains that provision; and it is not in the power of any Army officer or of the President of the United States, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, to break down these barriers which our fathers have erected for the purpose of securing self-government to the people and securing them in their rights of life, liberty, and property. [Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am not going to take the time of the committee for more than a moment. In my reading in reference to this bill I came across in General Halleck's report of 1870 an expression of opinion on this very subject. I have copied it and send it to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read it with the simple remark that General Halleck was as well known as a lawyer as a soldier.

The Clerk read as follows:

It may be proper to remark in this place that I have been assured by Federal civil officers that the use of troops in executing judicial process and enforcing the revenue and other civil laws seemed to increase rather than diminish the apparent necessity of resorting to such force in civil matters. The ill disposed become more and more exasperated at being coerced by a force which they think has been unconstitutionally employed against them, and the better disposed relax their efforts to punish local crimes, on the plea that this duty now devolves on the military. Hence in the case of a murder or a robbery there is a call for Federal troops to arrest and guard the criminals.—General Halleck's report, 1870.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The question was upon Mr. MILLS's amendment to add the following:

Provided, That this section shall not apply on the Mexican border or in the execution of the neutrality laws elsewhere on the national boundary lines.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out the last two words. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is a most unwise amendment and cannot be otherwise than pernicious if adopted. But there is one class of men, I apprehend, that would be glad to have such an amendment as this adopted. There is a class of men in Kentucky, who are sometimes called "moonshiners," who make whisky and never pay the tax upon it when they sell it, and they will be pleased to hear of the adoption of such an amendment as this. I do not know but there may be some other classes. But how it is possible for any good citizen to favor this amendment is past my comprehension.

However, I do not rise so much to make any remarks myself as to have read a memorial of the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago. And I desire to say that this Board of Trade of Chicago is perhaps known to some gentlemen here as a body of men who have larger commercial transactions among its members than any other similar body of men in the United States. They have not been backward in any good work or philanthropic enterprise, whether North or South, whether for the benefit of those suffering from the terrible scourge of the yellow fever, or from other calamities, like the grasshopper plague in the West or the great fires in the eastern cities and elsewhere. No other body of men have been more ready and willing to come forward and assist with a liberality unparalleled all benevolent and worthy enterprises. I ask the Clerk to read the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

The memorial of the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled respectfully represents that—

Whereas a bill is now pending before your honorable bodies proposing to limit the Army of the United States to twenty or twenty-five thousand men; and

Whereas a standing Army of such insignificant proportions as is contemplated in this bill will, in the judgment of this board and we believe of the country generally, be wholly insufficient for the proper protection of our frontier settlements against the depredations of hostile Indian bands now well organized and amply supplied with the material for effective warfare, and against the incursions of the lawless element along our Mexican border, where scenes of murder and pillage upon the citizens of the United States are of so common an occurrence as to appeal to our sense of justice that these helpless people should be protected by their own Government against the outlaws of humanity and civilization; and

Whereas the experience of the past year in the destruction of life and property in several of the States resulting from the so-called labor riots has impressed the country with the absolute necessity of having at hand an ample armed force, disconnected in sympathy with the instigators of such riotous proceedings; a force that is able and willing to accomplish for the maintenance or restoration of public order and obedience to law what the local or State authorities with their insufficient force are incapable of accomplishing so readily, if at all; and

Whereas true economy, both in human life and in money expenditure, dictates that reasonable preparation for emergencies tends to avert the occurrence of acts of public disorder; and as the organization of the United States Army is peculiarly well adapted to exercise a restraining influence against all demonstrations of lawlessness, and in a country of such vast extent as ours seems a necessity to maintain both the peace of society and the dignity of the Government: Therefore,

Your memorialists pray your honorable bodies respectfully but earnestly that provision be made by law for the increase and maintenance of the Army to full one hundred regiments of one thousand men each, to the end that all parts of our country may feel that it has something like adequate protection against the emergency liable to arise of complications from without or demonstrations of violence within our own territory.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Respectfully submitted by order and on behalf of the Board of Trade of the City of Chicago.

WILLIAM DICKINSON,
Vice-President.

Attest:
CHAS. RANDOLPH, Secretary.
CHICAGO, May 24, 1878.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EDEN. I would ask my colleague if he would be willing to employ a half million of men in order to preserve the peace in their locality, and dispense with sheriffs, constables, and courts.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly I would not, nor have I intimated anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the formal amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I renew the formal amendment. In view of the past use of troops in connection with the elections, it seems to me that there can be no wiser provision ingrafted upon this bill than the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.] In a general order from the Adjutant-General's Office, dated September 7, 1876, I find quoted instructions of the Attorney-General addressed to United States marshals. By those instructions the marshals of elections were authorized to supervise the registration and the voting and all the various acts in relation to the elections during that year. In addition to that I find that the instructions of the Attorney-General expressly put the Army of the United States that happens to be in the locality in charge of the marshals. I read from the instructions of the Attorney-General:

SIR: The laws of the United States having made it my duty to exercise general direction over marshals in the manner of discharging their offices, I have prepared for their use this circular-letter of instructions as to the coming elections, intending the same also as a reply once for all to numerous applications, in like connections, from private citizens in various States.

In this connection I advise that you, and each of your deputies, general and special, have a right to summon to your assistance, in preventing and quelling disorder, every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies, (whether of the State or the United States,) under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

The troops of the United States were put in charge of these election marshals, who were authorized to order them out and direct their movements by an express order of the Attorney-General of the United States.

Not only were these marshals instructed to use the posse comitatus of the military of the United States that happened to be in the particular locality, but the General of the Army, the Secretary of War, and the President of the United States saw to it that a posse comitatus was provided in all these localities where they desired it, in order that it might thereafter be called out by these marshals.

The abuse in this connection was in sending the military into these districts with the view of having them used by the marshals of elections.

These soldiers do not court this kind of service; they would gladly be relieved from it. I admire the bravery, the heroism, and the patriotism of the American soldiers as much as any man, and I would be the last to do them injustice. But it is not justice to the soldiers to compel them to perform this police duty whether in connection with elections or local troubles in the cities and in the States.

The people of this country are a law-abiding people. The States are capable of preserving peace within their own borders. The laboring-men are as patriotic and as devoted to the Constitution, the laws, and the principles of liberty as any other class of citizens, and no army is needed to keep them in subjection.

Call upon the laboring-man to aid in the enforcement of the law and he will respond right manfully. If the institutions of this country are to be preserved and law and order maintained, you must depend upon the patriotism of the people, upon the men who labor for their bread, as well as those who are favored with wealth.

I say, then, that when we undertake to limit the Army to its legitimate purposes the proposition should receive unanimous support in this House.

Mr. ELLIS. The first portion of the pending amendment provides that the Army of the United States shall not be used as a posse comitatus for the enforcement of the laws, except as authorized by law of Congress; and the second portion of the amendment provides a penalty against him who may execute an unlawful order.

With the experience of this Government for the last eight years, I cannot conceive how any one who is really in favor of the Constitution of his country and the institutions that we all so love can be opposed to this amendment. It may not perhaps be known to gentlemen on the other side, but it is known to me and to every southern member on this floor, that the greatest abuses have been permitted under the pretext of employing the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus for the enforcement of the law.

Look at the 5th of December, 1872, in the city of New Orleans, where on that night, in obedience to the orders of the United States marshal and under the plausible pretext of enforcing the laws of the United States, troops occupied the capital of the State and absolutely impaneled a Legislature, declared who was elected, declared who was not elected, and permitted no one to pass to the halls of the representatives of the people unless he bore the badge of the United States marshal; and all this under the pretext of the enforcement of the law.

Again, in 1874, United States marshals, under pretext of enforcing the law, and being in full sympathy and affiliation with the then dominant party in this country, called out the United States troops. Major Lew Merrill responded, and under his commands blank warrants were issued under which arrests were made at midnight through Northern Louisiana for the sole purpose of political effect; and this was all done under the pretext of the enforcement of the law.

Again, on the 5th of January, 1875, this country witnessed what was perhaps the saddest and most shameful spectacle it had ever beheld, when a Frenchman employed in the United States Army, a man who had perhaps learned his ideas of our Constitution from the howls of the revolution in his own country, General De Trobriand, in obedience to the orders which he had received from a superior officer, invaded a State capital, went into the legislative halls where the representatives of the people were sitting, and upon the ipse dixit of a usurper thrust out the chosen representatives of the people and thrust in those whom that usurper would have there; and all under the pretext of the enforcement of the law.

There was no remedy. Would you have court-martialed him? He would merely have been summoned before a board of officers imbued with the idea that the order of a superior is above the Constitution of the country. What remedy could there be? It is just and proper that these men by having this penalty incorporated into the law should be made to study the Constitution of their country. All writers agree that the tendency of armies in a republic is always toward aristocracy, while, on the contrary, under a monarchical government the army is always democratic in its leanings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not impossible that a soldier of the United States may be imbued with the principles of the Constitution of his country. I have in my mind's eye one who never disregarded it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BANNING obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. ELLIS.

Mr. ELLIS. I thank the gentleman. I was saying I knew one soldier and a great soldier—one whom we on this side often met in the field and whom we love and honor and respect—who is acquainted with the Constitution of his country. When he was sent to command the fifth military district, armed with the powers of a despot, Winfield Scott Hancock knew how to administer the law and yet have regard to the Constitution of his country. Again, when he was appointed to serve upon a court of inquiry to examine into the charges against General Babcock in connection with the whisky frauds, he said to his fellow-members of that court, holding up the Constitution and law of his country:

A military commission cannot properly inquire into this until the civil tribunals which have already taken jurisdiction have uttered their voice upon it.

It is not too late to cause the officers of our Army to study the Constitution, that they may in the future inflict no serious blows upon it or upon the rights of the people and the rights of States.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that we have heard so many upon this floor regret the introduction of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. In a state of profound peace, and with the well-known views and policies of the Executive, it is a matter of surprise that the amendment should be offered at this time and a debate introduced which cannot possibly have any good effect upon the country. I would not ask a single moment of time but for some remarks made a few days ago by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD,] who has to-day again addressed the House in regard to the use of the Army for electioneering purposes. It has been insisted here by many members, and by him especially, (for this idea evidently rests heavily upon his mind,) that the Army in its use during the late presidential election changed the result of that election; in other words, that wherever there was a squad of Federal soldiers a different result was reached from what it would have been if the Federal troops had not been present.

I deny that the troops anywhere interfered at all with the free exercise of the elective franchise by any citizen of the United States during the presidential election of 1876. I insist it is not in evidence that the presence of the troops at any point aided in the election of President Hayes or increased by a single vote the republican vote in any precinct in this country.

I happened to be a member of the committee that went to Florida to investigate the frauds alleged to have been committed in the election in that State. We had before us as witnesses a class of democrats who would have sworn to the adverse influence of the Federal troops if they could have done so, but there is not a line of evidence anywhere in the testimony tending to show that the presence of the Federal troops at all affected the vote in the State. I remember that the chairman of the democratic county committee in one of the counties testified in the investigation that the troops gave to them there a quiet, orderly election, and that not an officer or a soldier interfered at all with the free exercise of the elective franchise. I deny that troops were used to intimidate. I deny that they were used to keep from the polls a single democratic voter. There is no such evidence. The gentleman from Ohio has more than once pretended that the Army controlled the election in 1876. The Army, I am glad to say, preserved the peace in many a voting-precinct, but it lessened not a Tilden vote anywhere. It is not in evidence that it did. If there is evidence anywhere it is upon the other side, showing that in South Carolina and in some other States the colored men did not vote as they might have voted but for the presence of the Federal troops.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAYES obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. DUNNELL.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to call the attention of the House to some evidence which I have here in a report in the contested-election case of Tillman vs. Smalls. I find here a table which is significant, because it furnishes me the vote in the county of Edgefield, South Carolina. In our current political discussions, South Carolina has been cited as the field of the operations of a portion of the Federal Army, and it has been asserted that the vote of that State for President Hayes was what it was because the Federal troops were there. Now, let us look at the vote in the county of Edgefield. In 1875 there were in that county 2,722 white voters. In 1875 there were 4,400 colored voters. Let us see how the presence of a few Federal troops at Edgefield, (and Heaven knows that if Federal troops were needed anywhere they were needed at Edgefield,) let us see how those troops affected the democratic vote in that county. The white voters were 2,722, and they voted for Tillman 6,252. How terribly "bulldozed" those 2,722 white voters were, in that they voted for Tillman, the democratic candidate for Congress, 6,352 votes.

Another fact. There were of colored voters 4,400, and yet Mr. SMALLS gets but 3,120. The aggregate vote in that county was 9,372, and yet in 1875, the year before, the aggregate vote was but 7,172. There you have an increase which is wonderful, and I ask the gentleman if the presence of those Federal troops in that county at all intimidated the democratic voters? I should think the gentleman from Ohio would be glad to have Federal troops scattered around in certain portions of the country after such a result had been produced.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Does not the gentleman think that the troops interfered with democratic voters when sentinels were placed at the legislative halls and drove away the representatives lawfully elected by the people?

Mr. DUNNELL. We have heard a good deal about that.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it not true?

Mr. DUNNELL. No.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky it is only to impose a penalty for the violation of law, a penalty upon officers of the Army as well as upon civilians. Whatever it is lawful for an officer or a soldier of the Army to do as the law now exists I understand it will be lawful for him to do after this amendment has been adopted. The effect of the amendment will be to make him liable penally as he is now civilly for violation of the law.

This amendment has been opposed upon what appears to me to be very singular ground, singular indeed to come from a democrat. As I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PRIDEMORE] he opposes this law because according to him a soldier or an officer when commanded by his superior officer is above the law and not amenable to the law. I beg leave to read to the committee an extract from the opinion of Chief-Justice Taney in the case of Mitchell vs. Harmony, 13 Howard, 135, 136:

> The case mentioned by Lord Mansfield in delivering his opinion in Mostyn vs. Fabrigas, 1 Cowp., 180, illustrates the principle of which we are speaking. Captain Gambier, of the British navy, by the order of Admiral Boscawen, pulled down the houses of some sutlers on the coast of Nova Scotia, who were supplying the sailors with spirituous liquors, the health of the sailors being injured by frequenting them. The motive was evidently a laudable one, and the act done for the public service. Yet it was an invasion of the rights of private property, and without the authority of law, and the officer who executed the order was held liable to an action and the sutlers recovered damages against him to the value of the property destroyed.
> This case shows how carefully the rights of private property are guarded by the laws of England; and they are certainly not less valued nor less securely guarded under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

There is scarcely a thing which by the Constitution and laws of the United States it is unlawful for a civilian to do upon the doing of which the law does not impose a penalty. To say we will impose no penalty upon officers of the Army or soldiers for violations of law is to place them above the law and is to make the law silent against the military not only in time of war but in time of peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I renew it and yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. I have only a word more to say. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] asks whether this amendment proceeded from a chronic fear on this side of the House that the Army would be unlawfully used. I tell him just so long as this side of the House sees on that side a chronic disposition to use the Army for unlawful purposes just so long there will be a chronic disposition on this side to defend the liberties of the citizen.

Mr. GARDNER. Very manifestly the proposition now before the committee is purely partisan and offered for the purpose only of subserving party ends. No better evidence is needed of this than the arguments presented in behalf of the measure. Never, perhaps, in the history of the country has such extraordinary legislation been attempted. We are not the representatives of our respective parties merely. Ours is a higher duty, and could we rise above party and attain to statesmanship and honestly endeavor to legislate within constitutional bounds and for the right I do not believe this measure would have an advocate in this Hall.

Section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution clearly defines the powers of the Executive in regard to the use of the Army, and no law can be passed by Congress to limit or prohibit it. The Executive, upon demand of a State Legislature or governor, is by this constitutional provision clothed with power to use the Army to suppress domestic violence, and this power does not depend upon congressional legislation, but exists fully in the absence of all legislation.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him to read the constitutional provision?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman represents the Executive of the United States as having upon the demand of the executive or the Legislature of a State the right to use the Army.

Mr. GARDNER. The language of the Constitution is this:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

That is the constitutional provision. But does the gentleman from Virginia pretend to say that the Executive of the United States, if Congress were not in session and a demand being made by the Legislature or the executive of a State for the use of the Army to suppress insurrection or domestic violence, would have no power to comply with that application without an act of Congress to authorize it?

Mr. TUCKER. I unquestionably maintain that the President would have no right to use the Army or Navy of the United States unless under authority of some act of Congress. That has been settled by statutory precedents ever since the act of 1795.

Mr. GARDNER. The President, under the provisions of the Constitution, is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; and he, upon the demand of the executives of the several States, has the power without congressional action to use the Army for the purpose of suppressing insurrection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will my colleague allow me to make one remark?

Mr. GARDNER. In a moment. Does the gentleman from Virginia fail to recollect the fact that Washington during his administration in 1794, before the act of 1795, sent the Army into Pennsylvania for the purpose of suppressing the whisky insurrection without authority from Congress to do so, that being soon after the making of this Constitution, which shows how it was understood by those who made it? This provision of the Constitution was intended to afford a speedy and summary suppression of domestic violence, and of course the control of the Army for this purpose is in the Commander-in-Chief, who is, by the terms of the Constitution, the President.

Congress is empowered by the Constitution to "raise and support armies," but is nowhere authorized or empowered to command them. It may "make rules for the government of the land and naval forces," but it cannot direct when or where they may be used. "It may declare war," but the President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, directs its management.

And section 4 of article 4, which provides that "the United States" shall protect the States from domestic violence or from invasion, &c., clothed the Executive with the power to use the Army to carry out this constitutional requirement. Nor can Congress render this right of protection due the States and this power of the Executive to enforce it nugatory by refusing to legislate that it may be done or by any legislation prohibiting it.

The doctrine announced by the gentleman from Virginia and the spirit of the amendment would practically give to Congress the management and control of the Army and divest the President of his constitutional power over it; and whatever may be the exigencies, unless Congress shall by positive enactment provide, the President would be powerless to protect the States or people from domestic violence or insurrection. This doctrine is not only untenable, but, if carried into effect, subversive of Government itself.

I will now hear my colleague.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The difficulty in the last presidential election was this: the Constitution provides the President may protect a State against invasion or domestic violence upon the call of the Legislature, or, if the Legislature cannot be convened, then upon the call of the governor. In the case of Florida there was no such call from the governor or the Legislature.

Mr. GARDNER. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky would prohibit the exercise of the constitutional power of the President, which my colleague concedes is vested in him. It provides—

> That it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus or otherwise under the pretext or for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by act of Congress.

If my colleague [Mr. SOUTHARD] could get the presidential question out of his mind long enough to consider this bill for the interests of the country, and not in the interest of the democratic party solely, I think he would be able to see the right more clearly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I desire to be recognized, and give my time to my colleague, [Mr. GARDNER.]

Mr. PAGE. I ask the gentleman from New York to withhold his motion that the committee rise till the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARDNER] shall have had an opportunity to complete his remarks.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I must insist on my motion.

The motion of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. And pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section be closed in ten minutes.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4867) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes. By order of the House all debate on the pending section has been limited to ten minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to reply to the assertion made by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] in which he denied that in the last election the military interfered with it in any manner. I desire to say that in so far as the conduct of the United States Army who were stationed in my district was concerned, I will testify to their gentlemanly conduct and their good character as officers, and that in no case previous to the election or until a short time previous to it did they interfere in any manner with the election. But, sir, a short time before the election, and during the canvass, an officer had been appointed under an order from the War Department, which erected five parishes in my district and two in the State of Mississippi into a military district, giving him full power to exercise military authority to any extent to which in his judgment he had a right to go. Previous to the election troops were stationed in the parishes of West Feliciana and East Feliciana and the parish of West Baton Rouge.

I am personally acquainted with the officers who were stationed at Bayou Sara and East Feliciana; they are republicans, but they are gentlemen, and they did not interfere with the election. A short time previous to the election the infantry were mounted for some purpose or other, and under a pretext of exercising the troops squads of them were sent through the parish, not under a commanding officer, but under an officer who belonged to the quartermaster's department or the commissary department, and those troops took occasion to create the impression in the minds of some that there would be interference, and morally there was an interference by the creation of the idea that the troops intended to interfere. [Laughter on the republican side of the House.] They rode all through the parish and created that impression, intimidating, not republicans, but those colored democrats who had joined our party, many of whom were afraid on the day of election to come to the polls without an assurance on our part that we would protect them, and some of them remained at their homes on the morning of the election. A squad of armed men crossed the river from the opposite side to the parish of West Baton Rouge and passed the court-house there, where the polls were held, or within a hundred yards of it. And the moment that those soldiers passed in front of the polls the parties who had been appointed by the supervisor of registration as special constables went to the democratic voters and took from them the democratic tickets they held in their hands, and with threats of violence told them that they had no right to vote that ticket, and forced them to vote the republican ticket.

I state this to be true and state it to be a fact, but I will state in justice to the officers in command that whether these soldiers were there under orders or not I do not know, but they were there, armed and equipped.

Mr. BANNING. Were these United States soldiers?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes; in the uniform of the United States troops and with their cartridge-boxes and arms; and they were under the charge of a non-commissioned officer.

Mr. RYAN. I want to ask the gentleman from Louisiana if he does not remember that under the last democratic administration which this Government had, which was elected as such, the troops were not employed to disperse the Legislature of the State of Kansas?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not know anything about that, but I saw these troops riding around myself. I saw no interference by the officers with the civil authorities in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then the gentleman does not say that any Federal or military officer or Federal troops at all interfered in the election?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not intend to say that they did actually; but I say the effect of it was that these troops did ride around, I presume under the authority of their commanding officer, and that they were kept in a squad under the command of a non-commissioned officer. I can cite one instance in which the officers did interfere with the civil authorities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this amendment is exhausted, and the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] which will now be read.

The Clerk read Mr. KNOTT's amendment, as follows:

> Insert the following as an additional section:
> From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States, as a posse comitatus or otherwise, under the pretext or for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by act of Congress; and no money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any of the expenses incurred in the employment of any troops in violation of this section; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine, not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The question was put; and on division there were—ayes 105, noes 110.

Mr. FINLEY called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KNOTT and Mr. DUNNELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes 112.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. We will have the yeas and nays on that amendment in the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. We have now passed through the entire bill, and I ask unanimous consent to go back in the bill to make some corrections in figures, which are rendered necessary by amendments which have been made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move upon page 2, line 11, to strike out "$50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$80,000;" so that it will read:

> For expenses of recruiting and the transportation of recruits, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now move in lines 53, 54, and 55, on page 3, to strike out "$255,830.20" and to insert in lieu thereof "$310,000;" so that it will read:

> For retained pay to discharged men, $310,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now move, on pages 3 and 4, in lines 59, 60, and 61, to strike out "$343,278.33" and to insert in lieu thereof "$400,000;" so that it will read:

> For pay to soldiers for clothing not drawn, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. On page 4 I move to strike out the paragraph included within the lines from 70 to 74, as follows:

For pay of officers rendered supernumerary by the operation of this act, from July 1, 1878, to January 1, 1879, date hereinafter fixed for their discharge, $497,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I also move to strike out the following:

For pay and allowances to be paid to officers in consideration of their discharge by operation of this act, $2,400,000: Provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out on page 4 of the printed bill, in lines 79, 80, and 81, "$13,489,287.18," and insert in lieu thereof "$12,272,932."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out in the paragraph relating to the subsistence department, the following at the close of the paragraph:

Less $300,000, heretofore appropriated, leaving a net appropriation under this act of $1,915,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000" for purchase of horses for the cavalry, artillery, Indian scouts, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. After line 188 in the printed bill I move to insert that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in case any item of the said appropriation for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, and Army transportation shall prove insufficient for this purpose, the excess in any of these items may, with the written consent of the Secretary of War, be applied thereto: Provided, however, That the total amount appropriated under these heads shall not be exceeded.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. That amendment applies to the Quartermaster's Department the same provision that is applied to the Pay department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. These are the only amendments which the committee has to offer to the bill. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4867) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I now call the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to have a separate vote upon every amendment except those correcting the amounts appropriated in order to make them correspond with the other amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that we simply reserve the right to demand separate votes on the amendments; perhaps when they are read we may not want separate votes on many of the amendments.

Mr. CONGER. That is all I desire.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole upon which no separate votes were asked were agreed to.

The first amendment upon which a separate vote was asked was in line 13, to strike out "twenty thousand" and insert "twenty-five thousand;" so that it would read as follows:

And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of twenty-five thousand enlisted men, including Indian scouts and hospital stewards.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask for a separate vote upon that amendment, and call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 120, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—116.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware. I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. LUTTRELL, who is detained from the House by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. ROBBINS, is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would "no." He is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING.

Mr. FREEMAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. SLEMONS. If he were present, I do not know how he would vote; I should vote "ay."

Mr. LIGON. My colleague from Alabama, Mr. WILLIAMS, is confined to his bed by sickness.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. STARIN. Were he here, I should vote "no."

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman from New York, Mr. BEEBE, is paired with his colleague, Mr. KETCHAM; Mr. COX, of New York, is paired with Mr. BUNDY; and Mr. HENRY with Mr. KILLINGER.

[The announcement here made was corrected by Mr. EDEN at a later stage of the proceedings.]

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JORGENSEN. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, who is paired with my colleague, Mr. TIPTON, would, if present, vote "no."

Mr. REILLY. I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. WHITE. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. KENNA. My colleague, Mr. MARTIN, is paired with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PUGH. My colleague requested me to state that, if not paired, he would vote "no."

Mr. COVERT. On this proposition I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. TOWNSEND. Were he present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. EVANS. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLAFLIN. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no." The gentleman from New York, Mr. VEEDER, is paired with his colleague, Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. VEEDER, if present, would vote "no" and Mr. KETCHAM would vote "ay."

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT. I am informed by his colleagues that, if he were here, he would vote "ay." But for the pair, I should vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. SMITH, is paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WALKER.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BLISS. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. HENDERSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. DURHAM. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. TIPTON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. KNAPP. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. JAMES. My colleague, Mr. STARIN, is paired with my colleague, Mr. MULLER. Mr. STARIN, if present, would vote "ay."

When the roll-call was concluded,

Mr. GARFIELD (who when his name was called had voted in the affirmative) said: I change my vote from "ay" to "no." I do this for the purpose of moving a reconsideration.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. GARFIELD, and Mr. HEWITT of New York, addressed the Chair.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected, and moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that as a matter of courtesy on the part of the Chair a gentleman who changes his vote for the purpose of moving a reconsideration is entitled to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, who is in charge of the bill and who voted with the majority, was entitled to be recognized. If the gentleman from Ohio gave an insincere vote it is not the fault of the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. I gave a sincere vote for a purpose which under the rulings of this House I have never before known the Speaker to decline to recognize. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was bound by every parliamentary practice that has ever been known in this House to recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have never heard of any such practice in this House.

Mr. REED. The Chair had no right to make to the gentleman from Ohio the remark that he did.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Ohio undertakes to reflect on the Chair the Chair proposes to defend himself.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Ohio did not undertake to reflect on the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected, and also moves that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH. Pending that I move that the House adjourn.

The question being put, the Speaker declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 106, nays 127, not voting 58; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the vote,

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, stated that he was paired with Mr. LUTTRELL, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. LIGON stated that his colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, was detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. WILSON stated that his colleague, Mr. MARTIN, was paired with Mr. PUGH, and that, if present, Mr. MARTIN would vote in the negative.

Mr. REILLY stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. WHITE, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, stated that his colleague, Mr. KNAPP, was paired with his other colleague, Mr. TIPTON.

Mr. MCKENZIE stated that Mr. WIGGINTON was paired with Mr. WELCH.

Mr. SHELLEY stated that he was paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. COVERT stated that he was paired with his colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND, who, if present, would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. BAYNE stated that his colleague, Mr. WATSON, was paired with Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky, and that, if present, Mr. WATSON would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FREEMAN stated that he was paired with Mr. SLEMONS.

Mr. HENDERSON stated that he was paired with Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, on the last vote I made a mistake in announcing pairs, which I wish to correct. I announced that Mr. BEEBE was paired with Mr. KETCHAM, when he was paired with Mr. BUNDY. I made the mistake owing to having an old pair and taking that instead of the new one. I made the mistake also in announcing that Mr. BUNDY was paired with Mr. COX, of New York. The mistake was all mine.

Mr. BANNING. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. VEEDER.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe I called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 121, nays 114, not voting 56; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, said: I am paired with Mr. LUTTRELL, of California. If he were here, he would vote in the negative and I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. LIGON. My colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JORGENSEN. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is paired with my other colleague, Mr. TIPTON. Mr. KNAPP would vote in the affirmative and Mr. TIPTON would vote in the negative.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague, Mr. MARTIN, is paired with Mr. PUGH. If Mr. MARTIN were here, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. REILLY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WHITE. If he were here, he would vote in the negative and I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COX, of New York. I am paired with Mr. BUNDY, who left the Hall because of illness, and under the impression I would pair with him for the rest of the day. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BOUCK. I am paired with Mr. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative. I wish also to announce that Mr. VEEDER, of New York, is paired with his colleague, Mr. KETCHAM. If Mr. VEEDER were here, he would vote in the affirmative and Mr. KETCHAM would vote in the negative.

Mr. FREEMAN. I am paired with Mr. SLEMONS, of Arkansas. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague, Mr. SMITH, is paired with Mr. WALKER, of Virginia. If Mr. SMITH were here, he would vote in the negative.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BLISS. If he were present, I would vote in the negative.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. SEXTON is paired with Mr. FULLER. If Mr. SEXTON were here he would vote "no" and Mr. FULLER would vote "ay."

Mr. BROWNE. My colleague, Mr. BAKER, is paired with Mr. DURHAM. Mr. BAKER would vote "no" and Mr. DURHAM would vote "ay."

Mr. BAYNE. My colleague, Mr. WATSON, is paired with Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. Mr. WATSON would vote "no."

Mr. HENDERSON. I am paired with Mr. BUCKNER. If he were here, I would vote "no" and he would vote "ay."

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana. If he were here, I would vote "ay."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. Mr. CAMP is paired with Mr. BENEDICT. Mr. BENEDICT would vote "ay" and Mr. CAMP would vote "no."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House, in order that others besides the Speaker may not think my vote insincere, that my vote be recorded in favor of the adoption of the amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Let the next amendment be read.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

In line 15 after the word "twenty" insert "five;" so that it will read:
Thereafter there shall be no more than twenty-five thousand enlisted men in the Army at any one time.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was not agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAGLEY: The petition of James Wyman, for an extension of a patent for a machine for setting staples in blind-slats—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BALLOU: The petition of publishers, printers, binders, and others interested in the manufacture and sale of books, against any change of duties on books without a thorough investigation of its bearing, and if any change is made, that the duty be made specific instead of ad valorem—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BANKS: The petition of G. H. Thyrus and 30 other citizens of Massachusetts, against any modification of the patent laws affecting seventeen-year patents—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BOONE: The petition of Dr. J. F. Stone and 260 other citizens of Calloway County, Kentucky, for a post-route from Murray, Kentucky, to New Buffalo, via New Providence and New Concord—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. COX, of Ohio: The petition of Professor Alexander C. Twining, for an extension of a patent for a machine for making ice—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FENN: The petition of Catharine Eliza Osborn, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARTH: The petition of citizens of Huntsville, Alabama, and vicinity, favoring Memphis, Tennessee, as the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. HARDENBERGH: Papers relating to the petition of George W. Labaw, for extension of a patent for a machine for cutting miters—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HARMER: The petitions of publishers, booksellers, paper-makers, printers, binders, and others interested in the manufacture and sale of books, that if any change be made in the duty on books it may be by changing from an ad valorem to a specific duty—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama: The petition of Hon. J. D. Terrell and others, citizens of Marion County, Alabama, for the passage of House bill No. 1670—to the same committee.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of the American Iron and Steel Association, for an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of testing iron and steel—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JAMES: The petition of 60 book-binders, paper-makers, and others, against altering the tariff on books and the materials of which they are made—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of the same parties, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of the same parties, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: The petition of the same parties, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The petition of Kendall Council, No. 13, of the District of Columbia, of the Sovereigns of Industry, for such a law as will secure full weight to purchasers of coal—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RICE, of Ohio: The petitions of Mrs. Sarah Jennings and Edward Newman, for pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEELE: The petition of R. P. Waring, W. H. Bailey, John E. Brown, and 180 other citizens of North Carolina, for the establishment of a United States court at Charlotte, North Carolina—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: The petition of Frank Cleaves and others, for an appropriation to pay the awards of the joint commission organized under the treaty of July 4, 1868, between the United States and Mexico—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WIGGINTON: A paper relating to the establishment of certain post-routes in California—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky: Papers relating to the pension claim of Patrick Cody—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 28, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 13th instant, a letter from the Chief of Engineers and the accompanying report of the advisory board in relation to the harbor of Norfolk, Virginia, with an estimate of the cost of the improvements proposed; which, on motion of Mr. JOHNSTON, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 16th ultimo, copies of the record of proceedings of the naval examining board in the case of Captain Somerville Nicholson, United States Navy, for promotion; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, a copy of the printed memorial of B. F. Overton, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, praying for a rehearing in the matter of the Chickasaw permit law; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALLACE presented the memorial of Manchester Council No. 254, Order of United American Mechanics, of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and the memorial of Coalfield Council No. 290, Order of United American Mechanics, of Summit Hill, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any change in the present tariff laws; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Allan C. Bakewell & Co., of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the bill providing for the refunding to Miller & Richards of a fine imposed upon them for undervaluing a lot of goods passed through the custom-house at San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in favor of an appropriation of $10,000 for the survey of the Delaware River below League Island; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the centennial board of finance, praying that the expenses of the commission appointed by the Government of the United States on the occasion of the centennial exhibition in Philadelphia be paid by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the memorial of P. Lorillard & Co., citizens of Jersey City, New Jersey, engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, who respectfully set forth that, "by reason of the discussions which have taken place relative to a contemplated reduction of the rate of tax on tobacco, their business, as well as the general tobacco manufacturing industry of the country, has been seriously paralyzed." The memorial contains many important statistics and facts in relation to the tobacco interest. At the proper time I shall submit a resolution in relation to the subject, and I shall ask for its immediate consideration. I now move that the memorial lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I present several petitions from steamboat owners, inspectors, pilots, &c., on the Mississippi River, praying for the removal of the local board of inspectors from Galena, Illinois, to Dubuque, Iowa. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago, Illinois, praying Congress to make provision by law for the increase and maintenance of the Army to full one hundred regiments, of one thousand men each, "to the end that all parts of the country may feel that they have something like adequate protection against the emergencies liable to arise from combinations without or demonstrations within the United States;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 10) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the Smithsonian Institution certain canceled plates of fractional currency to be held as objects of interest, reported adversely thereon, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 551) to repeal section 2917 of the Revised Statutes fixing a standard for vinegar, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL. I am also directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4988) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute superintendents of mints or assayers in assay offices assistant treasurers of the United States, to report it favorably. I do not know that there will be any objection to its present passage; it is a House bill; it merely authorizes the appointment of additional assistant treasurers at assay offices and mints for the purpose of receiving gold bullion and coin for which certificates can be used. If there is no objection, I will ask to have it passed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be reported.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I think it had better go over and not interrupt proceedings now, but that we should get through with the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 571) to enable Albert Fuller to have a hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4874) for the relief of the sureties of John McNellis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 408) for the relief of Charles Brewster, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MAXEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War, communicating a substitute proposed by the Adjutant-General of the United States Army for section 5485 of the Revised Statutes, relative to attorney fees in claims for bounty, to report it back. The section 5485 relates to fees for prosecuting claims to bounties and pensions, and the cognate sections, sections 4785 and 4786, relate in like manner to pensions and bounty lands. It is not therefore in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, as we consider, and we report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Samuel Lowery, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1270) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission-land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, as the subject covered by the bill refers entirely to the title to lands in the Territories and the States named, and in no event, whatever the result would be, would it become public domain. It is a question of claim to title between mission societies and private parties. I therefore move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberation of the fisheries commission with accompanying papers, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill and a concurrent resolution.

The report was ordered to be printed; and the bill (S. No. 1328) providing for the payment of the award made by the fisheries commission at Halifax under the treaty of Washington, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let the concurrent resolution be also printed and placed on the Calendar.

The concurrent resolution was read, and ordered to be printed; as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the views and recommendations embraced in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, touching the award made by the fisheries commission at Halifax, are hereby approved.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. McDONALD. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1277) to extend the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the southern district of Florida, to report it with an amendment, and to recommend its passage. I should like, as it will occupy no time except to read it, that the bill may be presently considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs that the southern judicial district of the State of Florida shall embrace the counties of Hernando, Hillsborough, Polk, Manatee, and Monroe, in that State; and all the territory within the remaining counties shall constitute the northern judicial district.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to add at the end of the second section:

But the same shall be proceeded in to final disposition as if this act had not been passed.

So as to make the section read:

That a term of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall be held in each year at Tampa, in said district, commencing on the first Monday in March: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair or affect the jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Florida in any case, civil or criminal, pending therein at the time of the passage of this act; but the same shall be proceeded in to final disposition as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRUCE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1329) for the relief of Eliza J. Mahan and Sophia G. Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McDONALD (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1330) to quiet title of settlers on Des Moines River Lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1331) to amend the practice in the courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1332) granting a pension to John G. Merritt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1333) for the relief of Joel S. Hankins and William Boyd, citizens of Lamar County, State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McPHERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1334) for the relief of James Wyman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Patents.

TAX ON TOBACCO.

Mr. McPHERSON. I submit the following resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration:

Whereas many petitions have been presented to Congress praying for a reduction in the rate of tax on tobacco; and

Whereas it is expedient that the Senate give an immediate expression of opinion on this subject to the end that the tobacco-manufacturing industries of the country may resume and continue their business with safety (so far as the action of Congress may affect the same) and thereby give employment to thousands of operatives now thrown out of employment, causing great suffering and distress: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is unwise and inexpedient at the present session of Congress to change the existing rate of tax on manufactured tobacco.

Mr. WITHERS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution, and ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

TRANSPORTATION ROUTES TO THE SEABOARD.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 700 copies of the first volume of the report of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. MORGAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. CONOVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 942) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WALLACE and Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LOCATION OF LAND-SCRIP.

Mr. EUSTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 109) defining the manner in which certain land-scrip may be assigned and located or applied by actual settlers, and providing for the issue of patents in the name of the locator or his legal representatives.

Mr. MITCHELL. On Friday last I stated to the Senate that I would ask the Senate on Monday, in the morning hour, to allow me to submit some remarks to the extent of about twenty minutes, on a proposition that I have before the Senate. I was crowded out on Monday. I also gave notice last evening that I should ask the indulgence of the Senate this morning for that purpose. It is something, I believe, that has not been refused, not very often at least. I hope the Senator from Louisiana will not press the consideration of that bill this morning. It will certainly lead to considerable discussion.

Mr. WHYTE. It has been discussed. The bill was up before. I do not think anybody wants to debate it further.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator think it will take any time?

Mr. WHYTE. No, sir; I do not think it will take five minutes. It was discussed when it was up before.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

Mr. WHYTE. And after it is disposed of no one will object to the Senator from Oregon taking the floor.

Mr. MITCHELL. I make no objection, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Louisiana?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING FOR BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have taken up the bill (S. No. 1178) to provide a fire-proof building for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mechanical branches of the Treasury and other Departments.

Mr. WHYTE. I asked the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to give way when this last bill was considered with the understanding, as I thought, that he was to have the opportunity of making a few remarks, not occupying more than twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think this bill will take ten minutes.

Mr. WHYTE. I felt it due to the Senator from Oregon to make the statement, whose modesty I saw would not allow him to ask for the privilege again.

Mr. MITCHELL. My modesty has always held me back considerably and I am very much obliged to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MORRILL. It is important to have this bill acted upon so that it may go to the House. It is regarded at the Treasury Department with a good deal of interest. It has been up once or twice and I do not think it will consume more than ten minutes of time. I ask, therefore, that it be taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1178) to provide a fire-proof building for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the mechanical branches of the Treasury and other Departments.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that this work must be done. It is not contemplated to do any more than is now done, but it is deemed very essential that this business should be removed from the Treasury Department, both on account of the damage it is doing the Treasury building to have it remain there and the peril there is in consequence of danger of fire. I may say that the bureau has saved this year over $600,000 in doing this work, and the site of the land that is to be obtained is considered the best possible within the reach of the Government, and is on the highest point of land in the south part of Washington. I hope, therefore, that the bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. THURMAN. When this bill was up before I expressed the opinion I entertained then, which I entertain still, that a portion of the work done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing could be done more economically and that it would be an element of safety to have it done by contract. I was never in favor of all the work being done by contract, although it did seem to me to be the fact that the Government almost always pays more for work that it does itself than it pays when it is done by contractors, and I had very grave doubts whether it would not be a saving of money to have all the work done by contract. In regard to the safety of the work, I did not share the apprehensions that were expressed by some Senators, when I recollected that all the work done for the Government before the creation of this bureau was done by contract, that all bank-notes in the country from the foundation of the Government up to the chartering of the national banks were done by engraving companies, that all the State bonds and coupons are done by engraving companies, that all the railroad bonds and coupons are done by engraving companies. When I thought of this immense amount of work done by these companies and that no fraud or wrong has ever been complained of so far as I know, it did seem to me that any apprehension of loss to the United States by this great work being done by engraving companies was not well founded.

Since this bill was up, I have had a very full and, to me, a very interesting conversation with the present head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I ought to have said, however, in respect to this bureau, that perhaps there is no department in the Government in which greater abuses have existed than in this bureau. It is only necessary to look at the report made by the commission appointed by the present Secretary of the Treasury, about a year ago, to investigate the affairs of that bureau to see that such abuses scarcely ever existed in any government. The number of employés was more than twice the number needed. There were so many that they were in each other's way; there were so many that about half of them had absolutely nothing to do whatever. In other words, that bureau was simply an eleemosynary institution for this District for a long time, and the proof of it is to be found in this simple fact, which is stated to me by the present head of the bureau, and which I will assume to be correct, because I have no reason to doubt his word: that he has cut down the expenses of the bureau $600,000 in one year. If that be so, it shows what monstrous abuses have existed there before. The head of the bureau tells me that in the last year the number of impressions made in that bureau amounted to more than a million, and the amount in value is very great indeed. He has convinced me that at least some portion of the work, and possibly the greater portion of the work, should be done by the Government. Under these circumstances, as the Government must have some place to do the work, whether it does all or whether it does any considerable share of it, I have made up my mind to forbear any further opposition to this bill on my part. I still must say that I have very great doubts whether or no a building of the size contemplated by the bill and perfectly fire-proof can be built for the money, but the chairman of the committee that reports the bill thinks it can, and the head of the bureau thinks it can, and they know better than I.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when this bill was last before the Senate I objected to its passage, giving as a reason that there seemed to be no contract made whereby we had any satisfactory assurance that the building would be constructed for anything like the price now estimated. I showed then, and repeat now, that there is hardly a public building or work of any importance in the country that was ever constructed for anything like the price that was first suggested as its cost.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if that is true of the management of the present Supervising Architect? That was the case formerly; but I ask whether that is true under Mr. Hill's administration?

Mr. BECK. I do not know that I can answer that question. I do not know, to begin with, how long the present Supervising Architect has been in office, or whether he has been in office from the time that any public work was begun.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not mean to say that the Post-Office building was the only building ever erected by the Government within the estimates. I am told that the Agricultural building was also built within the estimates. Those I think are the only two Government buildings ever built within the estimates.

Mr. BECK. What I was going to say was that when I was up before objecting to this bill I called attention to the immense cost above the first estimates of the post-office buildings in New York, Boston, and elsewhere, and said that I doubted the propriety of erecting this building until we had more careful estimates and absolute contracts made. But I have a more serious objection to it than that. I will not vote to begin any new buildings now that are not absolutely necessary. I do not believe the finances of the country warrant it; and while I am opposed to the bank-note companies taking control of the printing of this Government, while I agree, as the Secretary of the Treasury sets forth in his report to this Congress, that we have saved in printing the stamps on tobacco, cigars, liquors, &c., as against what was paid to the New York bank-note companies last year, $68,841.89 by having them printed here, and by printing the backs of legal-tender notes and five-dollar national currency notes (last year done by the Columbia Bank-Note Company of this city and now done at the bureau) there has been a reduction of $40,254.30, and that we have made a saving in the dies, paper, and other things necessary for printing purposes of sixty-eight thousand and odd dollars, making a total of $177,937 over what the companies charged us. These facts would be of themselves a sufficient inducement for me to retain the work in the hands of the Government.

Besides, I know that whenever the Government parts with the power and machinery necessary for the printing of its own notes and other securities the bank-note companies, however much cheaper they may do it in the first instance, the moment they get clear of Government competition they can put their prices up to any point they choose, and they will be sure to do it as soon as the competition is ended and the Government is left at their mercy. In that view I desire the Government to continue the work under its own control, at least to the extent that it now is. I agree further that the present superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has managed the business of his office well, so far as I am advised. Out of the $800,000 appropriated for the salaries and work of that bureau last year he has only expended $200,000. He has discharged five hundred and thirty-eight persons whose annual pay was $390,000, who were evidently there as supernumeraries. Of course there has been a reduction of printing, which aided him somewhat, because the fractional currency and many other things are being diminished, but nothing like in proportion to the discharges of supernumeraries; and so far as his management is concerned I have not a word to say except in approval, and if any new building is to be erected now perhaps this will be as good a point to begin as any other. But it must be apparent that the business of this bureau is diminishing and will diminish in the future very much. We have reduced already the stamps for internal revenue to whisky, tobacco, proprietary medicines, check-stamps, and stamps on match-boxes. A few years ago we had those stamps on nearly everything. There are now five hundred and thirty-eight persons less to be accommodated in that bureau than there were over a year ago, and all these people were employed and the work was then done in the Treasury building. If five hundred and thirty-eight more persons could work in that building than are now required, the necessity is certainly not as great for a new building as when all these people were there; and if the finances of the country will not permit it, it ought to be postponed to another time.

The Secretary of the Treasury tells us with great emphasis in his report that if we appropriate anything like the amount of the estimates he has made for the necessities of the public service we shall have a deficiency this year of $11,438,796.38, and in making that estimate he calls attention to this fact, that in order to keep down the deficiency—

> It must be accompanied by a careful revision of the laws which fix the salary and number of employés; by a reduction of the amount expended on public works now in progress; by postponement of all new works not indispensable for the public service; and by judicious scrutiny of disbursements.

The Secretary assures us, and we know it even if he did not so assure us, that if we begin new works now we will have not the revenue to pay for the contracts we make. We are told we must build a new public library. It is insisted that we must build a new observatory. We are asked to give subsidies for everything, which of course means money obtained by taxation. We have a river and harbor bill of $7,200,000 or $7,300,000 that will be pressed upon us now; it has already come from the House. All the new buildings now in the course of erection have to go on or we lose what we have already advanced on them; and the clamor is coming up from all over the country demanding more money for everything to aid everybody until we shall soon have no money to give to anybody. The Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates also said that he hoped, and he based his estimates on the fact that he believed we should have an increase from customs this year of over $2,000,000 in excess of what we had last year, and of internal revenue of a million and a half over what we had last year. I telegraphed to the Assistant Secretary this morning to give me the facts, and he sent back this dispatch:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, D. C., May 28, 1878.

He has in fact received, you will observe, nearly ten millions less than last year although his estimates were based on getting three and a half millions more, with over $11,000,000 deficiency on the estimates then. So the question may very well be asked, where is the money for new public buildings to come from? There is to be no change in the tariff laws, so it is said. The present internal-revenue laws impose taxation on the articles taxed under it until it has far passed the revenue point, and frauds are being practiced to an enormous extent because they have so passed the point of revenue. There is no possibility of increasing the revenue tax on distilled spirits, tobacco, proprietary medicine, checks, matches, or on the banks. On the contrary, there is a clamor all over the country to reduce them, and I think they could be reduced largely in the interest of revenue and stop immense frauds.

There is no serious proposition to change the tariff that is likely to be successful, although I am one of those who have strongly and earnestly urged it in the interest of an increase of revenue at all times, believing it to be prohibitory now in many important classes of articles, and that we could take off half the duties and double or treble the revenue by so doing and yet give all proper protection. But that is not likely to be done. Now, if we are to proceed extensively in the erection of new buildings, where is the money to come from?

Knowing, from the condition of the business of the country, that we were sure to find ourselves in the condition I have stated, and believing that we should stop the further payment of the principal of the national debt, being over $200,000,000 ahead of any possible obligation to provide for any (so-called) sinking fund, I offered in absolute good faith in January last a resolution reciting that the law ought to be so changed as to stop the payment of any more of the principal of the public debt. I showed by official data that we were called upon to expend $37,500,000 that there was no necessity for when we were so far in advance of our obligations, and I urged it with all the power I had, feeble as that might be. It was referred by the Senate against my will to the Committee on Finance of this body, and that committee has made a report, whether unanimous or not I do not know, against my proposition. The meaning of the report of that committee, as I construe it, is that we are compelled year by year, and especially this year, to keep up the payment of that thirty-seven and a half millions, and the committee has reported to the Senate that it shall be done. I saw that this trouble was coming; I saw that falling revenues were going to be the rule and not the exception; I saw that if we attempted to pay $37,500,000 to the sinking fund in excess of our expenditures it could not be done, and I desired to relieve the Secretary from embarrassment or censure. If the construction of the law is as I assume it is from the report of the committee and the action of the Senate, and from all that has taken place in regard to my resolution, you are compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to make himself amenable to the penal laws against embezzlement. He is violating well-known laws, if the committee's construction stands, whenever he appropriates the sinking-fund money for any other purpose except that specifically provided for, and he is, as he admits, violating them every day. I hold the law in my hand. I want to call attention to it; and if gentlemen will not reduce taxes but are determined to insist on maintaining that law as they construe it, then I insist that the Secretary shall be held responsible for all the consequences of his violation of it. The sinking-fund law provides that the coin received from customs shall be applied—

To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

SEC. 3695. All bonds applied to the sinking fund, and all other United States bonds redeemed or paid by the United States, shall be canceled and destroyed. A detailed record of the bonds so canceled and destroyed shall be first made in the books of the Treasury Department. The amount of the bonds of each class that have been canceled and destroyed shall be deducted respectively from the amount of each class of the outstanding debt of the United States.

SEC. 3696. In addition to other amounts that may be applied to the redemption or payment of the public debt, an amount equal to the interest on all bonds belonging to the sinking fund shall be applied, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct, to the payment of the public debt.

And after all that is done, and not before, then the balance collected from customs shall be paid into the Treasury. There is a permanent appropriation for the interest and sinking fund every year. The Secretary has no right to touch that fund in any form except to see that it is so applied. Fearing, or pretending to fear, that revenues might be insufficient, in 1875 a law was passed for the avowed purpose of protecting that sinking fund, and Congress restored the 10 per cent. tariff duties, which had been stricken off in 1871, on the leading articles that were covered by the tariff; we raised the tax on whisky and other distilled spirits from sixty-odd to ninety cents a gallon; put up the tax on tobacco from twenty to twenty-four cents per pound, because it was urged that the sinking fund must be maintained inviolate. The present Secretary of the Treasury himself, one of the advocates of that bill, took part in the debate in the Senate, in which he used this language:

In regard to the first alternative, I say that by no vote of mine, under any circumstances, will I suspend or stop for a moment the operation of the sinking-fund laws. They are pledges of public faith that must be observed literally and truly, and I am very glad the Secretary of the Treasury has taken the position that whatever else comes that sinking fund shall be maintained. Indeed, the law in regard to the sinking fund is so clear, so strong, that a Secretary of the Treasury who would violate that law would clearly be subject to and ought to be impeached.

And yet he has appeared before committees of the Senate and committees of the House; I have his testimony before me, in which he avows that he is violating that law every day and intends to continue to violate it, saying that it is a mere technical matter and he ought not to be required to execute it. He proceeds in the speech from which I have quoted to show that he is not doing what he says he is doing ignorantly; I read from his speech in the Senate in that debate of March 1, 1875:

That law is an element of the public credit and must not be impaired. Let us look a moment. The sinking-fund acts are pretty familiar to the Senate but they will bear repetition. By the act passed at the beginning of the war, February 25, 1862, the customs duties are expressly pledged, first, to the payment of the interest in coin on the bonds of the United States; second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States; and third, the residue thereof only to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

It is perfectly clear, therefore, that the customs duties which were to be collected in gold were set aside and mortgaged just as sacredly as if I should mortgage the house in which I live, set aside as a fund to be applied to specific purposes, and that it is only the balance of this fund that can be used by the United States for other purposes. That is perfectly clear, and to that the public faith is pledged. That law is still the existing law. It has been said in debate elsewhere, and perhaps here, that former Secretaries of the Treasury did not regard that law. That is an entire mistake. During the whole war more than 1 per cent. of the debt was paid annually. It is true new debt was created, new bonds were issued in vast amounts, but still during Secretary Chase's term more than 1 per cent. of the old debt was constantly paid by the payment of demand notes and of various forms of debts as they came in. The account was not maintained as a sinking fund, and yet the fund was applied according to the language of the law.

And he repeats again that the Secretary ought to be impeached who disregarded the law as it reads. Mr. DAWES, who had charge of that bill in the House of Representatives, made the same emphatic declaration. After stating the amount that would be raised by the increase on whisky and tobacco, and by the additional tariff duties imposed, he said to the House:

Sir, I desire to call the attention of the House to the law creating the sinking fund. I did it last year when I was speaking of the necessity of retrenchment. I now call attention to it in connection with the question of increased taxation. This is the law under which all the bonds of the United States have been issued, lying at the bottom of the first issue and running through them all, and it can be no more violated with impunity than any law that prescribes penalties of indictment and sentence to the penitentiary. And any officer of the Government who knowingly and willfully violates this law deserves impeachment at the hands of this Congress. The Secretaries of the Treasury who have gone before the present one, and the present Secretary of the Treasury, can only justify themselves in the course they pursued from the fact that the Congress of the United States has not furnished them with means to meet all the demands of the Government. Section 5 of the act which created the first bonds of the United states was in these words.

I have already read the law he quoted.

Assuming the construction of these distinguished gentlemen to be true, and the Finance Committee evidently so regard it by their conduct on my resolution, what follows? Let us see.

What do the Revised Statutes provide? Senators must remember that I did not bring this matter up. On the contrary, I tried to save the Secretary by repealing the law in every shape and form, or by postponing its operation for a series of years; but the Senate saw fit not to do it, but prefer, if the committee is followed, to hold him responsible under this law; and if the Senate keep it there and insist on the taxation necessary to maintain it, I say, hold him responsible for a strict compliance with it. The great bane of this country has been the willful violation of law by the officials high in authority. The same spirit that ordered Terry to break up the Legislature of Georgia, and Sheridan and De Trobriand the Legislature of Louisiana seems to pervade all departments of the Government; and if the Secretary shall be permitted to take money out of the Treasury or prevent its application for any purpose in plain violation of law when the law provides that amounts appropriated for the various branches of the public service shall be applied only to the objects to which they are respectively made, and to no others, let him be held responsible for his illegal acts. Another section of the Revised Statutes (section 5488) prescribes that any official who does so and who applies any money for any purpose except that for which it is specifically appropriated shall be guilty of embezzlement and shall be fined not less than $1,000 and imprisoned not less than a year, or both so fined and imprisoned; and yet a Secretary of the Treasury, instead of setting aside the sinking fund, as the Senate construes the law, uses it as he pleases and comes before a committee of the Congress defiantly, and tells them that he does not intend to obey any of their laws. I hold in my hand his testimony taken before the Committee on Banking and Currency, in which he says:

I have already explained the operations of the sinking fund——

Mr. MORRILL. I appeal to my friend from Kentucky to give us time to act on this bill before the morning hour expires.

Mr. BECK. I appealed to the Committee on Finance of the Senate for weeks and months to report back my sinking-fund resolution to give us a chance to set aside the unnecessary provisions for that fund, and discontinue them so as not to make their Secretary of the Treasury guilty of embezzlement by violating all the laws of Congress. I maintain that they ought to have reported it back favorably. It was reported back adversely and is now on the Calendar, and no opportunity has ever yet been had for me to show why the Secretary ought not to be required to comply with the law as they construe it. Therefore I think it more important to show to the country that our high the wheels of government or violate the law, and to show that we are in no condition to begin any new buildings either for the Bureau of officials are violating the law willfully and knowingly, and that the Senate is holding them in a condition where they must either stop Engraving and Printing or libraries or anything else than it is to engage in the erection of buildings for any purpose.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will give way. It is manifest that this bill cannot be passed in the morning hour, and I would ask the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his desire to have it put upon its passage, and allow the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to make his speech.

Mr. MORRILL. When I said I did not think this bill would take over ten minutes, I had forgotten that the Senator from Kentucky always has a good speech in him. This is a good speech and I have always considered it a good one every time it has been delivered.

Mr. BECK. That is very smart. The Senator never heard it delivered by me before; and if he had paid more attention to the laws, and if he had made the reports that he ought to have done in the proper time, so that I could have been heard to meet the questions I have been speaking about, I should not have troubled his present proposition, but I have no other means of getting the floor that I know of.

Mr. SARGENT. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will be allowed to proceed until he justifies, if he can, the extraordinary statement he has just made that the Secretary of the Treasury has stated to a House committee that he did not intend to obey any of the laws.

Mr. BECK. That he did not intend to maintain the sinking fund or the laws in reference to the sinking fund; that he was doing it, and I referred to his speech to show that he did know what the law was, and that if he did not obey he ought to be impeached, and yet he went before that committee and said that he was not only not setting apart that fund thus sacredly dedicated to a special purpose which the Revised Statutes say cannot be touched by any officer, but that he was simply applying whatever balances he found in his hands, and his testimony, which I have before me and would be glad to read for the edification of the Senator from California, shows the truth of what I say.

Mr. SARGENT. I quoted the Senator's remark; he said the Secretary said he did not intend to obey any of the laws.

Mr. BECK. Relative to the sinking fund.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky state what Secretary of the Treasury has construed the sinking-fund law as the Senator now construes it, and what Secretary of the Treasury has obeyed that law in the sense which he now construes it to require obeying?

Mr. BECK. The present Secretary of the Treasury, when a member of the Senate, in the speech from which I read, construed that law to mean just what I now say, and the act of 1875 whereby the people were taxed from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars additional was passed upon the pretense that it was indispensably necessary to pass it in order to maintain that law; and the 10 per cent. added to the tariff taxation and the 30 per cent. put upon whisky and tobacco were placed upon the country expressly upon that condition, and the law itself in its title says that the object of it is to aid in protecting that sinking fund, and the exact amount it would produce was given by the Senator from Massachusetts who had charge of the bill in the House, [Mr. DAWES,] and which he again repeated, that it was "an act to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government;" and he said:

Mr. Chairman, this tax upon whisky will yield $16,640,000; the tax upon tobacco of four cents on the pound will yield $4,200,000; that on sugar will yield $8,213,000; the 10 per cent. restoration will yield $8,000,000. The whole increase, therefore, this bill will yield is, Mr. Chairman, $37,750,000.

The result was a loss of thirty-nine millions in two years by the tariff and very little gain by the other; but still that was the statement. I have said that the Secretary of the Treasury himself said that he did not try to execute it. Let me quote his own words:

Secretary SHERMAN. I have already explained the operation of the sinking fund. If we should undertake to do what you say we ought to do—set aside that $35,000,000 and apply it for sinking-fund purposes—as a matter of course there would be at once a deficiency in the payment of your own salaries and of all the other expenses of the Government. Now, this sinking fund is a well-known technical fund, and has been known from the foundation of the Government. It is really nothing but a pledge by Congress that it will provide revenues enough, not only to pay the expenses of the Government, but to pay, in addition, the sinking fund of 1 per cent. upon the debt. Therefore the sinking fund has been always used simply as a representative of the balance of revenues over expenditures. The current expenditures are always taken from the amount of revenues, and the balance is applied to the sinking fund. If there is a deficiency in the revenue, so that there is no balance to be applied to the sinking fund, of course that is the fault of Congress in failing to provide revenues sufficient to cover the appropriations and the amount to be applied to the sinking fund. That has been the established custom of this and other countries.

Mr. EWING. I am not speaking about the custom, but the law. The law says that the coin paid for duties shall be set apart as a special fund, first, for the payment of coin interest on the public debt and, second, for the purchase of 1 per cent. of the debt each year, and for payment of interest upon the accumulated sinking fund. Now, I do not see how any custom or usage of the Department or usage of other countries can change the obligation of the statute.

The Secretary then asked for the resumption act and gave his construction of it, and then he was asked again:

These provisions of law setting apart the customs as a special fund and permanently appropriating them to the sinking fund certainly are not affected by this provision of the resumption law, appropriating "any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Secretary SHERMAN. I think it is; the words "surplus revenue" are not in it. That has been always construed to mean that sum of money which has been left after paying current expenses.

Mr. EWING. You mean always since the passage of the resumption law?

Secretary SHERMAN. I never saw that questioned. At all events, it was so held and acted upon when Mr. Bristow failed to make good the $16,305,421 of the sinking fund.

Mr. EWING. It was so held by the Secretary?

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and was never questioned by Congress.

Mr. EWING. Not Mr. Morrill's. The resumption law passed before Mr. Morrill became Secretary.

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes; but at all events that question was determined by the Department and was acquiesced in certainly by Congress, and rightly acquiesced in. I certainly take my share of the fault, if there is anything wrong in it, for I was then in Congress, of acquiescing in the construction that the ordinary expenses of the Government must be paid before the sinking fund is attended to and that if there is any deficiency it must fall on the sinking fund.

* * * * * * * *

The answer to that is that the resumption act expressly authorizes the use of the surplus revenue and the proceeds of bonds to carry the resumption act into effect; and you will see that the resumption act has been carried into effect thus far by the sale of bonds, even in the purchase of the silver bullion in the first instance. Mr. Bristow sold $15,000,000 of 5 per cent. bonds and used the proceeds of those bonds in the purchase of silver bullion, and so all that I did under the resumption act was done by the sale of bonds.

Mr. EWING. There has been this year applied to the sinking fund $3,000,000 of fractional currency?

Secretary SHERMAN. Yes; and I do not know how many United States notes. We have redeemed largely United States notes. Last month we redeemed $700,000. All that goes into the sinking fund.

* * * * * * *

Mr. EWING. I find, according to the finance report of 1877, a deficiency in the sinking fund for that year of $9,225,000.

Secretary SHERMAN. That is correct.

* * * * * * *

Yes, and if the amount of money which had been applied to the sinking fund before the panic of 1873, in excess of the amount required by law, had been set apart for a resumption fund, we would have been at specie payments long ago, and that is what ought to have been done, in my judgment; but there is no use in "crying over spilled milk."

Mr. EWING. I understand that you feel at liberty under the usage to neglect any application to the sinking fund at all, if the purposes of the resumption law require it.

Secretary SHERMAN. No; I feel bound to do this, to apply the actual surplus revenue to the sinking fund; and that has been done. But when there is not sufficient surplus revenue to pay the sinking fund I would let the deficit fall on the sinking fund. That is the way we have done.

He explained how it was managed, and he proceeded to show that not only was he making no effort to maintain the law, but that he was giving a construction to it that enabled him to take up the fractional currency, take up the greenbacks, and destroy them as a part of the sinking fund as the easiest way of carrying out his contraction scheme. When he was asked if he was justified in paying into the sinking fund the legal-tenders instead of the bonds, he said:

Yes; that is the construction put upon the law. We have a right to count the legal-tenders and fractional currency returned under the operations of the law as so much debt paid. We do not retire any legal-tenders under any circumstances except in consequence of the issue of the national-bank notes; but when legal-tender notes are retired in that way, we count them as so much debt paid and we credit them to the sinking fund.

His construction of the law was that it would be right to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The morning hour has expired and the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. BECK. I will try to resume this subject at some other time. I have had very little chance to lay it satisfactorily before the Senate so far.

FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. Before the regular order is taken up, I wish to correct a resolution that was passed the other day as a Senate resolution when it should have been a concurrent resolution. I offer now this concurrent resolution to take its place:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed 2,000 extra copies of the message of the President transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberations of the fishery commission, with accompanying documents, and that 500 copies of the same shall be for the use of the State Department, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

I ask for the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate resolution on this subject was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now I move that the Senate resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of legal-tender notes.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask that the bill be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be reported.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following amendment: after the word "circulation," in line 10, insert:

Provided, That the said notes, when so issued, shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, except duties on imports, and not to be otherwise a legal tender, and any reprint of the said notes shall bear this superscription.

The PRDSIDING OFFICFR. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it will be observed that the reissue of the present demand Treasury notes of the United States is by this bill authorized, after they "shall have become the property of the United States;" by which I understand that they shall have been paid by the United States; and I understand the proposition is now deliberately made, in a time of profound peace, in the presence of no emergency, under no stress whatever of political exigency, that it is competent for the Congress of the United States, not only to issue the notes of the Government upon the credit of the Government, but to accompany them with a compulsory clause that they shall be receivable in payment of all debts and contracts between other and third parties.

It really seems, Mr. President, that the American people are fast losing sight of all the old landmarks of their Government; that the plain and essential conditions under which individual, civil, and political liberty can be maintained are one by one disregarded, and, if not forgotten, remembered only to be despised. I do not believe that, with all the wonderful improvements that modern invention has wrought, by the light of all those discoveries which divine wisdom has permitted to reach the minds of men, any change has been made in the nature of men themselves that shall make it less necessary now, than at the period of the foundation of this Government, for us to observe the true conditions by which personal and political liberty under a government of laws, popular in its form, can be maintained.

It is but a little while ago, a few years, that this country, although then in the throes of a terrible and internecine strife, was astounded at the claim of power, that the mere fiat of the Government in the issue of its credit should make that which had no value intrinsically at all, full payment for any debt, however vast or however sacred.

Excited as they were in 1862, in the month of March, such a proposition fell with dismay upon the ears of those who lived in this country and desired the perpetuation of its institutions. The credit of the Government is to be used in its own discretion and without limit by the appropriate agents of Government. John Locke says that—

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money within some limited time; money must be had or credit will fail.

But this is not the use of Government credit that is sought by this bill or was sought by the act of 1862. It is to substitute the fiat of the Government for the actual money. It is worse than dealing in debased coin, because debased coin still has some intrinsic value. It is dealing with that which, under the name of credit, is the pretended execution of the claims of credit. The experience of the men who founded this Government had been so bitter in their own day, that they were most careful to withhold from the new Government they were creating, the power of making the unreal pass for the real, and the false for the true, or to permit the use of credit in such wise as to defeat its own objects; because, as Locke said, "if the money be not had for the credit, the credit must fail." And a man or a government without it is at an end for all practical purposes.

So that, until March, 1862, although paper money had been used in the United States from the adoption of the Federal Constitution down to that time, although the Government itself had under some twenty-odd acts of Congress emitted its bills of credit, there was no illustration and no case to be found, whether in the practice of the Government or by contemporaneous history or by any analogy of constitutional construction, to authorize the exercise of such a power as was finally exercised in March, 1862, and followed naturally by quick repetition in a few months for increased amounts.

Every theory of the creation of money by the Government that we derived from the country from whom our laws had mainly been imported, from every nation by whose history we could have been instructed, was in opposition to the exercise of such a power. But it came in a season of great peril and excitement; in a time when many good men believed it was essential to claim and to exercise it, no matter what consequences should follow. It was exercised, and in my judgment, and not mine alone, but by the coincidence of those who are best authorized to instruct us, it has cost the people of the United States more in actual loss of wealth, in actual loss of all that goes to create wealth; it has brought upon them to-day, and is the most fruitful cause of all the distress which they suffer and of which we hear so much, and so truly, upon this floor; it has cost them more that they should have issued their bills of credit and made them a legal tender for the payment of all debts, than all and every other expense to which they were compelled by the war.

Part of this statement is the subject of calculation, or may be made so. It has been done by those who have made finance their study in this and other countries, and who declare to you that had this nation remained upon the metallic basis, or upon the basis of a money of value, issuing its notes but maintaining their convertibility at par into specie—issuing its notes but not attaching a compulsory clause of legal tender, the vast debt which resulted from the war would have been diminished at least one-half. But when you come to the spirit of extravagance and wild speculation that was generated and fostered, you have reached an element of damage to the country which is not calculable, which is vast, almost beyond imagination.

Oh, sir, to-day it is not that this people of the country are suffering for want of circulating medium to conduct their business; it is not from the want of a sufficient volume of currency; it is from a vain attempt to maintain an inflated and exaggerated system of values, growing out of a season of fictitious and false prosperity, built upon this system of irredeemable paper money, which, without regard to its value, has yet been called upon to serve as the standard of value. It not only was a house built upon sand, but it was a house of straw built upon sand; there was neither substance above nor below, and no human ingenuity could give it permanent stability or safety.

Mr. President, I am perfectly aware of the apparent strength of what is rather sentiment, than public opinion on this subject; and yet, nevertheless, it seems to me that the stronger the flood of error, the more strenuous should be the efforts of every man who has convictions in opposition to declare them, and contribute what he may to that great system of truth, all parts of which will in the end be found harmonious, and shall prevail. It is worth while at this time to go back into history to know what were the limitations of power upon the monarch or upon the majority, which, in a republican form of government, represents the ruling power. Such a power as is now claimed by Congress, it is safe to say, was never committed to a constitutional monarch. It was never permitted in England when the constitution was far more nebulous and vague than it since has become. In the 2d of Coke's Institutes, 577, we are told that:

By the 20th statute of Edward I, c. 1, and Magna Charta, folio 167, it is provided that "no subject can be enforced to take in buying and selling or other payment, any money made, but only of lawful metal, that is of silver or gold," as the Mirror hath told you, and by this it is proved, that having respect to money there is an unlawful metal and these be the other five.

He then enumerates the baser metals.

The money of England is the treasure of England, and nothing is said to be treasure trove but gold and silver. And this is the reason that the law doth give to the king the mines of gold and silver, thereof to make money, and not any other metal which a subject may have, because thereof money cannot be made. And hereof there is great reason, for the value of money being the measure of all contracts, &c., is in effect the value of every man.

In the twenty-fifth year of King Edward III, it was enacted "that the money of gold and silver which now is current shall not be impaired in weight or allay, but as soon as a good way may be found, that the same may be put in the ancient state, as in the sterling."

By this act three things are to be observed: 1. That the money of England must either be of gold or silver: 2. That the current money of England cannot be impaired, either in weight or allay: 3. That the allay of the sterling was the ancient current money of England. And herewith agreeth the statute of 9 Henry V.

This was the law of England then and is to-day. It was the law of the United States at the time these colonies were founded and when they confederated into a union. Writing one hundred and fifty years after, Blackstone, p. 218, vol. 1 of his commentaries, says:

When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard, and called esterling or sterling metal. * * And of this sterling or esterling metal all the coin of the Kingdom must be made, by the statute 25 Edward III, c. 13. So that the King's prerogative seemeth not to extend to the debasing or enhancing the value of the coin, below or above the sterling value.

This was accepted in the American mind. It never was doubted. A power of substitution, a power of debasement, was never imagined because the power was given to the Congress of the United States to do just that which the English constitution allowed to the king, which was to coin the precious metals into money. The States were forbidden to coin any money or to make anything but gold and silver a legal tender for the payment of debts; and the Congress of the United States by a most reasonable implication could make nothing but gold and silver as coin a tender for the payment of debts, for the very spirit and reason that forbids the impairment of the obligation of contracts by a State extends itself to the government of laws to which that State is a party. And so there never was at any time the suggestion of any such power, as is now sought under the present bill to be assumed as a matter of course, by the Congress of the United States of making Treasury notes a legal tender after their payment by the Government. Until February, 1862, the Government of the United States never made nor attempted to make its securities or notes a legal tender;—no paper money until then had been a legal tender.

It was justly regarded by all who ever wrote or spoke upon the subject as an exercise of power so far-reaching and unlimited, that no form of government which warranted it could be called a government of limited powers.

The power arbitrarily to debase coin and change the standard of values was shrunk from as being in its very nature tyrannical, utterly fatal to public security;—and the power to substitute pieces of paper totally without intrinsic value, is not to diminish value, but wholly to abolish it.

In Gwin vs. Breedlove, in 2 Howard, decided in 1844, the Supreme Court of the United States, of which Chief-Justice Taney was then the head, at a time when were present Judges McLean, Story, Baldwin, Wayne, McKinley, and Daniel, in passing upon the case of a sale by a United States marshal of the goods of a debtor under execution and his accepting in satisfaction paper money, declared that—

By the Constitution of the United States gold or silver coin made current by law can only be tendered in payment of debts. * * *

By the writ of execution the marshal was directed to collect so many dollars; this meant gold or silver of course.

No man whose opinion or declaration is known to me ever ventured, prior to February, 1862, to gainsay that simple doctrine, for it was not held only by the legal profession in all its members and the bench selected from it, but it was in the opinion of the whole country a canon of belief by the American people, that no such power was ever vested in the Congress of the United States. To use the language of Chief-Justice Chase at the December term, 1870, in dissenting from the opinion then delivered:

The power to coin money was a power to determine the fineness, weight, and denominations of the metallic pieces by which values were to be measured; and we do not perceive how this meaning can be extended without doing violence to the very words of the Constitution by imposing on them a sense they were not intended to bear. This construction is supported by contemporaneous and all subsequent action of the legislature; by all the recorded utterances of statesmen and jurists, and the unbroken tenor of judicial opinions until a very recent period, when the excitement of the civil war led to the adoption, by many, of different views.—12 Wallace, 584.

And on page 586—

But if the plain sense of words, if the contemporaneous exposition of parties, if common consent in understanding, if the opinions of courts avail anything in determining the meaning of the Constitution, it seems impossible to doubt that the power to coin money is a power to establish a uniform standard of value, and that no other power to establish such a standard, by making notes a legal tender, is conferred upon Congress by the Constitution.

The last decision of the Supreme Court of the United States may be used as a pretext for the renewed exercise of this incredible and fatal power by Congress, but under what circumstances was such a decision made? I do not now propose to recite the melancholy history of judicial action on that subject. Its record has been made up, and by the biographer of the late Chief-Justice Chase has been given to the world.

I fear its effects will be felt long and disastrously, and the injury inflicted will be slowly but surely comprehended.

In November, 1869, in a conference of the judges of the Supreme Court it had been determined by the opinions of five to three that the legal-tender clause was not constitutional.

An opinion to this effect was prepared by the Chief-Justice, was agreed to in conference by five judges against three, January 29, 1870, and its delivery delayed one week to allow a dissent to be prepared.

In the language of Mr. Justice Field at p. 634 of 12 Wallace—

That judgment was reached only after repeated arguments were heard from able and eminent counsel, and every point raised on either side had been the subject of extended deliberation.

The questions presented in that case were also involved in several other cases, and had been elaborately argued in them. It is not extravagant to say that no case has ever been decided by this court since its organization in which the questions presented were more fully argued or more maturely considered. It was hoped that a judgment thus reached would not be lightly disturbed. It was hoped that it had settled forever that under a Constitution ordained among other things "to establish justice," legislation giving to one person the right to discharge his obligations to another by nominal instead of actual fulfillment could never be justified.

The history of the reversal of that decision is sad indeed, and I believe the historian of this country will mark as a black day the event of its reversal at the same term, not by a change of opinion, not by the consent or at the request of those who concurred in the judgment, but against their formal and solemn protest, simply by increasing the number and changing the personnel of a bench. And yet the decision so reached, and so fatal as I consider it to be to that finality which is essential for the safety of a government of laws, that decision falls far short of being any warrant for the measure to which the Senate is now asked to assent.

Let us see upon what ground the reversing judges carefully placed the authority of Congress to attach the legal-tender quality to the promissory notes of the Government. Let them answer in their own phrase. The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Strong, and at page 540, of 12 Wallace, is to be found his reason for consenting that such an exercise of power was lawful to the Congress of the United States. Considering the question whether this was a proper instrumentality in the performance of its duties under the Constitution, he says:

This brings us to the inquiry whether they were, when enacted, appropriate instrumentalities for carrying into effect or executing any of the known powers of Congress, or of any department of the Goverment. Plainly to this inquiry, a consideration of the time when they were enacted, and of the circumstances in which the Government then stood, is important. It is not to be denied that acts may be adapted to the exercise of lawful power, and appropriate to it, in seasons of exigency, which would be inappropriate at other times.

At page 541, after having depicted in very forcible language the convulsed condition of the country, the apparent extremity of the Government, the dire need for something that would satisfy the public mind that there was hope to be derived from this extreme measure—for that seems to have been the root of this proposed power—he says:

It was at such a time and in such circumstances that Congress was called upon to devise means for maintaining the Army and Navy, for securing the large supplies of money needed, and, indeed, for the preservation of the Government created by the Constitution. It was at such a time and in such an emergency that the legal-tender acts were passed. Now, if it were certain that nothing else would have supplied the absolute necessities of the Treasury, that nothing else would have enabled the Government to maintain its armies and Navy, that nothing else would have saved the Government and the Constitution from destruction, while the legal-tender acts would, could any one be bold enough to assert that Congress transgressed its powers?

What is the result of this reasoning? It is only when such a condition of things arises that "nothing else" can be relied upon to give heart and hope to the people, to give strength to the arm of the Government, for if anything short of that will answer, then there is no justification for the exercise of this power. Such is the logic, such is the inevitable deduction from the language of the court. One of the judges who expressed a coincident opinion, perhaps even less restrainedly than the judge who spoke for the court—I read now from the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley—said:

It follows as another corollary from the views which I have expressed that the power to make Treasury notes a legal tender, while a mere incidental one to that of issuing the notes themselves, and to one of the forms of borrowing money, is nevertheless a power not to be resorted to except upon extraordinary and pressing occasions, such as war or other public exigencies of great gravity and importance; and should be no longer exerted than all the circumstances of the case demand.

Mr. President, testing this claim of power by its definition at the hands of its two most celebrated advocates, and those whose opinions and votes were necessary to give it force, what deduction can be made? That if the power have existence, it is only as one of those extreme necessities to which war or other great disaster may give birth, but that just so soon as the emergency has passed and the pressure is removed, the power ceases to exist, and all pretext for its exercise has vanished. And from the original dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Miller, in February, 1870, a similar deduction is to be drawn.

I do not read now from the able, earnest, and to me most convincing opinions of those who dissented on the bench; I do not now stop to consider the vast array of authority beginning with the history of the nation and sustained in every generation, but taking the case as it was presented by these two advocates of the power, no justification can be found for its exercise at the present time, and in the present condition of our public affairs.

Mr. President, there is one fact that I believe can be sustained by reason and authority, and that is, that practically the attachment of the legal-tender clause to the issuing of the Treasury notes, did not give them one particle more of value than they would have had and will have without it, excepting for the purpose of enabling the payment of pre-existing debts by unscrupulous debtors. That power they had; other power they had not. No statute, no penal law, no blandishment, and no threat can determine the value of paper money of an individual, a corporation, or a government. There are laws which will control it beyond the reach of Congress or of monarchs, the universal law of circulation, which has its base upon confidence. If confidence be withheld, no legal-tender clause, no statute of any kind enforcing it, is worth the paper upon which it is written, and is passed by in contempt. On that subject there is a comment by Chief-Justice Chase, at page 579 of 12 Wallace, which is worthy to be quoted, because the idea may prevail among our countrymen that the purchasing power of these Treasury notes may be in some degree diminished by taking from them their feature of being a legal tender. The amendment that I have offered is that they shall be receivable for all debts to the Government of the United States, excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender, but can be accepted and used by all parties voluntarily, according to the value which those parties may attach to them:

Now, does making the notes a legal tender increase their value? It is said that it does, by giving them a new use. The best political economists say that it does not. When the Government compels the people to receive its notes, it virtually declares that it does not expect them to be received without compulsion. It practically represents itself insolvent. This certainly does not improve the value of its notes. It is an element of depreciation. In addition, it creates a powerful interest in the debtor class and in the purchasers of bonds to depress to the lowest point the credit of the notes. The cheaper these become, the easier the payment of debts, and the more profitable the investments in bonds bearing coin interest. On the other hand the higher prices become for everything the Government needs to buy, the greater the accumulation of public as well as private debt. It is true that such a state of things is acceptable to debtors, investors in bonds, and speculators. It is their opportunity of relief or wealth. And many are persuaded by their representations that the forced circulation is not only a necessity, but a benefit. But the apparent benefit is a delusion, and the necessity imaginary. In their legitimate use, the notes are hurt, not helped, by being made a legal tender.

The legal-tender quality is only valuable for the purposes of dishonesty. Every honest purpose is answered as well and better without it.

We have no hesitation, therefore, in declaring our conviction that the making of these notes a legal tender was not a necessary or proper means to the carrying on war or to the exercise of any express power of the Government.

And it is also worthy of note that upon the publication of the decision made in January, 1870, by the Supreme Court, that the legal-tender clause was unconstitutional, the market value of the Treasury notes increased at once several per cent., as was attested by the diminution in the premium upon gold; thus proving the strength of the credit of the United States and the confidence of the public that the notes would be paid in money—the dollar of the Constitution, although they could no longer, under that decision, be compelled to be received for debts except to the Government.

Mr. President, that was but a repetition of all human experience on this subject. Go back to the history of the first attempt in France to create a paper money and make it a compulsory tender. It had a short career, and the usual certain ending. It began in 1716, and as long as the National Bank ingrafted on the West India Company was in the hands of John Law and his associates and was kept as a quasi-private institution, self-interest, the activity and watchfulness which selfishness always imposes, counseled and compelled a restriction of its paper issues, and it became immensely profitable to him and his immediate associates; but it came to be believed that the same system was adapted to the wants of the government, and so in 1718 the sphere of operations was enlarged until Law's bank was declared the Royal Bank of France, and government guaranteed the notes issued by it. Immediately all the powers of the government were freely lent to give it credit; to enforce the credit where it was withheld; to compel the acceptance of its notes as legal tender and maintain their value.

To encourage the circulation of the bank-notes, in December, 1719, an edict ordered that, thereafter, they should always be worth 5 per cent. more than specie! that silver should only be used in payments under 100 livres and gold in those under 300 livres. To check the growing desire to purchase jewelry and precious stones, as means of obtaining something of intrinsic value in exchange for the bank-notes, in which confidence was declining, it was forbidden to wear pearls, diamonds, and other precious stones. The transportation of specie was prohibited between towns in which there were branches of the bank. By edicts of the 23d and 25th February, 1720, it was made obligatory to use bank-notes in all payments over 100 livres. No person was permitted to hold more than 500 livres in specie, under penalty of confiscation and a fine of 10,000 livres; and informers were to receive one-half of all amounts confiscated. The use of the precious metals for objects of art or luxury was regulated and limited, so as to prevent an evasion of the limitation of the amount of gold and silver that might be in the possession of any one person. Finally, an edict of 11th March, 1720, forbade any payment being made in specie.

As it was feared that the fall in the price of the shares of the India Company might increase the discredit of the bank-notes, it was decreed on the 5th of March that the price of the shares should be thereafter 9,000 livres, and an office was opened in the bank, where the shares could be exchanged for bank-notes, or bank-notes converted into shares, at that price. This decree, instead of benefiting the bank-notes, caused a rapid depreciation of their market value. In February they were worth 90 per cent., but after the 5th of March only 60 to 50.

On the 21st of May, 1720, an edict reduced the value of the shares to 8,000 livres; and ordered that on the 1st July it should be further reduced to 7,500 livres, and should thereafter be reduced monthly 500 francs, until the 1st December, when their value would become 5,000 francs, which thereafter was to be their permanent value. The bank-notes were only to pass current at 80 per cent. of their par value until the 1st of July, when they were to be reduced to 75 per cent., and thereafter further reduced 5 per cent. every month, until the 1st of December, when they were to be current at 50 per cent., which was thereafter to be their permanent value. From that moment the whole paper fabric fell to the ground; the notes lost all credit, none would meddle with them; on the 22d May one might have starved with a hundred millions of paper money in his pocket. The edict created such excitement among all classes that the regent revoked the edict on the 27th May. But all confidence being now gone, this revocation had no other effect than to increase the mischief, by throwing again into the channels of commerce notes universally discredited, with which knavish persons paid and ruined their lawful creditors. To render matters worse, payments were the same day stopped at the bank, commissioners being sent to seal up the vaults and examine the books, under the pretext of inquiring into frauds alleged to have been committed by the clerks, but in reality to prevent the specie from being paid away in exchange for notes.—Money, by Charles Moran.

It is not worth while to pursue that well-known history. A few months more elapsed, and within two years from the time the Government connected itself with the issue and guarantee of the notes utter, wholesale ruin had been the result of the attempt; and this was again essayed in France in 1789. There the populace took possession of the government; there they seized the property of the nobles and clergy. Upon the prospective sales of that property they issued assignats and mandats. They not only denounced as guilty any man who questioned their value, but the penalty of death itself was enacted against any who should refuse them in payment of debts or commodities. The folly and futility of such attempts were soon demonstrated, and in less than six years from their issue, ten thousand francs were paid for a pair of boots and seven hundred for a pound of butter, while barley-sugar sold for thirty francs a stick—and the notes at last became utterly worthless for any purpose.

Take the history of our own continental money; read the denunciatory language of the continental congress against any man who should refuse at any time to accept those notes, or who should even speak of them with disrespect; remember the penalties that were invoked against them; take the resolutions of the States and of the government of the confederation, calling upon the various States to pass the most highly punitive laws against all those who should question the value of paper notes. And the States responded and passed laws making the bills legal tender for debts and the refusal to receive them an extinguishment of the debt. And the result of all such vain legislation the American people know; not simply by reading, but by actual tradition from their forefathers, that ruin and failure was the result of all such attempts. Therefore it will be learned I think, and I believe upon reflection it will be admitted, that the compulsory power of legal tender fails utterly in increasing the value of paper promises to which it is attached by law, and not only so, but by the very edict of compulsion, there is an implication of a want of value in that which is offered, which needs to be supplemented by the arbitrary power of the Government.

The very enactment of compulsory legal tender is a declaration that the credit of the notes cannot stand alone, and that that which is pledged for the emission of every form of credit of the United States Government, whether it borrows for a day, or for ten days, or ten years, or thirty years, is not to be relied on.

What is pledged for the Government credit? The honor, the honesty, the character, the property of the entire people; and if there be truth, if there be honesty, if there be integrity, then there will be the feeling of confidence, and the debtor himself cannot strengthen his credit by adding compulsory features to its acceptance.

And next, Mr. President, is the additional danger that the inducement to abuse the power of exercising credit is indefinitely increased. No words are stronger than those of Alexander Hamilton on this subject. Said he:

The emitting of paper money is wisely prohibited to the State governments, and the spirit of the prohibition ought not to be disregarded by the United States Government. Though paper emissions under a general authority might have some advantages not applicable, and be free from some disadvantages which are applicable to the like emissions by the States separately; yet they are of a nature so liable to abuse, and it may even be affirmed, so certain of being abused, that the wisdom of Government will be shown in never trusting itself with the use of so seducing and dangerous an expedient. In times of tranquillity it might have no ill consequence, it might even perhaps be arranged in a way to be productive of good; but in great and trying emergencies there is almost a moral certainty of its being mischievous.

This was even to the issue of paper not enforced as a legal-tender, for in the mind of Hamilton, or of any man of his generation, the idea never gained admission that it was in the power of any Government, professing to be limited in its form and nature, to compel the acceptance of a shadow for the substance, and a false thing for a true. They never contemplated anything so cruel and unjust as a law which would compel a man to receive as payment for years of hard toil and honest labor, a printed piece of paper, having no value in itself, and incapable of being converted into a money of value.

Sir, the authority of the Congress of the United States to issue Treasury notes based upon the national credit has been frequently admitted. The express admission was made by the entire Supreme Court in the case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, reported in the eighth volume of Wallace. It is again recognized in the very able opinion delivered in the same court by Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Clifford in the case in 8 Wallace of Hepburn vs. Griswold. Therefore I do not doubt that it is competent for the Congress of the United States to issue such notes, to use the language of Mr. Justice Clifford:

Authority, it is conceded, exists in Congress to pass laws providing for the issue of Treasury notes, based on the national credit, as necessary and proper means for fulfilling the end of the express power to borrow money, nor can it be doubted at this day that such notes, when issued by the proper authority, may lawfully circulate as credit currency, and that they may, in that conventional character, be lawfully employed, if the act authorizing their issue so provides, to pay duties, taxes, and all the public exactions required to be paid into the National Treasury. Public creditors may also be paid in such currency by their own consent, and they may be used in all other cases, where the payment in such notes comports with the terms of the contract. Established usage founded upon the practice of the Government, often repeated, has sanctioned these rules, until it may now be said that they are not open to controversy; but the question in the cases before the court is whether the Congress may declare such notes to be lawful money, make them a legal tender, and impart to such a currency the quality of being a standard of value, and compel creditors to accept the payment of their debts in such a currency as the equivalent of the money recognized and established by the Constitution as the standard of value by which the value of all other commodities is to be measured.—12 Wallace, 626 and 627

And that power he (as he had previously) denied to the Congress, and I think most justifiably and wisely.

Mr. President what would the American people think if instead of authorizing the emission of paper notes and making them legal tender for all debts it should authorize the coining of leaden disks or leather pieces. Suppose that Congress should decide that lead was a better material for money than paper and authorize the emission of leaden dollars or leather dollars and declare them receivable for all debts, and the legal equivalents of dollars, of gold and silver of the present standard! What do you suppose would be the verdict of the American people? They would say it was a shameless, unlawful debasing of the national currency; and yet every one knows that even in the disk of lead there is a certain intrinsic value—not possessed by paper. It might be made of some use as a bullet to put an end to the man who would vote for it, and that would be gratefully recognized as useful; or perhaps the leather dollar might be useful as an appropriate decoration in the way of a medal for Senators or Representatives who would give their assent to such a proposed currency.

Both leather and lead would have use and a fitting and perhaps meritorious application in the modes I have suggested.

But, Mr. President, what lies at the root of this discussion? Common honesty, the honesty that made George Washington denounce the proposition to pay an honest debt in a depreciated paper currency. We have professed to believe in and admire the virtues, the intellect, and the wisdom of the great men who framed this Government. Washington, Hamilton, Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Morris, and their associates—and in later years in Jackson, Webster, Calhoun, and Benton, who have been leaders and political exemplars in this country, and who have each and all spoken to the American people with one voice on this subject; and let the question be covered up by what sophistry it may; let it be robed in what wrappings of rhetoric it may, there will remain ever at the root of this question the single fact of honesty, that value shall be given for value, and that you shall not take from a man the labors of his whole life and give him in return a worthless piece of paper, and which nothing but dishonesty can desire that he should be compelled to receive.

Value is receivable for value. For every hour of honest labor, for every drop of honest sweat wrung from the brow of a man in any of the avocations of life, he is entitled in return to value, equivalent to that which he has rendered; and therefore, if I had nothing else to say to the people of this country, in whose welfare my interest is so deep and sincere, if I were not only standing in this Congress for the last time but closing my eyes on earth and all its scenes, I would counsel and exhort them never to cease the struggle until their standard of value was restored to them, and that the performance of their contracts should be guaranteed, in the payment of a money of a stable and standard value prescribed by law—I would beseech them not to be deluded by such unsubstantial shadows as are now proposed, which are, as Hamilton said, "so seducing and dangerous."

The question is one around which sophistries cluster so thick that the real merits are often disguised, but to me they are plain. To-day we have reached a point in our financial affairs in which the credit of the United States Government, as represented by its demand notes, is so intrenched in the confidence of the world and of the American people, that they are accepted at par with the standard coined money authorized by the Constitution. Say what gentlemen please, resumption of specie payments is practicable, even at this day, and whenever the promise on paper of the individual, or the corporation, or the Government is convertible at will into real money, the money of value, and that convertibility is secured, it is its equivalent, and it has advantages of portability and other elements of convenience which make it most acceptable and proper for public use.

Mr. President, those who believe that there is a deficiency in the volume of the circulating medium of this country, will sadly disappoint themselves, will utterly stultify their own reasoning, should they now prevent the re-entrance of the gold and silver coin now in the country into common use and circulation. I believe that is practicable. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, upon his official responsibility has declared in his report to Congress, in his personal interviews with committees of the two Houses, that resumption of specie payment is perfectly practicable, and that all he asks is to be permitted to exercise the powers given him by existing law to make it an assured success. That officer is not in his place by my vote or wish. His ways of finance have not been mine. I have failed in the past oftentimes to understand or concur in his methods, and I am not clear to-day as to what they are; but I recognize his official responsibility, and I cannot find it in me in any way, by any expression, to seek to embarrass his progress toward this end so much to be desired.

Whatever may be the method he may adopt under the law, I only can wish it success in its approach to specie payments. But when we have reached specie payments, when the dollar of promise has been met by the dollar of performance, then I wish the difference between real money and false money once more to be recognized by the American people and insisted upon. No man to-day proposes to force Government bonds upon any one as a legal tender; and by what pretext can it be that a note on demand shall have this high and arbitrary power attached to it and other forms of credit denied it? If it be an unwise thing in one case, it would be so in all, and I believe I have made it clear that it is the opinion of those best qualified to inform us, that the legal-tender power does not add to the value of the Government paper, but on the contrary tends rather to diminish it, by creating the suspicion of compulsion, by expressing by the very act of the Government a disbelief in its own credit; otherwise it would stand without any such arbitrary enactment. And strange to say, as delineated by Mr. Justice Field, the very two parties who made common cause to use this legal-tender power of the Government are now at extreme points of difference,—those who are in debt and seek for a cheap and worthless money to discharge their debts, and those who have capital and desire to see the coin-bearing obligations of the Government depressed so that they may buy them in cheaply and reap a rich harvest from the interest. It is the men who speculate in the Government credit for the purpose of private gain and the men who seek to depress Government credit for the purpose of enabling them to cheat their just creditors.

Mr. President, the importance of this subject cannot well be overestimated. I believe that we stand at a very critical period of our history. We have had turning points of great danger. The legal-tender act of 1862, born of an emergency, and by its advocates confessedly warranted only by it, is now proposed, in the absence of any emergency, to be renewed and re-enacted permanently. Against that I enter my protest.

I do not care upon a subject like this to stand within the pale of political party, but in the name of that party of which I have always been a member, and their last public declaration on this subject, I stand demanding the return to specie payments, demanding the convertibility of all paper money into gold and silver at the option of the holder, demanding the removal of every hinderance to resumption; and I would here ask many gentlemen who insist upon keeping party faith to consider why it was that the resumption law of 1875, so called, was denounced by the political party that met at Saint Louis and nominated their candidates in June, 1876. Let me read from their public declaration.

> We denounce the financial imbecility and immorality of that party which, during eleven years of peace, has made no advance toward resumption, no preparation for resumption, but instead has obstructed resumption by wasting our resources and exhausting all our surplus income; and, while annually professing to intend a speedy return to specie payments, has annually enacted fresh hinderances thereto. As such hinderance we denounce the resumption clause of the act of 1875 and we here demand its repeal.

Well, sir, it now seems that the resumption law of 1875 has not prevented resumption. With the aid of that law, or in spite of that law, we stand on the threshold of resumption. What, then, is the object or intent of the law in urging its repeal? If it has not prevented resumption, it has not been the hinderance that was suspected. If it has aided resumption, then no man who approved of that platform or that declaration, can conscientiously vote for its repeal.

Among the many respected traditions of the party in which my whole manhood has been passed, has been its fidelity to the public faith and its devotion to the principles of a sound currency; and I am not prepared to see those who use the name, or undertake to speak in the name of that organization, arraying themselves in the cast-off garb of other and more unfaithful political associations, and denouncing those principles which have always in the past brought security and safety to the American people and must be relied upon in the future. It is not a matter of party. Financial errors and mistakes embrace all classes and all parties in the confusions which follow them. Wise legislation must embrace all parties and all classes with its benefits; and therefore it is, that most earnestly I hope there will be found in this Senate a recognition and a declaration in the vote on this amendment in favor of a return to the honest money of the Constitution.

I have proposed by the amendment I offer that these notes are to be receivable for public dues of the Government. That fact being known, the party who contracts with the Government will arrange his prices accordingly, and if the notes be worth par or more than par he will perform his services upon that calculation. No one will be deceived, no one will be wronged, and every one will have an interest that the Government credit shall be as high as the credit of any other party, public or private. But I have excluded the payment of duties upon imports in the amendment. I know that there is a proposition before the Senate that the duties on imports shall be made payable in Treasury notes. When the Government of the United States issued these notes in 1862, they enacted a law which has remained unrepealed upon the statute-book from that day to this, and which of its own force has entered into every contract which the Government has made in the sale of its bonds from 1862 to the present day. By the fifth section of the act of 1862 it was provided:

> That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, or in notes payable on demand heretofore authorized to be issued and by law receivable in payment of public dues, and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:
> First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.
>
> Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.
> Third. The residue thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

A few years ago when the duties upon imports paid in gold coin very far exceeded the amount of interest on the public debt, I proposed by way of relief to the importer and as a matter of credit to the United States notes; that a percentage of those duties might be payable in the demand notes of the Treasury, and I well remember that no one was louder in his expression of reprobation of what he called then a partial exercise of bad faith, than the present Secretary of the Treasury. I believed that so long as enough coin was received at the custom-houses to pay the interest on the public debt, our pledge in incurring that debt was fully satisfied. Now it seems from some cause the Secretary's opinion has changed. Mine has not. I cannot imagine for what purpose it is proposed to receive the Treasury notes instead of coin, when the Treasury notes are as valuable as coin. The duties upon imports of the United States have always, as a matter of fact, been paid in coin. It forms the only source from which under present laws the United States receives their supply of coin in which interest on their debt is guaranteed to be paid.

Then, I ask, if already the Treasury note is at par with coin, what further credit do you desire for it? And if no further credit is desired for it, it having reached the acme of a par value, why do you take from the public creditor and from the Treasury of the United States, the certain fund of coin that will enable it to perform with certainty its contract under the laws by which these bonds were authorized and issued? The tariff will continue in some shape. We cannot, and never will I suppose in the existence of the present generation, be without a tariff of duties upon imports. If the duties are paid in coin, it is a certainty to the creditor which he can rely upon. Make the duties payable in Treasury notes and you then throw upon him the risk, the possibility of having a suspension of specie payment by the United States, and of being paid not in coin according to contract, but in the paper money of the United States. The Government no longer having a supply of coin from its customs duties will be compelled to purchase it—and at what premium cannot now be foretold.

I cannot see any good reason for it. If the notes were below par and you sought to advance them to par by giving them this new function and use at the custom-house, there would be at least that reason for it; but the notes are at par; they are not only at par, but they are worth more to-day in the markets of the United States than a portion of the currency, the coin of silver which has been created a standard of value and stamped with the name of American dollars. My friend from Missouri [Mr. ARMSTRONG] says it is at par with gold, and worth more than gold, he says. Without questioning his statement, I only would say that if he is right it goes to strengthen the suggestion I have made, that if this be so, and the paper, as my friend from Missouri says, is stronger than gold, and as we all know it is just now more valuable than silver by 10 per cent., then why do you wish to give it an increased credit by what plainly to my mind is a breach of the contract under which every bond of the United States has been sold since the passage of the act of 1862? I cannot therefore see the expediency, I cannot see the right, I cannot see any good reason whatever for the payment of customs duties in the Treasury notes of the United States; but on the contrary I see every reason of morality, of justice, of expediency, in every light in which the subject can be viewed, that we should continue at least under existing laws, that source of supply of coin for the payment of interest upon the public debt, and not only so, but for the presence of coin in the country, which the continuance of duties payable in coin guarantees.

Mr. President, I regret that constant and distracting occupations in the last week have prevented me from presenting more methodically the views I have to-day endeavored to express: but I felt it to be the duty of a man holding the convictions that I do on the subject to express them just at this time. I do not know how far public sentiment may be aroused; I do not know how far the quiet opinion of this country may coincide with mine; but it is from my very heart that I warn my countrymen against approving, accepting, and continuing the issue of an irredeemable paper money by their Government, coupling with it the compulsory reception of that paper as a legal tender for the extinguishment of all just debts. And therefore I ask for the adoption of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. FERRY. I have no desire to prolong the discussion on this bill. I simply ask those who are in favor of the bill as it came from the House that, without regard to the constitutionality of the issue of this currency, they accept the fact that it is still the largest portion of the volume of the currency, and vote down the amendment. I trust that every amendment which may be offered to the bill will be voted down upon this ground. If we pass the bill simply as it came from the House, it becomes a law with the approval of the President; if it is amended in any particular, it goes back to the House, and runs the risk of its repassage there. I trust, without any reflection upon any amendment that has been offered or any amendment that may be offered, without expressing any opinion thereupon, that the bill, covering the simple idea of arresting the further contraction of the greenbacks, will be adopted by the Senate by the vote of its friends.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is one feature in the amendment that I do not feel at liberty to vote for. I would be glad to vote for the amendment of my colleague if it did not contain an exception in favor of the payment of customs dues exclusively in coin. Some years ago in discussing the financial question I arraigned the policy of a government in discrediting its own paper. I believed then and still believe that, if the Government of the United States issues its paper and compels other people to receive it, the Government ought itself to receive it in payment of dues to the Government. I am sorry to differ with my colleague in that respect. I should vote for his amendment but for that feature; but I cannot vote for an amendment which proposes to make a discrimination against the people of the country by the Government refusing to receive the paper which it issues and compels other people to receive it. I am therefore compelled to vote against the amendment very reluctantly, because, in my judgment, the Government ought to receive for every purpose the paper which it authorizes to be issued, which is to be received by other people for the payment of debts due to them.

Mr. HILL. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again reported.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. As I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] it does not propose to make this currency receivable in the payment of public dues.

Mr. BAYARD. My intention is to let the Government exercise its credit by the issue of Treasury demand notes. That I believe it is competent under the Constitution to do. Those notes when issued may be paid back to it for all dues excepting duties upon imported merchandise, but they shall not be any longer a legal-tender for the payment of debts, compulsorily. That must depend upon the contract and will of the parties; and I have no doubt as to what that will be; that it is a currency far surpassing in convenience any that has been issued by any other source within our jurisdiction, for if the Government credit be not good, and universally good, there is nothing that is. I do not propose to violate the plain letter of our statute under which the bonds were issued, in which we pledged very clearly to collect the duties in coin and to set apart the coin so collected for the payment of the interest on the public debt. That law was enacted in 1862, and proprio vigore it has entered into every contract made by the Government with its creditors since. When these notes shall have been issued they will be receivable by the Government for everything that is due to the Government, for all taxes of all kinds.

Mr. HILL. Excepting duties on imports.

Mr. BAYARD. Excepting duties on imports.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why except the duties on imports?

Mr. BAYARD. Because I believe we are bound by the clear meaning of the statute of the 25th of February, 1862, to collect duties in coin, and to set apart that gold coin for the payment of interest on the public debt. That has been the law all the way through. It is written across the face of every bond of the United States, not, I mean, in print, but written in conscience. Therefore I think we have no right to subject the creditors of the United States to a possibility of the suspension of specie payment. There never will be a suspension of specie payment to them if our contract under the law of 1862 is kept in force. There never can be a possibility of the suspension of specie payment upon the public debt of the United States as long as the law of 1862 is allowed to be in force, and this present measure, not restricted by my amendment, would be a repeal of the act of 1862.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I misunderstood the import of the amendment offered by my colleague. Not having seen the amendment I did not notice that it proposed to destroy the legal-tender character of these notes when reissued. I find that that is the case, so that as I misunderstood the amendment of my colleague I shall vote for the amendment. I would prefer, however, that the amendment should be so amended as to strike out the words "excepting duties on imports," and let the Government receive the notes that it issues for every purpose. I shall, however, vote for the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I did not expect the Senate to be brought to a vote on this question to-day, although I had no desire to address the Senate on the subject myself either to-day or at any time. I wish now to say that I concur in everything that has fallen from the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] on the subject of the power of Congress to make a legal-tender paper money. I do not believe that that power does exist under the Constitution of this country. I have always believed that it did not exist, even under the war power. The Supreme Court has held it to be constitutional as exercised in 1862, only under the war power, and I am willing to recognize that decision of the court as law as far as it applies to the present legal-tender currency; but I can never under any circumstances subscribe to the doctrine as an original proposition that the Congress of the United States does have power to make paper money a legal tender for the payment of private debts. On the other hand, I concur with what seems to be the real purpose of this bill as it comes to us from the House. I see no necessity myself for what you call further contraction. I am as good a hard-money man, to use a common phrase, as any man in the Senate or in the country. I want a sound currency, and I do not believe any depreciated money is sound currency; nor do I believe any currency is sound or any country is sound which tolerates except as a necessity a depreciated paper money. I want gold and silver for our money. I believe Congress has power to coin money. I believe that the word "coin" means metallic money. I believe we have no right to make anything else but metallic money. That is my opinion. Therefore I want gold and silver as our money: I want the gold dollar equal to the silver dollar and the silver dollar equal to the gold dollar.

I am perfectly well aware that in the present condition of this country gold and silver alone are not sufficient to constitute its currency and that we must have a paper currency, and I insist that that paper currency ought to be equal to gold and silver—that is, convertible into gold and silver. I do not say "converted into gold and silver." I have no respect for the argument which undertakes to prove that paper currency cannot be equal to gold and silver because there are not as many gold and silver dollars in the country as there may be paper dollars. Convertible, in my judgment, means that it shall have the same purchasing power, and whenever the paper currency gets to the point where it is equal in purchasing power to gold and silver then it ought to remain there. In my judgment, if we make this legal-tender money, as you have got it to-day, receivable in the payment of all public dues it will be equal to gold and silver with all the people of America. I think it is the only thing on earth that prevents it now from being absolutely equal in purchasing power to gold and silver.

I do not like the phraseology of the original bill as it comes from the House. While I am opposed to further contraction, while I think there is no necessity for further contraction, I do not like the phraseology of the bill as it comes from the House, because it does, indirectly at least, recognize the authority in Congress to make a legal-tender paper money. But still, in view of the fact that the money is out, and it has been held by the courts of the country under some power in the Constitution at least to be constitutional, I am willing to tolerate it and let it remain out. As an original proposition, I never would agree to it. Therefore, I am willing to vote for a proposition not to contract further the currency. I believe that the best thing this Congress could do would be to do just what the amendment of the Senator from Delaware indicates but does not perfect, and that is to issue a Treasury note of the character indicated by Mr. Calhoun in his speech in 1837. I believe we ought, if possible, to substitute for the present legal-tender currency the Treasury note suggested by Mr. Calhoun.

Mr. BAYARD. My amendment would lead to that.

Mr. HILL. Exactly. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware be adopted it will have the effect of making the present legal-tender currency, if I understand it, precisely the Treasury note suggested by Mr. Calhoun with one exception, and that is the Senator does not make this Treasury note receivable in payment of import duties.

Mr. BAYARD. That was not receivable in the payment of duties.

Mr. HILL. His speech is not now before me, but, as I understand it, Mr. Calhoun made the Treasury note receivable in the payment of public dues without any exception. That is my recollection of Mr. Calhoun's Treasury note. He compelled nobody to receive it but the Government, and the Government had to receive it. As I understand, import duties are dues to the Government; and I think my friend the Senator from Delaware is wrong when he says that the Treasury note suggested by Mr. Calhoun was not receivable in the payment of duties on imports.

Mr. BAYARD. At that time there was no debt of the United States worth talking about.

Mr. HILL. That is true.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. Calhoun had not this question in view at all. He conceded the power of the Government to issue its Treasury notes based upon the national credit, and that they could incidentally become a currency because they could be issued in that form, and that they would be received for all public dues. That was all he said.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Calhoun's idea was that the Treasury notes should be issued by the Government to the extent of the financial wants of the Government, and that those notes should be received in payment of all public dues, but in the payment of no private debts compulsorily; but, as Mr. Calhoun argued, and argued justly, and I think it would be the effect now, when the Government issued that Treasury note, pledging itself to receive it in the payment of all public dues, it would be the best currency that could be afforded the country. I believe so now. The Government would not issue that Treasury note for the purpose of making it a currency, recognizing the idea that nobody in this country could make currency but the Government, but it would issue the Treasury note to the extent of its own financial wants, with the understanding that the Government itself should receive that Treasury note in the payment of its own dues of every kind. The result would be that the people would take it in payment of private debts, because being convertible into gold and silver, under Mr. Calhoun's theory, it would be as good as gold and silver; it would be indeed preferable to gold and silver, because more convenient, and everything would operate to make it the very best currency that could be furnished to the country to the extent of the issue.

I believe in that. I believe Mr. Calhoun's theory was right; I believe it was wise, and I am anxious to see the Congress of the United States of this day carry it out. I believe the people will be delighted with it. I believe it will give us a currency at par with gold and silver. I believe it will give us a currency better than gold and silver in that it will be more desirable for circulation among the people; and while the courts cannot compel a creditor to receive it in payment of a private debt, every creditor will be glad to receive it in payment of a private debt, and it will be the most perfect currency this country ever has had. I do not believe that the legal-tender quality of what is called the greenback currency has ever given it any value whatever, and I believe the sooner Congress gets rid of that feature of the greenback currency the better for the country, the sooner we shall get back to the good old dollar. It was conceded by all parties before the war, whigs and democrats, strict constructionists and liberal constructionists, that the money of the Constitution was gold and silver. That is where we ought to get back again.

But the difficulty with the amendment of my friend the Senator from Delaware is that he excepts one debt due the Government for which the Treasury note shall not be received. It shall not be received, he says, in payment of duties on imports. I respect the reason assigned by the Senator for that. He says that we are pledged to the collection of the duties on imports in gold and silver as an obligation to our creditors, to the bondholders. As I understand, there is no pledge to the bondholder that we shall collect the duties on imports in gold, but there is a pledge to the bondholder, as I understand it, that we shall pay his interest in coin, and the object of making the duties payable in gold is to enable the Government to meet that obligation.

Mr. BAYARD. I may remind the Senator from Georgia that the act of 1862 in providing for the issue of the first greenback notes, as they were called, and for other purposes, provided that all duties upon imports should thereafter be payable in coin, and that the fund should be set apart for three purposes.

Mr. HILL. Yes; I admit that.

Mr. BAYARD. That law having prescribed that thereafter the duties should be payable in coin, and that that fund should be set apart, it seems to me very obvious that we have no right to diminish a security having once pledged it.

Mr. HILL. I say to my friend that I look to the substance of that act more than to the letter. My opinion is that the purpose of all the provisions to which the Senator refers was to assure the creditor that his debt should be paid in coin; that is all. It is nothing to the creditor what the Government collects its duties in, if the creditor gets coin for his interest on his debts. There is no virtue whatever to the creditor in the Government collecting its duties on imports in coin. The Government simply adopted that rule to enable it to perform the pledge it had given to the creditor that it would pay its interest on the debt in coin. If the Government pays that interest in coin or its equivalent, it is no violation of the pledge to the creditor to collect the duties on imports in other than coin; by no means. The point I make is that if we will make this Treasury note, which I am so much in favor of doing, just as the Senator from Delaware has proposed, receivable also in the payment of duties on imports, we shall find that that Treasury note will be equal everywhere to a gold dollar, and the creditor will be perfectly willing to take it for the interest on his debt because in taking it he takes what is equivalent to gold. Therefore I respectfully say to the Senator from Delaware that to make the duties on imports payable in Treasury notes will be no violation of any pledge given to the creditor, because it will not impair the value of that which we promised the creditor; he will get the equivalent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of gold or greenbacks?

Mr. HILL. It will be payable in Treasury notes. I do not like the word "greenbacks," because it always conveys to me the idea of a legal tender, and I abhor legal-tender paper money issued by the Government. I say to make this Treasury note, greenback, if you please, receivable in the payment of duties on imports will not violate any pledge we have given to the creditor, because it will not lessen the value of that which we promised to pay to the creditor. We will still pay him his coin if he prefers it, because there is no trouble in getting coin when a paper currency is equivalent to coin; and as I said before no creditor will want it. Whenever a man knows that his hundred-dollar paper bill is equal to a hundred dollars in gold he does not want the gold, and as for silver he will not take it; he will keep his paper money.

But another reason why I object to this qualification in the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware is that it keeps up the distinction in the country between gold and silver and greenbacks or paper money in the idea of their value. Why, if your money is to be equal to gold, will you say it shall not be received in the payment of duties on imports? The clause was put there originally, that pledge was made, because the idea was that the greenback currency might not be equal to gold, and there was no way to make it equal to gold then known, there was such an overissue; and the distinction grew out of that. But I want to see the time come in the history of this country when a dollar will be a dollar. I care not whether it is a silver dollar or a gold dollar or a paper dollar; let the American Government promise a dollar and when it promises a dollar let it be understood that it promises the stamped coin or its equivalent, and every paper dollar issued, whether by private corporations or by the Government, must be held to be equal to a dollar of stamped coin by the Government. Therefore let the duties on imports be payable in dollars. If a man carries to the Treasury a dollar printed by the Government, pledged by the Government, a Treasury note, let the Government receive it. I am unwilling for this Government to admit that any dollar is more acceptable to the Government than the dollar which the Government itself issues. It is the duty of this Government to issue no paper dollar unless the Government is satisfied in issuing it that it is equal to the gold and the silver dollar. We have arrived at a point now where we can do that; and I object to this qualification in the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, simply because it keeps up this distinction. It grows out of the idea that one dollar is better than another dollar, that the Government will take one dollar for duties on imports and will not take another dollar for duties on imports, when it is the duty of the Government to see that a dollar is a dollar, whether it be a paper dollar or a gold dollar or a silver dollar, I repeat.

I wish, therefore, the Senator from Delaware would modify his amendment. I want to make the currency, whatever it be, if you continue this greenback currency as you have got it out with its present qualities, receivable in payment of all dues, and I believe it will be equal to gold at once. I believe the creditor who is pledged now to have his interest paid in coin will take it. But suppose the creditor would not take it. There is no trouble about the Government raising gold at any time it wants now to pay the interest on the public debt. Suppose you receive the duties on imports in Treasury notes and the creditor will not take those Treasury notes for his interest, either the importing merchant has got to sell something to raise gold to pay his import duties, or the Government has got to buy gold to pay its interest. In my judgment, it is better to have one purchaser of gold, and let that be the Government, than to have innumerable purchasers of gold in the shape of importing merchants; it would be better for the country. But for myself my great idea is, it is the corner-stone of my financial system, to have a gold dollar, a silver dollar, and a paper dollar, each constitutional, each legal, and each equal to the other. Whenever you reach that point, let us have as many as we can. I do not care how many paper dollars you have as long as those paper dollars are equal to gold and silver dollars, and I do not care how many silver dollars you have, and I do not care how many gold dollars you have.

This thing of paper money is very much like filling a reservoir with water. As long as you pour and the reservoir is not full you can pour on and you will increase the quantity of water, but the moment the reservoir is full and the water runs over it does not matter how much you pour afterward; it is all wasted; you accumulate no more water. So you can issue paper money with perfect safety and perfect propriety as long as it is equal to the gold dollar; and I do not care how much you issue if you keep it equal to the gold and to the silver dollar, if you keep it equal to the standard of money; but the moment your paper money begins to depreciate that moment the reservoir is full; that moment the demand of the country is satisfied; that moment you have got as much currency as you ought to have, and the more you issue the more it will depreciate, the greater will be the waste. The moment, therefore, that your money begins to depreciate, that moment you ought to stop issuing it. I do not want to do anything myself that implies that one dollar authorized by this Government is of less value than another dollar.

I might vote for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware for one reason, because in my judgment it does get rid of one evil; that is, it gets free of the legal-tender feature of the greenback currency. That I believe is an unconstitutional feature, and I want to get rid of it; but I say frankly that the bill as the amendment of the Senator from Delaware would amend it would only make it universally receivable in the payment of all dues due to the public which would be just my idea, and that is Mr. Calhoun's Treasury note precisely. It is a constitutional Treasury note, it will be a good Treasury note, better than gold and silver, and the best currency this country ever saw, and there will be no danger of having too much of it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this measure at any length, having already expressed my opinion in relation to it, but I must say that it is incomprehensible to me how Senators who are opposed to contraction can favor this bill. It must be obvious to any Senator who examines the question that, if we do anything to make a difference between coin and paper, that very moment we banish the coin from circulation, and all the object that can be gained in that way would be to increase the amount or to retain the present amount of paper currency in circulation. Under the resumption act it was made lawful to retire the United States notes until the sum was reduced to $300,000,000. The present amount is $346,000,000. Therefore all the contraction that would be possible under that law would be $46,000,000; but, under the proposition which is made here, it may be to endanger resumption and thereby effect a contraction of from two to three hundred millions. How Senators can favor a proposition of this kind, I am at a loss to discover.

The Senator from Georgia surprises me by his kind of logic. He is in favor of a paper dollar that is as good as a coin dollar, and yet he is for taking away the only means the Government has for making the paper dollar equal to the coin dollar; that is to say, he is in favor of receiving all paper and having no receipts in coin. The Senator surprises me by another bit of logic, and that is that he regards the greenbacks with some degree of abhorrence and would destroy their legal-tender character, and yet he is now for retaining their legal-tender character and for even extending it where the plighted faith of the nation has been pledged that they should not be received and where it is proclaimed on every note that is in existence that they shall not be received, namely, that they shall not be received for duties on imports.

I know that probably a majority of the Senate are in favor of the passage of this bill. I do not speak for the purpose of retarding its passage, but I must say that in my judgment Senators who are opposed to contraction are certainly making a very grave mistake. If they want to continue a large volume of currency and of money in the country, this is not the way to do it. If we want all the paper we have except $46,000,000 and two or three hundred millions of coin in circulation, this measure is calculated to defeat that object. I believe so most sincerely, and I think it will so be found.

I may as well avow at once that I now believe that we are embarked for a long term of years upon silver coin as the only coin of the country. I do not expect that after the 1st of January we shall be in the receipt of anything more in the shape of gold coin; our receipts will be confined to silver and nothing else. I desire that we shall maintain our paper currency at least at the par value of silver. I fear that this measure in the end will result in defeating even that object, that we shall go back to paper and that paper will sink below the par value of even silver coin. I ask gentlemen to consider this before they take this last step in this direction.

Mr. HILL. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Delaware by striking out the words "excepting duties on imports;" so as to read:

Provided, That the said notes when so reissued shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, and not be otherwise a legal tender; and any reprint of the said notes shall bear this superscription.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, even without the suggested amendment of the Senator from Georgia, is a very radical one. It would work an extraordinary change in the currency of the United States. I venture to read it in the hearing of the Senate:

That the said notes—

Referring to the legal-tenders—

when so reissued, shall be receivable for all dues of the United States, excepting duties on imports, and not be otherwise a legal tender.

It takes $346,000,000 and declares right off that they shall not from that day forward be considered a legal tender between man and man.

Mr. BAYARD. Not precisely that. The Senator will see, if he will take the bill before the Senate, that it provides for the reissue of the notes when the same shall have become the property of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. That is, as fast as they come in, they are to be paid out.

Mr. BAYARD. I mean this, that whenever a note has been paid; in other words, whenever the Government has performed the promise in regard to which it has been sixteen years in default, and after it has once paid the note, it shall not be reissued with the legal-tender clause attached. That is my proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the Senator, I think, still further muddles the currency, because those notes that do not come in for redemption will still be a legal tender, but those that happen to come in for redemption when they are reissued will not be a legal tender; and so the Senator from Delaware gives us two kinds of Government paper.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator will read the amendments he will find that the notes so reissued shall bear a superscription which will prevent their being mistaken for legal-tender notes.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not, of course, trying to misrepresent the Senator. I understand him to aim at this, that when a greenback shall go into the Treasury and the holder of it receives his gold or silver for it, the Government then reissues it and reissues it with the legal-tender quality stricken out.

Mr. BAYARD. And that fact shall be printed on it.

Mr. BLAINE. And that fact shall be printed on it, of course. So, then, if they all go in and all go out again we should have a uniform kind of paper currency issued by the Government which would have the legal-tender quality struck out, but if one-half go in and only one-half go out, we should have then two kinds of Government paper, still further, as I say, muddling the currency of the country. Then of course the Senator will observe that the power of the national banks to redeem their notes, as they now have the right to do, in the legal-tender paper of the country is by that much restricted, and you have thrown them back into "confusion worse confounded," because I suppose this second edition of paper money would not be of the kind which the national banks might redeem their notes in. If I understand the Senator from Delaware correctly, he would not consider that a national bank was discharging its obligation as it would be to-day by handing out one of these new notes for its bill, unless he adopts the novel theory of the Senator from Georgia, that the very moment you take the legal-tender out of the note, that moment it becomes equal to gold.

Mr. BAYARD. I apprehend that resumption by the Treasury of the United States would be of course resumption by the national banks.

Mr. BLAINE. Ah! that may be; but the great instrumentality hitherto relied upon for resumption by the national banks was that if the Government paper was brought up equal to coin, and the national banks only had the obligation they now have to redeem in the three hundred and odd million of legal-tenders, they may meet their obligation; but the amendment of the Senator from Delaware takes away that power of the national banks to redeem.

The Senator from Georgia does not intend by his amendment that coin shall reach the Treasury of the United States in any way whatever. The Senator from Delaware does make a reservation that duties on imports shall still be paid in coin. Even that conservative clause the Senator from Georgia moves to strike out, and moves then to put us upon a basis of paper money in which the United States nowhere is in receipt of coin and which has no power to pay debts between man and man. I cannot imagine a more ingenious contrivance for rendering confusion in the financial world worse confounded than the joint amendments of the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Georgia.

Undoubtedly this whole question of resumption has been radically changed by the coinage of the silver dollar. I do not see where the honorable Senator from Vermont, whose committee has charge of the bill, derives his fear that the paper money of the United States is going below the silver dollar. The Secretary of the Treasury may begin resumption to-morrow with $10,000,000 in silver, in my judgment, with perfect safety.

Mr. MORRILL. On the proposition of not receiving it for duties, I should have stated.

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, of course, on the proposition not to receive it for duties; but let it stand as it is. My vote is largely influenced by the fact that the entire financial situation of the country has been changed by the introduction of the silver dollar. No man pretends with his eyes open that the silver dollar has the value of the gold dollar. No man pretends that when the silver dollar begins to fill the channels of circulation the Government will receive any gold whatever for duties. No man pretends that if you open the subtreasury to-morrow in New York and invite every holder of a legal-tender note to go and get silver in exchange for it there will be any demand for the silver. You cannot do that with gold. I should say, then, to formulate the matter, that resumption in silver you have got plenty of; resumption in gold you have not half enough.

I have no faith that this Government will pay gold next January; I have abundant faith that it can pay silver to-day. There is the problem, and it has rendered me entirely careless on the question whether you contract the legal-tender notes any further. It is not going to make one hair white or black in regard to resumption whether you contract, as has been the habit, or whether you cease according to this bill. Your resumption is equally easy in silver whether you contract or whether you cease to contract; you are not able to resume in gold. There is the whole problem to my mind.

Mr. BAYARD. Not compelled to, by any present law?

Mr. BLAINE. No, not compelled by any present law. Therefore you are not able to do so, because the people who owe you coin will not pay you gold, they will pay you silver, and you do not have gold coin to pay back to those to whom you promised coin. Of course it puts us down on the silver basis. If you want silver resumption we are there to-day. There is not a man in the Senate Chamber, on either side of it, who will give a thousand dollars in greenbacks in exchange for a thousand dollars in silver.

Mr. BAYARD. They would not give the silver to you to-day.

Mr. BLAINE. They would not give what?

Mr. BAYARD. They would not give a thousand silver dollars for a thousand dollars in currency at the Treasury.

Mr. BLAINE. At the Treasury?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly not.

Mr. BLAINE. Nobody wants it.

Mr. BAYARD. Men want it to pay duties.

Mr. BLAINE. The question of course is different so long as the financial channels are not sufficiently filled with silver dollars to answer the demand for duties, but at a coinage of $48,000,000 a year that will very soon do. The Secretary of the Treasury tried the experiment the other day of letting out a hundred thousand dollars in silver dollars in New York and they were in the subtreasury the next day.

Mr. BAYARD. Through the custom-house?

Mr. BLAINE. They went into the subtreasury through the custom-house. They came right back through the custom-house. You have half a million silver dollars to-day in New York. The Secretary of the Treasury stands to-day and will not let them out. He dare not let them out. The Government of the United States is to-day exactly in that position that it dare not let out silver. Why? Because it ceases gold payment the moment it lets out the silver.

Mr. BAYARD. It can pay the interest on the public debt in the silver.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course you have got to pay the interest on the public debt in the coin you receive. I say that we have radically changed the whole financial situation, so entirely changed it that I have changed my position in regard to this bill. What is the object? How is it going to affect us at all whether we seek the contraction of greenbacks to-day or whether we postpone it until next January, as long as the situation remains the same in regard to silver coin? I should like the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance, with whom I have been in the habit of co-operating, to tell me what possible difference in the question of resumption is it going to work if you leave the coinage of the silver dollar exactly where it is to-day with reference to the gold dollar? What are we going to do? If passing this bill will give content to any uneasy souls between the two oceans, why not give it to them? You are not going, I repeat, to make a hair white or black in your ability to give coin or to receive coin by passing this measure; and I shall vote for it for that reason.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine utters his opinions with a good deal of confidence; but I cannot say that I can accord to them my own judgment. Undoubtedly, until there is a sufficient amount of coin in the country to redeem with, either in one or the other, we cannot expect to keep greenbacks or legal-tender notes up at par.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me a moment? I will just state that the friends of the original bill thinking that the pressing of amendments now will antagonize the bill perhaps, and that it is too late in the session to do so, under all the circumstances, after expressing my own convictions of what is my chief desire, I will withdraw the amendment I offered to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. I would say to the Senator from Maine that when we reach the position of having nothing but silver, even silver resumption cannot be maintained without a suitable quantity of reserve in the Treasury. Therefore his idea that we may throw out an unlimited amount of paper and still resume is, in my judgment, utterly unfounded. So long as the people decline to receive silver in payment of paper, of course you will have enough of the silver; but the moment the conviction rests upon the people that we are to have nothing better than silver, then it will be necessary that we shall have a suitable quantity of it in order to make resumption possible even in silver, and the Senator from Maine I think understands that as well as any body else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after the word "circulation," in line 10, to insert:

Provided, That the said notes when so reissued shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, excepting duties on imports, and not to be otherwise a legal tender; and any reprint of the said notes shall bear this superscription.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If he were present, I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 18, nays 42; as follows:

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan who has charge of this bill [Mr. FERRY] made an appeal to those who are friendly to the proposition contained in it to vote against all amendments to it and vote for it just as it came from the House. Precisely what is to be gained by that course, unless it be to hasten the passage of the bill by one or two days, I do not know. There are circumstances, perhaps, in which such an appeal ought to be valued; but as there is no such exigency, as it seems to me, that requires this bill to go immediately into effect, I think that it ought to be perfected so far as it can be in phraseology without reference to that appeal. I do not desire to embarrass it; I expect to vote for it. I am in favor of the principle on which it is founded and of the proposition which it contains; but I do think as a piece of legislation it is open to considerable criticism, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of the language of it with a view of suggesting an improvement. The first sentence of the bill is as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer under him, to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes.

"Any more" than what? What has the Secretary of the Treasury canceled and retired up to this time? What authority of law has he now to cancel and retire other than that particular amount which makes the difference between the amount of the national-bank notes issued when any new bank under the resumption act is organized for the purpose of issuing circulation? So much for that. Now listen to the second sentence:

And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury, under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed.

The first sentence of the bill had already made it unlawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel any more of the United States legal-tender notes. Why repeat in the very next sentence that provision by piling up words and making instances, specifying the occasions for the reception of these notes into the Treasury, unless it be for the simple purpose, as it certainly can have no other effect, to make that which ought to be perfectly clear without it ambiguous by a repetition which is vain? The first sentence prohibits, by making it unlawful, the cancellation and retirement of legal-tender notes after the passage of this act. The second sentence goes on and simply repeats the prohibition:

And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury, under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed—

Then the bill goes on to add—

but they shall be reissued and paid out again, and kept in circulation.

That is peremptory. That is an express injunction on the Secretary of the Treasury; he shall do it. Under what circumstances? For what consideration? The usual language which has occurred is different. Every statute prior to the passage of this act, if it become one, has used other phrases, as for instance, it has used a phrase "that he shall reissue them from time to time as the exigencies of the public service may require." But here he is to do it whether the exigencies of the public service require it or not, and he not only is to reissue them but to pay them out again, and he is to keep them in circulation. I should like to know how it is possible by the passage of an act of Congress to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in circulation these Treasury notes. I suppose what is meant is that they are to be kept as the authorized currency of the country, to be issued from the Treasury as other currency, as the Treasury may have occasion to issue any money, and to let them remain in circulation if by the laws of trade and business they circulate; but how the Secretary of the Treasury is to impart that quality to them, to give them that efficiency, unless they have it without, I do not understand.

To meet these objections I propose to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

That whenever any United States legal-tender notes are returned to the Treasury, they shall be reissued from time to time as the exigencies of the public service may require, or others with like legal-tender quality and of equal amount issued in lieu thereof; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall not cancel or retire any of the same: Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation of mutilated notes and the issue of other similar notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, it strikes me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is open to the same criticism which he makes upon the bill as it now stands to some extent, unless his intention is to give a power of issuing notes beyond those which may have become mutilated; for that provision is already in the bill and remains in the bill as amended, as he proposes it. Except for the purpose of supplying the place of mutilated notes I am myself entirely opposed to giving the power of issuing new notes, and I suppose the Senator from Ohio did not intend to give an additional power to issue more notes except to supply the place of mutilated notes.

Mr. MATTHEWS. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me, there is no possible ambiguity, it seems to me. The body of the bill, as I propose it, gives authority explicitly to the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue the identical notes received into the Treasury or in lieu of them any others of like quality.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I think that privilege ought to be confined entirely to supplying the place of mutilated notes.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Very well. The proviso in regard to mutilated notes covers that ground.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. That is precisely the point to which I called the attention of the Senator from Ohio. If he will so amend his amendment as to avoid this objection I shall vote for it.

Mr. MATTHEWS. The objection, then, is met by striking out of the amendment the words:

Or others with like legal-tender quality and of equal amount issued in lieu thereof.

That being supplied by the proviso which is adopted on the amendment, which authorizes the issue of new notes in lieu of notes destroyed by mutilation, I will strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio modifies his amendment as stated.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I am in favor of that amendment, and for the purpose of showing my position upon this bill I will proceed to state the grounds which I occupy upon it. While I am opposed to the entire idea of an irredeemable greenback circulation or mere fiat money, and think it the greatest delusion of this age, yet since our Treasury notes, under the pledge of the nation for redemption in coin, have practically reached par, and under such circumstances few will want the coin when this paper is so much more convenient; and under the policy now practicable and likely to be adopted they can in all probability be kept at par, at least for the present, and until another session of Congress, when further legislation may correct any evil likely to arise, under such circumstances I am willing to support the House bill with the amendment just offered by the Senator from Ohio.

I do this not because I think the stagnation in business and what are called the hard times have arisen from the want of a sufficient volume of currency in the country such as it was, the fallacy of such an idea being, in my opinion, sufficiently shown by the fact that during the whole of the period of depreciation more of the currency of the country has lain idle in the banks and in the hands of capitalists for want of responsible borrowers willing to take and use it than in any other period of our history. Yet since this paper currency has now practically reached par, and is likely for some time at least to remain there, no great harm can be done by allowing the amount now outstanding to remain in circulation, especially as it is likely to lessen the demand for coin, and may in this manner contribute to hasten permanent resumption.

But I wish the bill so amended as I have indicated, because I do not think the Government has the constitutional power, in time of peace or under any but the war power, to issue such paper and make it a legal tender. As the bill now is, the language reads "and when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury," &c., then it shall not be retired but shall be reissued, &c. Having been redeemed, if it has been strictly and in fact redeemed, then the reissuing of it is equivalent to the exertion of the same power originally exerted to create this greenback currency.

But in my view there is no constitutional power under which that kind of currency can be made a legal tender in the United States, except the war power. For that reason I cannot vote for this bill as it now stands, without the amendment. With the amendment I can, because these Treasury notes having been issued under a state of things when the power did exist, it was for the judgment of Congress and they had the power to determine when and how they should be retired and canceled. They were not compelled to do it the next day after the war closed; they were not compelled to do it the next year; but it was left to their own judgment and discretion when the good of the country required it to be done. I can therefore see no reason to object to allowing the amount now outstanding to continue in circulation.

For these reasons I shall support this bill if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, or any similar amendment avoiding the constitutional objection, shall be adopted; otherwise, I shall be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, all I have to say in reply to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. MATTHEWS] is that if this were a matter of phraseology the criticism of my colleague [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] shows that there would be as many amendments proposed perhaps as there are minds in the Senate. If this was an original proposition covering a substantive idea, I should be as ready to submit it to my friend from Ohio as to any other Senator; but I care more for substance than form.

In regard to the suggestions of my colleague, I have to say that in the law of 1866 providing for the contraction of the greenbacks the phraseology, I think, was "redeemed and canceled." Forty-four million dollars of the currency were redeemed, not canceled, however, under that law of 1866. It was arrested February 4, 1868, if my memory serves me. Twenty-six million dollars of that amount was paid out following the panic of September, 1873; so, under the phraseology "redeemed and canceled," the money not only went into the Treasury but twenty-six of the forty-four millions redeemed were paid out, so that I am willing and satisfied to rest on the same phraseology used in the bill, and that is "redeem." I understand the construction placed upon it by the different Secretaries of the Treasury is that redemption does not in effect cancel.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire of the Senator if he does not know that the action of a former Secretary of the Treasury in reissuing that money after it had come into the Treasury was severely criticised in this body as being without warrant of law?

Mr. FERRY. More than that, I congratulated the Secretary of the Treasury upon his wisdom for doing it, and I congratulated the President of the United States who in a great emergency of that kind directed the Secretary of the Treasury that a portion of that money should be paid out, and all the complaint I had was that the whole $44,000,000 was not put out.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire of the Senator if he does not know that the Finance Committee of this body made a report condemning the action of that Secretary of the Treasury when the present Secretary of the Treasury was chairman of the Finance Committee and made the report, so that by the financial organ of this body the action of the then Secretary of the Treasury was condemned by the report submitted by the present Secretary, then chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate?

Mr. FERRY. I agree with the Senator to this extent: I did as one member of that committee criticise the present Secretary of the Treasury for canceling the greenbacks that were retired under the present resumption law now in force; but I did not believe under the phrase "redeem" that he was authorized to cancel or retire; nor do I believe it now. And, more than that, in the discussion upon this floor when that report was made, the question was put, I think, by the present Secretary of the Interior, then a Senator from the State of Missouri, to him, what the intention of the then Secretary of the Treasury would be under the phraseology "redeem" whether that would cover retirement and cancellation, and the present Secretary of the Treasury, then a Senator and chairman of the Committee on Finance, stated that that was to be left to future legislation. So that there was no formal construction given. I understand that the Secretary is said to have retired and canceled, but in my judgment he does it against the statute, for under the word "redeem" he has no authority to cancel and redeem. Neither do I think it really has been done. It has never been done under former Secretaries; and if it has been done under the present it has not been to the full extent of the retirement of greenbacks under the resumption act.

Now, Mr. President, without further taking up the time of the Senate, because I am anxious to have a vote upon this bill, I appeal to the Senate to pass the bill as it is. I hope that this amendment, without expressing an opinion upon its merits, will be voted down. I know its phraseology is more perfect than that of the bill, and anything coming from the facile pen of the Senator from Ohio would naturally be perfect; but it is the substance that I want to secure, and I hope the friends of the bill will vote down this amendment, as the other was voted down, and let us pass the bill pure and simple, as it came from the House.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, all I wish to say in reply to my colleague as to the instance which he puts of the practical construction adopted by a former Secretary of the Treasury when he paid out that twenty-six million which had been redeemed, is simply this: that I think he was guilty of a clear violation of the law, and I have never doubted it, and I believe if he had reissued what my colleague complains of him for not reissuing, but for canceling—if he had reissued it, he would again have been guilty of a clear violation of the law, because after a redemption strictly so called, having that effect in law, has once taken place, there is an end of the paper; it has no longer a legal existence for any of the purposes for which it was issued, and it requires the same power after that to reissue it that it required originally to issue it, and that being the war power, and not now existing, I think there would be a failure of power. It is to avoid that difficulty that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is very pertinent.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, I beg to acknowledge the compliment paid to me by the Senator from Michigan who spoke last before the one who has just taken his seat; but I must insist that I think he is wrong in not following it up practically by consenting to adopt my proposition instead of his own. He admits that he prefers substance to forms, and yet he insists upon a particular form of words against which his own colleague urges a constitutional objection, and he will not yield his adherence to that form even for the sake of getting that vote. Now it happens perhaps in the state of the vote in the Senate that that does not imperil the bill; but I think it is doing injustice to those who would like to vote for the substance in respect to which they agree with the Senator from Michigan who has charge of the bill, and that is giving, as they think in terms which are warranted by the Constitution, authority to continue the circulation of the legal-tender notes, rather than by insisting upon a particular phraseology to prevent votes in support of the bill which otherwise would be glad to go to it. That does not disturb me, because I believe that the Secretary of the Treasury, under existing law, has power to reissue notes that have been taken into the Treasury either in receipt of taxes or in case the resumption act goes into effect on the 1st of January, by what is there known as the process of redemption; and yet the point is so doubtful that I think it ought to be made explicit, and that is the very object of this bill, because if it is not a doubtful power, if there is no ambiguity in the existing law, if the present state of legislation is such as to need no amendment to confer that power, then there is no sort of use in passing this bill, for the whole effect of this bill is to simply give him that power.

Now why not give it to him in language which is free from ambiguity and free from the objection which comes from so responsible and conscientious a source as that of the colleague of the gentleman from Michigan, who makes the objection on the ground that the use of the word "redeem" in the bill now pending will prevent his voting for it on that account, whereas the substance of the idea is perfectly preserved in the modification which I propose? It gives the power unmistakably, in language far clearer, more direct, and yet conciliates votes which otherwise cannot be had. I really think that in the interest of the bill itself, for the sake of the measure, the Senator ought at least to accept the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I stated yesterday that in my opinion there would not be any great benefit derived from the passage of this bill or any serious harm done by it. So far as I am concerned, I am not particular about the greenback circulation of the country. I am perfectly willing that for the present it should continue at the amount now in circulation, because there seems to be an impression in the country that we have not a sufficient or at any rate not too much circulation. Therefore I should be perfectly willing that the present volume of greenback currency should be kept in circulation, and I could vote for the bill if the simple proposition was to prohibit the Secretary of the Treasury from retiring any more greenbacks. But when I come to look at this bill, it requires of me to do what I believe I have no constitutional authority to do. I read the provisions of this bill:

> And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury, under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed; but they shall be reissued and paid out again, and kept in circulation.

I have never believed that there was any authority in this Government to issue a legal-tender note of paper money. I have always believed that the original act issuing the greenback legal-tender notes was without warrant and authority of the Constitution of the United States, and I have so said everywhere that I have spoken about it. But this proposition is that after these greenbacks are redeemed, after the holder of greenbacks has gone and presented them to the Treasury and received for them silver or gold, and they have been redeemed in accordance with the promise impressed upon the face of the notes, they shall again be put in circulation; and thus if I vote for a proposition of this kind I vote that the law which originally put them in circulation was constitutional, because I vote for what is similar in its effect.

Sir, we all know, and I appeal to Senators on this side of the Chamber, that when this law was originally passed in 1862 under the exigencies of the war, we denounced it as unwarranted by the Constitution of the country. There is not a Senator on this side of the Chamber that expressed himself on that question but expressed his doubt of the constitutional authority of Congress to issue paper money as a legal tender for the payment of all debts, and yet if you adopt this bill every Senator who votes for it will vote that a note after it has been redeemed in accordance with the promise of the Government shall again be put in circulation and thus become himself a party to this violation of the Constitution of the country.

I cannot do it. If the single proposition were to prohibit the Secretary of the Treasury from retiring any greenbacks, I could vote for that proposition; but when you supplement that with a declaration that he shall again issue them and put them in circulation, I will not do that, because I do not believe I have any constitutional authority to do it. When the Supreme Court of the United States declared by its solemn judgment that the legal-tender notes issued by the Government were constitutionally issued, there was not a Senator on this side of the floor, so far as I have any knowledge, but what denounced and condemned that decision of the Supreme Court; and when the Supreme Court was reconstructed for the purpose of making that decision, we all know that the party to which I belong at least denounced the act of reconstruction of the Supreme Court for the purpose of making such a decision. But now a change has come over the spirit of some of our dreams, and we are asked to vote to-day for a provision of this bill that after these notes have been redeemed, after the Government has complied with its promise to the holder and paid the notes and taken them into the Treasury in the manner in which it was originally intended they should be paid, by redeeming them, they shall again be put in circulation. I would as soon have voted for the act originally as I can vote for that proposition. I do not believe there is any constitutional warrant for this Government to issue legal-tender notes. So long as I am not by my act responsible for their issue, I am perfectly willing they should continue out; but when you propose by my vote to make me a party to that transaction I beg leave to demur. I will not do it. I could vote perhaps for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, but I cannot vote for the bill as it is reported by this committee.

The amendment of the Senator from Ohio, so far as I understand it, avoids the constitutional objection raised by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY,] which I think is well taken, and I therefore am perfectly willing, as I said before, that the present volume of greenbacks should remain out, provided you do not provide for reissuing them after redemption. If they are paid in by persons owing dues to the Government for internal revenue, that is not a redemption, and I am willing that they may be reissued in that case in order to keep up the present amount of greenbacks; but after they are redeemed, after they are paid by the gold and silver of the Treasury, the obligation of the Government completely discharged, after that has been done, if you propose to reissue them again, you thereby assert the constitutional authority of Congress to make paper money a legal tender. For such a proposition I cannot vote. I could perhaps vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS.]

Mr. MATTHEWS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMLIN, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EUSTIS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it due to the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] who is absent under distressing circumstances, to announce that both before he left and since he left by a letter in writing, he requested his position to be stated upon this question. If he were here he would vote with the friends of this bill in all its various phases.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Barnum,	Christiancy,	Morrill,	Saulsbury.
Burnside,	Howe,	Paddock,
Butler,	Matthews,	Rollins,

NAYS—36.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Armstrong,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Teller,

Chaffee,	Eustis,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Conkling,	Garland,	McMillan,	Spencer.
Conover,	Gordon,	McPherson,
Davis of West Va.,	Hamlin,	Patterson,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. HAMLIN, (when his name was called.) On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. McPHERSON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] Were he here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SARGENT, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 41, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allison,	Dennis,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,

Dawes,	Hamlin,	Plumb,

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4519) fixing the time for holding the election for Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States in and for the State of California; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 396) to amend section 2464 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the cultivation of timber on the public domain.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3369) to provide for the publication of notices of contest under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4713) supplementary to the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act supplemental to an act of February 9, 1821, incorporating Columbian College, District of Columbia;"

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, on behalf of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. No. 930) granting a pension to Mary B. Marsh; and this day the act (S. No. 933) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to refund certain taxes erroneously collected.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

Mr. BAYARD. I was appointed by the Vice-President a Visitor to the West Point Military Academy, but I find that it will be out of my power to go there on the 1st of June. I therefore beg leave to resign the appointment, and I now submit a motion that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MORGAN.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I desire to state that I shall refuse myself to be upon the committee of conference as I know nothing about the details of the bill. I make the motion in the absence of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] who has charge of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4519) fixing the time for holding the election for Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States in and for the State of California was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. The appropriation bill now being before the Senate and the hour being late, I ask the Senator to allow me to submit a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator from Maine deems that important, of course I shall not press the consideration of the bill to-day. I merely desired to get it up so that it may be the regular order to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 28, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAIM OF CARLOS BUTTERFIELD.

Mr. BRIDGES. On behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to have the joint resolution (H. R. No. 168) requiring the Secretary of State to furnish information to Congress in reference to the claim of Carlos Butterfield against the Government of Denmark, which was passed on Saturday, changed from a joint resolution to a simple resolution of the House; so that it will read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby required, if not incompatible with the public service and interests of the United States, to furnish to the House a statement of the claim of Carlos Butterfield & Co., now represented by the said Butterfield, against the government of Denmark, for depredations committed by officers of said government against the property of said Carlos Butterfield, at the island of Saint Thomas, in the years 1854 and 1855, and what progress, if any, has been made in the settlement of said claim, together with a copy of all correspondence with the authorities and government of Denmark on the subject of said claim.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting the use of tents at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Des Moines, Iowa; and

An act (H. R. No. 3369) to provide for the publication of notices of contest under the homestead, pre-emption, and tree-culture laws of the United States.

RAILROAD FROM BISMARCK TO THE BLACK HILLS.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Railroads and Canals, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 927) to authorize the construction of a railroad from a point at or near Bismarck to the Black Hills. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDEN. If this bill is to be considered, there are two or three amendments which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDEN. I only consent on condition that I am permitted to offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SHELLEY] allow the amendments to come in?

Mr. SHELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELCH. I desire also to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. WOOD said: Does this bill require unanimous consent for its consideration?

The SPEAKER. The bill came in by unanimous consent for consideration; of course that means subject to points of order that may lie against anything that may be in the bill. A member cannot intelligently give his consent to the consideration of a bill unless he knows what is in it.

Mr. WOOD. If it takes half an hour to read the bill, I think it is likely that it contains matters to which objection might be made.

Mr. DICKEY. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHELLEY. I submit the objection comes too late.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make the point of order that the bill appropriates property of the United States and should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNNELL. In reference to the point of order, let me state that there is a law giving the right of way through the Territories, and this bill confers no other power than already exists by the operation of general law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, desires to say that distinctly by its third section it gives stone, timber, gravel, and other materials for the construction and maintenance of this railroad.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Before the Chair makes his ruling I would like to call his attention to the fact that the bill grants nothing but what is granted by a general law passed in the last session of the Forty-third Congress, which granted the right of way to every railroad company that might be incorporated in any of the Territories over all of the public lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be the general law. But here is a specific law giving to a certain corporation stone, timber, gravel, and other materials, land one hundred feet in width on each side of the railroad, and forty acres at each station.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is exactly in the language of the general law granting right of way to corporations in the Territories, and the only thing this bill provides for is the incorporation; and the only reason it is necessary to provide for the incorporation is because the railroad goes through two or three Territories. If it only went through one Territory the company could be incorporated in that Territory and have all those privileges.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the third section read.

Mr. WOOD. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in objecting to the consideration of the bill; but the Chair thinks that the bill is still subject to every point of order which could be made upon it under the rules of the House.

Mr. WOOD. I submit, how can any member know it is right to object to the consideration of a measure until he knows what is in it?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given for this bill to be considered. But of course that left the bill subject to every point of order which under the rules a member has a right to make. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Kentucky, and the Clerk will now read the third section.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Is this bill reported from any committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The Clerk will now read the third section of the bill.

The Clerk read the third section, as follows:

That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said company for the construction and operation of said railroad, telegraph lines; and the right, power, and authority are hereby given to said company to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of the road, earth, stone, timber for tying and bridging said road, gravel, and other materials for the construction and maintenance thereof. Said right of way is granted to said corporation to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said railroad through the public domain, including all necessary ground, not to exceed forty acres at any one station, for station-buildings, workshops, engine-houses, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I would like to have read the provision of the general law granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the right of way through the public lands of the United States is hereby granted to any railroad company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, except the District of Columbia, or by the Congress of the United States, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of the central line of said road; also, the right to take, from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, material, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn outs, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount twenty acres for each station, to the extent of one station for each ten miles of its road.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does not this bill provide that there shall be forty acres granted for each station?

The SPEAKER. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. And the general law grants but twenty acres.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The Committee on Public Lands recommend an amendment.

Mr. LATHROP. Does not the third section of this bill provide that timber, gravel, stone, &c., may be taken from the public lands for the maintenance and for the repair of the road, as well as for the construction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt but that the point of order lies against the bill and so decides.

Mr. SHELLEY. Then I will withdraw the bill.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 380, to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Toledo, Ohio, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5050) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BUNDY. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUNDY. By the RECORD of this morning it is made to appear that I was paired on yesterday with two gentlemen on the same vote. About two weeks since I obtained leave of absence from the House, having arranged a pair with my colleague, Mr. BEEBE. On my return yesterday I went to his seat, thinking that perhaps he had requested that the pair should continue during the present week. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] with whom the pair was left to be announced in case we were both absent informed me that Mr. BEEBE on leaving the city, on the 24th of this month, had arranged a pair with our colleague, Mr. KETCHAM. So understanding, and desiring to leave the House on account of illness, I arranged a pair for the day with my colleague, Mr. COX.

Mr. EDEN. On that point I will state that the mistake was made by myself. The gentleman from New York, Mr. BUNDY, came to me and inquired about the pair with Mr. BEEBE. Having in my desk an old pair between Mr. BEEBE and Mr. KETCHAM, I put my hand on that first and informed Mr. BUNDY that Mr. BEEBE was paired with Mr. KETCHAM. It was my mistake.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] will find the correction made on page 3854 of the RECORD.

Mr. BUNDY. But that does not explain the fact that I still appear to be paired at the same time with two gentlemen.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is all right now.

CLOAK-ROOM MEN OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time House joint resolution No. 178, to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll. This joint resolution has been returned from the Senate with an amendment. These cloak-room men have not had any money since the beginning of this session. The amendment of the Senate simply makes an appropriation which the original resolution did not make.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, to insert after the word "such," in line 3 of the joint resolution, the words "to the close of the present fiscal year, and the sum of $3,913 is hereby appropriated for that purpose; provided," so that the joint resolution will read:

That ten laborers, known as cloak-room men of the House of Representatives, who clean the Hall of the House daily, are entitled to pay as laborers from the 16th day of December last, and that they be paid as such to the close of the present fiscal year, and the sum of $3,913 is hereby appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That hereafter eight laborers only be employed as session laborers on the roll of the Doorkeeper of the House to perform said labor, and that they be paid at the same rate as other session laborers.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I now call for the regular order.

Mr. WOOD. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to ask that House bill No. 4413, returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments of the Senate concurred in.

Mr. MILLS. Is it understood that a number of other gentlemen here may ask unanimous consent for other matters? If not, it may as well be stopped right here.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object or make any point of order?

Mr. MILLS. I do not make any point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I make a point of order. Does not the call for the regular order prevent all this?

Mr. WOOD. My colleague [Mr. COX] withdrew his call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order can be held in reserve until the bill and amendments have been read.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw my point of order in this case, but will renew it immediately after.

FREE ENTRY OF ARTICLES FOR EXHIBITION, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read by the Clerk.

The title was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will now be read.

The amendments of the Senate were as follows:

In lines 3 and 4 insert the word "hereafter" after the word "material;" in line 6, after the word "sale," insert "nor for any other purpose than is hereinbefore expressed, &c., all such articles imported as aforesaid now in bond;" also add the following:

Provided, That the parties importing articles as aforesaid shall be required to give bonds with sufficient sureties, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, for the payment of lawful duties which may accrue, should any of the articles aforesaid be sold, transferred, or used contrary to the provisions and intent of this act.

The next amendment was to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Under the direction of the Committee of Ways and Means, I move to concur in that amendment of the Senate.

The question was taken, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TROUBLES AT EL PASO.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table an executive communication upon the subject of Mexican incursions, that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and I will ask at the same time permission to print some remarks in the RECORD in relation to the subject.

There was no objection; and the Speaker laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of the majority and minority reports of the commission to investigate the El Paso troubles in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and leave was granted to Mr. MILLS to print some remarks in relation thereto. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry as to the order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the unfinished business of yesterday, the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Two weeks ago a special order was made that the bill in relation to the life-saving service should come up to-day, after the reading of the Journal. I know that the Army appropriation bill is the unfinished business, but I propose to ask the Chair whether the bill in relation to the life-saving service will retain its place after the Army appropriation bill shall have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The order making that bill a special order is a continuing order, and it will come up in due course. The unfinished business of to-day is the Army appropriation bill, upon which the previous question has been ordered, and which was under consideration when the House adjourned last evening.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill regulating interstate commerce stands over as unfinished business, and I shall insist that it resumes its place when the Army appropriation bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The life-saving-service bill of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] follows immediately after the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does it come immediately after the interstate-commerce bill?

Mr. BURCHARD. The bill relating to internal revenue is next after the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. ROBERTSON, who has charge of the life-saving-service bill, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. COX, of New York. I know that; but we have an understanding about it.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to report from the Committee of Elections a bill in relation to the election of Congressmen in California. It is agreed to by gentlemen from that State upon both sides of the House, and it is desirable that it should be passed before the House adjourns.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that that is not a privileged report which the Committee of Elections has a right to make at any time.

Mr. REAGAN. I must insist, I think, upon the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw my objection.

No further objection being made,

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee of Elections, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4519) fixing the time for holding the election for Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States in and for the State of California.

The bill was read. It provides that the election for Representatives to the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States, in and for the State of California, shall be had and held in said State at the general election to be held in said State on the first Wednesday in September, 1879, any law now in force to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire only to say that the members on both sides of the House from California have informed me that the election in California upon the day now fixed by law for the election of Congressmen would cost the State one quarter of a million of dollars. The election for State officers takes place in September, and to require another election in November would cost a quarter of a million dollars, and therefore I hope that the bill will be passed. I call for the previous question on the bill.

Mr. SCALES. I hope the gentleman will yield for an amendment to include the State of North Carolina, which is in the same position.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. We will attend to that hereafter.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] that the bill ought to apply to subsequent elections as well as to the elections next year.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. They can change their constitution so as to make it conform to the general law.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I now insist on the regular order.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the House resumes the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, which was pending when the House adjourned last evening, and the Clerk will resume the reading of the amendments thereto reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In lines 16, 17, 18, and 19 strike out the following proviso:
Provided, however, That not exceeding five hundred recruits in addition thereto may be kept at recruiting-stations, as the necessities of the service may require.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Upon that amendment I desire to have a separate vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 35, under the head of Pay department, to strike out "$8,390,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,900,000;" so that it will read:

Pay department:
For pay of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, privates, (including those employed as Indian scouts,) storekeepers, musicians, and veterinary surgeons, artificers, farriers, and saddlers, except as hereinafter enumerated, $9,900,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was not agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is a mistake in that amendment which I ask unanimous consent to have corrected now. The sum should be $9,384,000.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 51 and 52, to strike out "$340,263.65" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000;" so that it will read:

For travel pay and commutation of subsistence to discharged soldiers, $400,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to that amendment and ask a separate vote upon it.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 53, 54, and 55, to strike out "$255,813.20" and insert in lieu thereof "$310,000;" so that it will read:

For retained pay to discharged men, $310,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to that amendment and ask for a separate vote upon it.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 59, 60, and 61, being the appropriation "for pay to soldiers for clothing not drawn," strike out "$343,278.33" and insert "$400,000."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 70 to 74 the following:
For pay of officers rendered supernumerary by the operation of this act, from July 1, 1878, to January 1, 1879, date hereinafter fixed for their discharge, $497,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 75, 76, and 77 the following:
For pay and allowances to be paid to officers in consideration of their discharge by operation of this act, $2,400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 79, 80, and 81, strike out "$13,489,229.18" and insert "$12,272,932."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment so as to read "$11,589,287,18."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 89, strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:
For subsistence of twenty-five thousand enlisted men.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 96 and 97, strike out "$8,747,200" and insert "$10,347,700."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 104 to 107, strike out the following:
Less $300,060 heretofore appropriated, leaving a net appropriation under this act of $1,915,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 137, strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so that the paragraph will read:
For purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted, $100,000.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After line 188, insert the following:
And in case any item of the said appropriations for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, and Army transportation shall prove insufficient for this purpose, the excess in any other of these items may, with the written consent of the Secretary of War, be applied thereto: Provided, however, That the total amount appropriated under these heads shall not be exceeded.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In section 2, strike out, in lines 2 and 3, the words "six" and "fifteen" and insert "eight" and "eighteen;" so that the section will read:
That the number of cavalry regiments is hereby reduced to eight and the number of infantry regiments to eighteen, &c.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5 of section 4, after the word "hundred," insert "and twenty-five;" so as to read: "and such number of privates not exceeding one hundred and twenty-five as the President may direct."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out section 7, as follows:
SEC. 7. That hereafter the Adjutant-General's department shall consist of one Adjutant-General with the rank and pay of colonel, two assistant adjutant-generals with the rank and pay of lieutenant-colonel, and two assistant adjutant-generals with the rank and pay of major. And the President is hereby authorized to detail from the captains and first lieutenants of the Army such number not exceeding ten as he may deem necessary to serve as assistant adjutant-generals, who shall have while so serving the rank and pay of captain of cavalry: Provided, That five of the present force over and above the number authorized in this section shall be retained until the 1st day of July, 1879, and the detail of five of the number proposed to be detailed in this section shall be deferred until the same date. Vacancies in the grade of major in said department shall be filled by selection from the officers who shall have been detailed to duty therein pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That hereafter the Inspector-General's department shall consist of one Inspector-General with the rank and pay of colonel, and two assistant inspector-generals with the rank and pay of lieutenant-colonel. And the President is hereby authorized to detail, from officers of the Army not below the rank of major, such number, not exceeding one for each military geographical division and department, as he may deem necessary, to serve as assistant inspector-generals. Vacancies in the grade of lieutenant-colonel in said department shall be filled by selection from the officers who shall have been detailed to duty therein pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "Army," in line 7 of section 10, insert the following:

Or from paymaster or other regular or volunteer Army officers who have been honorably mustered out of service, or who have resigned, or clerks who shall have served at least five years in the Paymaster-General's Office.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 1 of section 12 strike out the words "authorized and required" and insert "requested."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3 of section 12, after the words "to consist of," insert "the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, and."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following in lieu of section 13:

That the President is hereby authorized to transfer the surplus of officers from the regiments of cavalry and infantry that may be consolidated, and from the several staff departments to the list of supernumeraries; and all vacancies now existing, or that may occur in the cavalry, artillery, infantry, or staff departments, by reason of such transfer or from other causes, shall be filled in due proportion by the supernumerary officers, having reference to rank, seniority, and fitness; and the President is hereby authorized and required to place upon the retired list or to muster out of service officers equal in number to the officers who may be upon the supernumerary list on the 1st day of July, 1879. He shall place upon the retired list all officers who may be unfit for duty by reason of injuries incurred or diseases contracted in the line of duty; but the number so retired shall not exceed one hundred in addition to the present retired list. In order that the President may properly select the officers to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out, the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of September next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments, deemed by them unfit from any cause whatever for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, and setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required on or before the 1st day of October next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals on the active list, to which board said lists shall be referred for examination; and the said board shall report to the President such officers as they shall recommend to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of the service, and the President shall thereupon grant leave of absence to such officers and cause them to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of service on the 1st day of July, 1879. And if the number so recommended to be placed on the retired list and to be mustered out of service shall not be equal to the number of officers remaining on the supernumerary list on the 1st day of January, 1879, the President shall forthwith transmit to Congress at its next session a list of the officers in excess of the number to be retired and to be mustered out for such further action as shall be deemed necessary. In the event of the inability to act or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

SEC. 14. That the commanding officers of the several military geographical divisions and departments and the heads of the various staff departments shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and before the 1st day of July next, forward, through and for the remarks of the General of the Army, to the Secretary of War, a list of officers serving in their respective commands and departments deemed by them unfit, from any cause whatever, except on account of injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of duty, for the proper and efficient discharge of their duty, setting forth fully and specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required, on or before the 1st day of September next, to constitute a board, to consist of the three major-generals on the active list, to which board said lists shall be referred for examination; and upon the recommendation of such board, the President shall muster out of the service every such officer so reported, who shall not be reappointed; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer an opportunity to appear before said boad and show cause against it: Provided, That every such officer, who shall have served not less than two years, so mustered out pursuant to the provisions of this section, except in cases where his unfitness for service shall have been caused by intemperence or other vicious habits, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to the pay and allowances due him at the date of his muster-out, one year's pay and allowances. In the event of the inability to act or death of either of the major-generals, the President shall detail one of the brigadier-generals to act in his place.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to striking that section out.

Mr. CONGER. Is not that one of the sections stricken out on a point of order?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It went out on a point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I submit it is not before the House to be acted on, then. I did not suppose it was possible those sections stricken out would come in here to be acted on as amendments.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I assented to its going out. There is no controversy about that; it is out. If stricken out on a point of order it should not come into the House as an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Are not several of the last sections in the same way?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. None. In every case where the sections were ruled out on a point of order I assented to it.

Mr. CONGER. Why was this read, then?

The SPEAKER. Simply because of a mistake.

Mr. CONGER. I thought some of the former ones went out on a point of order, but I did not rise to make the point until this section was read.

The SPEAKER. If any others had gone out on a point of order, and were read in the House the Chair would traverse the action.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. In every case where they were ruled out on a point of order I have assented.

Mr. CONGER. That is understood, then.

The SPEAKER. That is not a part of the report of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. If any were read by mistake they are still liable to be ruled out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire so as to know that fact. He is informed by the Clerk that up to this time this is the only one.

Mr. CONGER. Then, I suppose the others will not be read hereafter.

The SPEAKER. They will not be read where they have gone out on a point of order.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of section 18 insert:

Provided also, The provisions of this section shall not apply in time of war, when the commanding general himself is required to be in the field.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4, section 21, insert "and also from able-bodied honorably discharged officers and soldiers of the United States Army;" so it will read:

SEC. 21. That hereafter all vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled by appointment from the graduates of the Military Academy, and by the promotion of the meritorious non-commissioned officers of the Army, and also from able-bodied honorably discharged officers and soldiers of the United States Army.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In section 30, line 30, after the word "year," at the end of the clause fixing the pay of storekeepers, insert the words "except the storekeeper at the armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, who shall receive the pay and allowances of a major.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In section 31 strike out the word "except chaplains;" so it will read:

SEC. 31. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including officers having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent. of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service: Provided, That the total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed 40 per cent. on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law, and shall not in any case amount to more than $800 per annum.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5, section 31, after the word "service," insert the following:

And on and after the passage of this act, all officers of the Army of the United States, who have served as officers in the volunteer force during the war of the rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, shall be, and are hereby, credited with the full time they may have served as such enlisted men in computing their services for longevity pay.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of section 33 add the following:

No contract surgeon shall be employed, except for duty with troops at military stations or in the field, and not then until after all commissioned surgeons in the Army shall have been first assigned to such duty.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of section 33 add the following:

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any enlisted man in the service of the United States, whether non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, where the same shall interfere with the customary employment of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to insert "member of Congress." [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask to go back to page 2, where for expenses of recruiting we changed fifty to eighty. That was when we supposed there were to be twenty-five thousand men. I ask by unanimous consent to change it back to $50,000.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment will be read.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the last amendment was not agreed to. I was not aware that that amendment had come up.

The SPEAKER. The vote has been reconsidered and the motion to reconsider laid on the table.

Mr. COX, of New York. I confess my inattention at the moment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I called the attention of my colleague to it three times; and the amendment was rejected by the votes of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was preoccupied at the moment. I hope there will be no objection to the vote being reconsidered.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. Are there any more objections on that side?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

The bill (H. R. No. 4713) supplementary to the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating Columbian College, District of Columbia."

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

The bill (H. R. No. 329) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Army appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Add to the bill as a new section the following:

That from after the 1st day of January, 1879, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, or otherwise, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of moneys out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates by Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

That the Secretary of War shall make such details of officers of the Army as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian branch of the War Department.

That commanding officers of the military geographical departments of the Army in which Indian tribes are located or living shall be ex officio in charge of Indian affairs in their respective departments, and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, make such details of officers of the Army serving in their commands or on the retired list as may be necessary from time to time to administer the affairs of the Indian service: Provided, That the officer detailed to take charge of Indian affairs in the War Department shall not be of lower rank than that of colonel, nor shall the officers detailed to discharge the duties heretofore performed by agents at any Indian agency be of lower rank than that of first lieutenant in the regular Army: And provided further, That the Inspector-General of the Army shall discharge the duties of inspector of Indian affairs, and shall be required to make an annual report to Congress of the numbers and condition of the Indian tribes. And such officers shall not be required to give other bonds than are now required of them by law, but shall be held responsible for any neglect of duty or maladministration thereof, and shall be subject to trial therefor by military courts-martial, according to the rules and articles of war. And the provisions of this section shall be applicable to all officers of the Army charged with duties under this act so far as responsibility for neglect of duty and maladministration thereof is concerned.

That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize an increase in the number, rank, pay, or allowances of officers of the Army in excess of that now provided by law; and its provisions shall be applicable to officers on the retired list of the Army, who when on such duty shall receive full pay and allowance of the rank in the regular Army held by them at their retirement, as prescribed by law for officers on the active list.

That all contracts for supplies or transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and as far as practicable at the same time provided for supplies and transportation for the use of the Army.

That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargains, barter, and exchange with the several tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same, and subject to the same rules and restrictions as are prescribed for traders at military posts of the Army; but he shall not have authority to authorize any person to sell arms or ammunition to any Indian, but shall prohibit the same.

That the offices of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, inspector of Indian affairs, special commissioners of Indian affairs, superintendents of Indian affairs, agent, and subagent in the Office of Indian Affairs, board of Indian commissioners, and all officials now employed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or Secretary of the Interior and connected with the administration of Indian affairs, not including the clerk of the Indian Bureau, shall be abolished and cease on the 1st day of January, 1879 on which date the officers of the Army designated shall assume charge of the duties thereof, and thus become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the officers of Indian affairs thus superseded.

The annuities to be paid to any Indians and the supplies to be furnished and issued to them shall be paid and issued through the Quartermaster's Department and the subsistence department of the Army, under such regulations and directions as the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe. That all moneys appropriated during the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress in the bill known as the Indian appropriation bill, or so much thereof as shall remain unexpended on the 1st day of January, 1879, shall after that time be disbursed in accordance with the provisions of this section, and that all laws and clauses of laws which may come in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. FOSTER. I call for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that the amendment may be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I observe that in the amendment the word "act" occurs where the word "section" would be better used. I ask unanimous consent that the word "act" wherever it occurs be changed to "section."

Mr. BANKS. Might not that make a very material change?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is not material at all.

Mr. HALE. I think there can be no objection.

There was no objection; and the language of the section was modified as suggested.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 115, not voting 46; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. STEELE. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. ROBBINS, is absent by leave of the House. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. PRIDEMORE. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. JORGENSEN, is paired with Mr. GLOVER, of Missouri.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleagues, Mr. KNAPP and Mr. TIPTON, are paired.

Mr. YEATES. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from California, Mr. LUTTRELL. If he were here, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. MULLER. On this question I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. STARIN.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana. If he were present, I would vote "ay" and Mr. EVANS, of Indiana, would vote "no."

Mr. HENRY. My colleague from Maryland, Mr. ROBERTS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. REA. My colleague from Missouri, Mr. GLOVER, is paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT, is necessarily absent. I am paired with him, and if he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. KILLINGER, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. McCOOK. My colleagues from New York, Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BLISS, are paired. Mr. HISCOCK would vote "no."

Mr. THORNBURGH. I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. PUGH. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. BUNDY. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. BEEBE. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired with Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. CARLISLE. My colleague from Kentucky, Mr. DURHAM, is paired with Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Mr. DURHAM, if present, would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to have a vote taken on the amendment which I offered to the thirty-third section of the bill. I was occupied at the time when the former vote was taken upon it and did not notice that my amendment was pending.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope that there will be no objection inasmuch as I was absorbing the attention of the gentleman from New York at the time the former vote was taken.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was engaged in writing orders for bouquets, under the courtesy of the House, and missed my amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any enlisted man in the service of the United States, whether non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, where the same shall interfere with the customary employment of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not wish to object to a further vote being taken on that amendment if the gentleman will allow an amendment to it.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I object to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. When the former vote was taken I had no knowledge that it was being taken upon my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentlemen from New York [Mr. PATTERSON] withdraw his objection?

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then the gentleman need not come over to my desk and bother me about bouquets. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. I do not ask the gentleman for any.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was the following:

From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus or otherwise under the pretext or for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by act of Congress; and no money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any of the expenses incurred in the employment of any troops in violation of this section; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BREWER. Upon that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 117, not voting 44; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. STEELE. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. ROBBINS, is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. CRAVENS. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. SLEMONS, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. REA. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. GLOVER, is paired with Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. PUGH. I am paired with Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. FOSTER. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BLISS, are paired. If Mr. HISCOCK were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. THORNBURGH. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. TIPTON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. KNAPP. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. BROWNE. My colleague, Mr. BAKER, is paired with Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky. If my colleague were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. My colleague, Mr. CAMP, is paired with Mr. BENEDICT. If my colleague, Mr. CAMP, were present, he would vote "no."

Mr. BUNDY. I am paired with Mr. BEEBE, who is absent by leave of the House. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WATSON. I am paired with Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. DURHAM, is paired with Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If my colleague were present he would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. STARIN. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is paired with Mr. TIPTON. If he were present, my colleague would vote "ay."

Mr. WIGGINTON. My colleague, Mr. LUTTRELL, is absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I call the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being but 26 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of the last vote.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. What is the regular order?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House, and I am instructed so to do by the Committee for the District of Columbia, to take from the Speaker's table the amendments made by the Senate to what is known as the bill for a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. The object is to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a committee of conference. We are satisfied that is the only course we can adopt that will give us any chance to obtain final action upon the bill at this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The title of the bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that the bill with the Senate amendments be taken up and the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in?

Mr. FORT. For the time being I must object. It occurs to me that there are many of these amendments of the Senate which the House may desire to concur in.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Committee for the District of Columbia, without a single exception, have directed me to make this request of the House, feeling assured that a committee of conference was necessary; and unless it be ordered now there is no chance for the bill to be finally acted upon this session.

Mr. FORT. There is no doubt but there will finally have to be a committee of conference as to some of these amendments; but certainly we ought to concur in some of them. However, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. JONES, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. WOOD. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the unfinished business coming over from last week or week before, being the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, known as the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. WOOD. Before the gentleman proceeds I desire to give notice to the House that at the earliest practicable moment to-day or to-morrow I shall call up the tariff bill.

TIMBER ON WESTERN PRAIRIES.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I rise to a privileged report from a committee of conference, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 336) to amend section 2464 of the Revised Statutes relating to the cultivation of timber on the public domain, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

Section 1, line 10, strike out all after the word "acres" and down to and including the word "acres" in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the words "or less."

Section 1, strike out all of lines 18 and 19.

Section 2, line 12, strike out the word "naturally" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or other lands."

Section 2, line 20, after the word "dollars," insert the words "if the tract applied for is more than eighty acres; and $5 if it is eighty acres or less."

Section 2, line 27, after the word "cultivate," strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and put in."

Section 2, line 28, between the words "and" and "fourth," insert the word "the."

Section 2, line 29, strike out all after the words "five acres" down to and including the word "subdivision," in the thirty-fourth line, and insert the words "all entries of less quantity than one quarter section shall be plowed, planted, cultivated, and planted to trees, tree-seeds, or cuttings in the same manner and in the same proportion as hereinbefore provided for a quarter section.

Section 2, line 37, after the word "such," strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 38, after the word "are" insert the word "so;" also, after the word "provided" insert the word "further."

Section 2, line 42, strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 50, after the word "of," strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 53, after the word "least," strike out the words "nine hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six hundred and seventy-five."

Section 2, line 54, after the word "such," strike out all to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof the words "tract of land."

Strike out all of section 3, and substitute the following:

That if at any time after the filing of said affidavit, and prior to the issuing of the patent for said land, the claimant shall fail to comply with any of the requirements of this act, then, and in that event, such land shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws, or by some other person under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the party making claim to said land, either as a homestead settler or under this act, shall give at the time of filing his application such notice to the original claimant as shall be prescribed by the rules established by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and the rights of the parties shall be determined as in other contested cases.

And to amend title of the bill by striking out the title and inserting in lieu thereof the following substitute:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies."

P. D. WIGGINTON,
T. M. PATTERSON,
FRANK WELCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. S. PADDOCK,
P. B. PLUMB,
L. F. GROVER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WIGGINTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) to pay the laborers known as the cloak-room men, and to place them on the Doorkeeper's roll.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to call up the unfinished business—the bill to regulate charges upon interstate transportation.

Mr. WADDELL. I raise the question of consideration between the unfinished business and the business of the morning hour.

Mr. REAGAN. I think that the interstate commerce bill, which is the unfinished business, ought to be taken up, so as to get it out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The question will be whether the House will consider the unfinished business—the bill to regulate interstate commerce?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 93, noes, 75.

Mr. WADDELL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WADDELL and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 80, noes 81.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. REAGAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being ayes 33, noes 124—more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose that this question should be decided in the affirmative——

The SPEAKER. That will be a decision in favor of considering the unfinished business. If the decision be in the negative, then the Chair will be bound to recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] to demand the regular order, he having stated that his object was to have a morning hour.

Mr. WADDELL. I simply want to make some adverse reports from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and also some reports for reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORT. I object to debate.

Mr. COX, of New York. If this question be decided in the negative, would not the life-saving-station bill, which is the special order, come up?

The SPEAKER. That bill was assigned as a special order in the House, to come up after the reading of the Journal, on the 14th of May, and from day to day until disposed of. It is a continuing order; the only one, the Chair thinks.

Mr. BURCHARD. There is another order prior to that.

The SPEAKER. The question of priority would be regulated by the Calendar.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The morning hour would not take up much more time than the call of the yeas and nays; and I will state that there are other special orders, among them the bill granting pensions to soldiers of the Mexican war. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 122, not voting 65; as follows:

So the House refused to consider the unfinished business.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LIGON. My colleague from Alabama, Mr. WILLIAMS, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. EVANS. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. CANDLER. My colleague, Mr. BLOUNT, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. SLEMONS, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. REA. My colleague, Mr. GLOVER, is paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JORGENSEN.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. DURHAM. If he were present, I should vote "ay." I do not know how he would vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BURCHARD. I call up the bill (H. R. No. 4414) relating to the internal revenue, which is the unfinished business.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call up the life-saving service bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina raising the question of consideration between the bill of the gentleman from Texas and the morning hour is entitled to be first recognized.

Mr. WADDELL. I raise that express question of consideration for the purpose of securing the morning hour.

Mr. WOOD. I shall not antagonize the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am willing this bill shall be postponed until after the morning hour or until some fixed time.

Mr. COX, of New York. My bill is after the reading of the Journal, which is before the morning hour.

Mr. WADDELL. The question of consideration was raised by me and it was done for the express purpose of making reports from my Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and the Chair said he would recognize me.

Mr. BURCHARD. All the gentleman can do by raising the question of consideration is to bring on business in its regular order. When the bill I call up is disposed of and that of the gentleman from New York then the morning hour would come in. But I do not wish to antagonize the morning hour if I can have some time fixed for the consideration of the internal-revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. It is really the unfinished business after the reading of the Journal, but the Chair thinks all the equities are with the gentleman from North Carolina, as the House voted to have a morning hour on his motion. The Chair must at the same time consider propositions of gentlemen as they are submitted in order, and the gentleman from North Carolina must prevent any unfinished business coming up to cut out the morning hour.

Mr. BURCHARD. My bill will retain its place.

The SPEAKER. It will undoubtedly.

Mr. COX, of New York. I wait to raise the question of consideration against the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURCHARD. As the Chair thinks the gentleman from North Carolina has the equities on his side I will waive all objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois thinks so too, as his action proves it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I reserve my motion to oppose the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman let me make a report from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WADDELL. I think I had better insist on the regular order.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-two minutes past two o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

LETTER CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. WADDELL, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 4174) to facilitate letter correspondence; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADDELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES AND LIBERIA EMIGRANT LINE.

Mr. WADDELL also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 3108) to establish a line of mail and emigrant steam and sailing vessels between certain ports of the United States and Liberia, Africa; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADDELL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORY.

Mr. WADDELL also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3989) to establish a postal savings depository as a branch of the Post-Office Department and to aid in refunding the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES AND BRAZIL STEAMSHIP MAIL.

Mr. WADDELL also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 3580) to provide ocean mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GALVESTON AND VERA CRUZ STEAMSHIP MAIL.

Mr. GIDDINGS, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2387, a bill (H. R. No. 5051) to provide for transportation of United States mail between Galveston, Texas, and Vera Cruz, Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. EDEN. This is a simple subsidy, but I think it had better go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I make the point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to present a minority report to go with the bill.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the majority and minority reports ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report the following resolution and to ask for its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 5051, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 2387, be taken up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the 12th day of June and be considered from day to day until disposed of, not to interfere with special orders or appropriation bills.

Mr. EDEN. Does that require unanimous consent?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That may be after the adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman on the resolution as reported, and the Chair thinks it does require unanimous consent, as it is the report of a committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 50.

Mr. GIDDINGS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIDDINGS and Mr. EDEN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 84.

Mr. GIDDINGS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No quorum has voted, and, for the present, I will withdraw the resolution.

NATIONAL ROAD IN MARYLAND.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4200) relating to the national road in the State of Maryland, and to give consent of the United States to a certain act of the General Assembly of Maryland in relation to said road.

The bill, which was read, gives the consent of the United States to an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, passed at the January session, A. D. 1878, chapter 158, entitled "An act to transfer to the counties of Alleghany and Garrett the control of the national turnpike or United States road through said counties, and to provide for the maintenance thereof."

The second section provides that the act shall take effect from and after the date of its passage.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I call for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

By an act of Congress of June 24, 1834, and by a subsequent act thereof, passed March 3, 1835, the United States road, commencing at Cumberland and extending westwardly through the counties of Alleghany and Garrett, was surrendered to the State of Maryland. It has been found that the tolls arising from said road are insufficient to keep it in proper condition, and the above-named counties are willing to assume the care of the road in order that it may be kept in better condition than it has been heretofore under the custody of the State. Therefore, by an act of Assembly of 1878, in chapter 158, the State of Maryland ceded to the counties of Alleghany and Garrett that portion of the road which passes through them, each county being required to keep the road passing through its respective territory in proper condition. The act also authorizes the appointment by the county commissioners of a supervisor for each of the counties named; also, the erection of so many toll-gates as may be deemed necessary and expedient, and to charge such rates of toll for traveling over the road as are now allowed by law to be charged. They are allowed also to appoint toll-gatherers, and to fix the compensation of supervisors and toll-gatherers; and said commissioners may require from each officer bonds for faithful performance of duty, &c.

Therefore, as no detriment to the United States can arise from such action on the part of the State of Maryland, we respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. This is a bill similar to what was passed by Congress in relation to a road in Ohio, and simply gives consent to the State of Maryland to cede to the counties named the control of the road. I move the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if the right of the United States in regard to the carrying of the mails free of toll on that road is reserved.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The bill does not disturb that right. All rights of the United States are reserved.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCIES IN ACCOUNTS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 4604, a bill (H. R. No. 5052) to amend section 3835 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, amends section 3835 of the Revised Statutes by adding the following:

Hereafter when a deficiency shall be discovered in the accounts of any postmaster who, after the adjustment of his accounts, fails to make good such deficiency it shall be the duty of the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury Department to notify the Postmaster-General of such failure; and upon receiving such notice the Postmaster-General shall forthwith deposit a notice in the post-office at Washington, District of Columbia, addressed to the sureties respectively upon the bond of said postmaster at the office where he or they may reside, if known; but a failure to give or mail such notice shall not discharge such surety or sureties upon such bond.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLEMENTS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4824) to amend section 3843 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to settlements of postmasters.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read. It amends section 3843 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to read as follows:

Every postmaster, except those appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall render to the Postmaster-General, under oath and in such form as the latter shall prescribe, a quarterly account of all moneys received or charged by him or at his office for postage, rent of boxes or other receptacles for mail matter, or by reason of keeping a branch office, or for the delivery of mail matter in any manner whatever; and every postmaster appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall render to the Postmaster-General, in the same manner, monthly account of all such moneys so received.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an extract from the report of the Postmaster-General, showing the reasons for the passage of this law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 3843 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requires postmasters to render quarterly reports of the moneys received by them on account of the revenues of their offices. The requirement of quarterly reports was originally made when post-offices were more widely separated, when the means of intercourse and communication were slower than now, and when the business of the Department was insignificant in comparison with its present proportions. It would be more in accordance with the present method of transacting business, and would enable the Department to form a better judgment as to the solvency of postmasters and the accuracy of their accounts, if these reports were made monthly, at least from the principal offices. Defalcations, failures, and the insolvency of sureties would be more readily ascertained, the losses by reason thereof would be greatly decreased, and promptness in collecting and disbursing the revenues of the Department would be correspondingly increased. The change would involve very little additional expense—none, in fact, except that attending a small addition to the clerical force in the Sixth Auditor's office—while the amount saved would be considerable and collections would be attended with less embarrassment, difficulty, and expense. I recommend, therefore, that section 3843 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to require all postmasters who are appointed by the President to make their reports monthly instead of quarterly, leaving the smaller offices to be reported from as under existing law. This would require monthly reports from but a small proportion of the offices, but would embrace all the great commercial and business centers from which most of the postal revenues are derived.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I move the previous question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Before the gentleman calls the previous question I would be glad if he would allow the previous question to operate on an amendment restricting the operation of the bill to offices of the free-delivery class.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I am not authorized and do not feel at liberty to allow an amendment of that sort to be offered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would suggest, if the gentleman from Tennessee will allow me a word, that the Postmaster-General, in recommending this legislation, includes all offices that are presidential. Now, I think the large offices ought to make monthly reports; but I doubt if it would be worth the trouble to require such reports from the great number of small offices where the salaries are not more than $2,000. I apprehend, also, that the Committee on Appropriations, if this bill should become a law, would have to provide for a number of additional clerks in the Sixth Auditor's Office. I think the bill is right as to the large offices, but as regards those from $1,000 to $2,000 I do not think it is right.

I propose, if the gentleman will allow me, to offer an amendment changing the bill so that it will apply only to the free-delivery offices, leaving all others to make reports as they now do.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I desire to state that the question submitted by the gentleman from Illinois was very fully considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and they considered the law ought to apply to all presidential offices, and not simply to the free-delivery offices. I do not feel at liberty to admit any amendment at all. I therefore insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then if the previous question is not sustained I will offer the amendment I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. That will be the gentleman's right.

The question being taken on seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 43, noes 75.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEWART, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. CALDWELL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 72.

No further count being demanded, the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 12, 13, and 14, the words "and every postmaster appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and inserting in lieu thereof "all postmasters at free-delivery offices;" so that it will read:

That section 3843 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

Every postmaster, except those appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall render to the Postmaster-General, under oath and in such form as the latter shall prescribe, a quarterly account of all moneys received, or charged by him, or at his office, for postage, rent of boxes, or other receptacles for mail matter, or by reason of keeping a branch office, or for the delivery of mail matter in any manner whatever; all postmasters at free-delivery offices shall render to the Postmaster-General, in the same manner, monthly account of all such moneys so received.

The question was put; and upon a division there were—ayes 64, noes 67; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, and Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 89.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. After the previous question was voted down the Chair recognized me and I desire to make a statement that will not take longer than three minutes if the House will give me its attention. I do not think that this bill ought to pass, although it was reported from my committee, and I call attention to it because I doubt if the House understands what its provisions are. Some thirty thousand or forty thousand postmasters now make quarterly reports and this bill requires that all presidential postmasters, from whom are derived the great bulk of the revenue of the Department and who forward the great bulk of accounts to the Department, shall make reports every month, that is twelve reports a year instead of four.

Now, I think that perhaps there is great propriety in requiring the postmasters at a few of the great city offices like New York and Chicago to make monthly reports, but when you come to the great mass of offices where the salaries range from $1,000 to $2,000 and where, under the law, the postmasters cannot have any clerks because the law prohibits their employment, and where the postmasters commence to work early in the morning and have to work until night, when you require them to make reports twelve times in the course of a year instead of four, it is a very great additional burden thrown upon them.

In addition to that all these accounts have to be audited, compared, and corrected in the Sixth Auditor's Office, and you who know something about this business know that it takes almost from the close of one quarter to the middle of the next quarter for the accounts to be finally settled and adjusted, and all the little errors made upon the one hand in the Auditor's Office and made by the postmasters on the other hand to be corrected, and the accounts properly adjusted.

Now, by this bill you multiply the work by three, and, as I said before, if the accounts are to be made monthly it will require an increased force of clerks in the Sixth Auditor's Office, at least twenty-five or thirty.

Mr. KNOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. KNOTT. Will these additional monthly reports cover any more ground than the quarterly reports cover now?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. They will cover no more ground than the quarterly reports cover, but it is as hard to make a monthly report as it is to make a quarterly report, and to write letters about it back and forth. You have to go over the same ground twelve times instead of four times. I believe that if the House had been in possession of the facts it would not have voted down my amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I have a word only to say in reply to what the gentleman from Illinois has just said. He will find by examining the report of the Postmaster-General that very large sums are lost annually by the failure and insolvency of postmasters and their sureties. The Postmaster-General feels certain, as also did the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, that by providing that all the presidential postmasters shall be required to settle their accounts monthly instead of every three months a much larger sum will be saved to the Government than would have to be expended for the additional clerical force which may be needed. It is admitted by the Postmaster-General and by the committee that there would have to be an additional clerical force in the Sixth Auditor's Office, and nowhere else, and that is a very slight addition, but we feel sure that thousands of dollars might be saved to the Government by this bill requiring that the presidential postmasters shall report promptly every month whatever amount of revenue they may have in their hands on account of the post-office service.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment I offered was rejected.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Did the gentleman vote in the majority?

The SPEAKER. No record was made of that vote.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to; upon a division—ayes 72, noes 68.

The question recurred on seconding the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4713) supplementary to the act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act supplemental to the act of February 9, 1821, incorporating Columbian College, District of Columbia."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HENDEE. I rise to a privileged motion.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. CHALMERS. I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HENDEE. That is the motion I desired to make.

Mr. CHALMERS. I make the motion for the purpose of reaching Senate bill No. 490, in relation to Hot Springs reservation of Arkansas.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHALMERS. I do not think the gentleman can take me off the floor to make that motion.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to know if I can do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has the right to report from the Committee on Appropriations at any time for commitment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I give notice that if the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] is voted down, I will then call for the special order.

Mr. BURCHARD. And I desire also to give notice, in order to reserve all my rights, that in case the House refuses to proceed to business on the Speaker's table I shall call up the pending unfinished business.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope we will proceed with the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] is privileged under the rules. If the House does not wish to proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, it can vote down the motion.

The motion of Mr. CHALMERS was then agreed to; upon a division—ayes 94, noes 60.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire now to move, in regard to the bill providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, which I understand is the first business in order on the Speaker's table——

The SPEAKER. It does not come up ahead of executive communications. It will be in order when bills are reached.

Mr. HOOKER. Before the House proceeds under the order just made, I ask consent to submit a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs for printing and reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the business now in order is that upon the Speaker's table.

SOLDIERS, ETC., EMPLOYED IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The first business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting lists showing the names of all employés of that Department who were honorably discharged from the military or naval service for disability arising from sickness or wounds incurred in the line of duty; and also the names of all employés who have at any time served in either the Army or Navy, or are widows or orphans of persons who so served; which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of merchants and citizens of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying for a liberal appropriation for the Signal Service; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MISCELLANEOUS RECEIPTS OF INDIAN SERVICE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, concerning a fund arising in the Indian service known as "miscellaneous receipts;" which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an account of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

SUSPENDED LAND ENTRIES CONFIRMED.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of suspended entries confirmed by board of adjudication; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COMPANY E, FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the bill (H. R. No. 3540) for the relief of the soldiers of Company E, First Illinois Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UTE MISSION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting estimate of appropriation to defray expenses of the Ute mission; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MARSHALL O. ROBERTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the Quartermaster-General relative to the names, ages, &c., of the steamships purchased of and owned in part or in whole by Marshall O. Roberts, of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF BANKRUPT LAW.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law, which had been amended by the House and had been returned by the Senate with an amendment to the second House amendment.

The amendment of the Senate to the House amendment was to strike out the words "all penal actions or criminal proceedings arising thereunder," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And in respect of all pains, penalties, and forfeitures which shall have been incurred under any of said acts prior to the day when this act takes effect, or which may be thereafter incurred, under any of those provisions of any of said acts which, for the purposes named in this act, are kept in force, and all penal actions and criminal proceedings for a violation of any of said acts, whether then pending or thereafter instituted, and in respect of all rights of debtors and creditors, (except the right of commencing original proceedings in bankruptcy,) and all rights of, and suits by, or against assignees, under any or all of said acts, in any matter or case which shall have arisen prior to the day when this act takes effect (which shall be on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1878) or in any matter or case which shall arise after this act takes effect, in respect of any matter of bankruptcy authorized by this act to be proceeded with after said last-named day.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate, and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope we shall have a vote upon agreeing to the day now fixed in the bill, so that those who think this act should take effect immediately may have a chance to go on record. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAWNEE LAND DISTRICT, KANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2132) to pay for clerical services and extraordinary expenses under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, in the Pawnee land district, Kansas.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:
Reserving nevertheless the right of appeal to either party from the judgment of the said court.

Mr. RYAN and Mr. BRIGHT moved to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF FLOUR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 22, on page 1, strike out "inspection" and insert "inspector."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I move that the House concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MATTIE M'TAGGART.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2176) granting an increase of pension to Mattie McTaggart, widow of the late First Lieutenant McTaggart, Seventeenth United States Infantry.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after "commence," in line 5, to the end of the bill and insert "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that the House concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. HENDEE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. HENDEE. That is the motion I designed to make. The amendment is quite lengthy.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call the previous question on my motion to non-concur.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS A. WESTON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 148) to confirm the term, for the period of seventeen years from the date of its original grant, of the patent of Thomas A. Weston.

Mr. VANCE. A House bill similar to this has already become a law; and it is unnecessary to take further action on this bill. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 400) to authorize the appointment of commissioners to determine claims, and for other purposes, at Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three discreet, competent, and disinterested persons, who shall constitute a board of commissioners, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, who shall hold their offices for the period of one year from the date of their appointment, and shall have the same powers and authority in all respects as was provided for the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas," which act is hereby continued in full force for the purpose of enabling said board of commissioners to determine the claims presented to the board of commissioners appointed under said act, whose term of office has expired, and to do and perform all other acts and duties authorized and directed by said act. And said commissioners shall have power to employ assistant stenographers, not exceeding three in number, at such times as their services may be necessary to aid said commissioners. And the unexpended portion of the appropriation made for continuing the work of the commissioners appointed under the act aforesaid shall be available for the continuance of the work by the commissioners to be appointed under this act.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to suggest that this bill——

Mr. EDEN. I reserve a point of order on the bill.

Mr. FULLER. What does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] propose?

Mr. BUTLER. I desire that the bill shall go to some committee.

Mr. FULLER. There has been a distinct understanding on the subject.

Mr. EDEN. If the bill is to be referred to a committee I waive the point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that the gentleman in charge of the bill has agreed to admit an amendment.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill, and so far as the record goes nobody has charge of it. But the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. GAUSE,] who is interested in the matter, will be recognized. The Chair, however, understood that the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] wished to make a point of order.

Mr. GAUSE. I will state that this bill has been thoroughly discussed in the Committee on Public Lands, and meets their approval with certain amendments, which are to be offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. FULLER.]

Mr. EDEN. If the bill has been examined and approved by the Committee on Public Lands, I waive the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I observe that this bill provides for an additional number of stenographers.

Mr. GAUSE. That is necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. Why?

Mr. GAUSE. Testimony has been taken in nine hundred and fifty cases, and additional clerical force is necessary in order that this testimony may be written out.

Mr. ATKINS. Did these commissioners enter upon their duties within the time prescribed by law, which was thirty days after their appointment?

Mr. GAUSE. They did.

Mr. ATKINS. I understood that they did not.

Mr. GUNTER. They entered upon their duties at the time fixed by the law, and worked faithfully, as has been reported by the people at Hot Springs.

Mr. BUCKNER. The whole difficulty as to delay grew out of the fact that until all the claims had been filed the commissioners could not act at all. That period was fixed at six months. Since that time they have been constantly engaged, and there are some nine hundred claims to be settled. That is the only reason why relief is asked.

Mr. GUNTER. I wish to say in addition that these parties have worked industriously and have taken testimony as to the rights of parties to over nine hundred claims. They are ready, if the time be extended, to go on and settle the equities of those parties, and I trust gentlemen on the floor will let the bill pass.

Mr. EDEN. I understood the Committee on Public Lands of the House had unanimously agreed to a substitute for this bill, and upon that view I withdrew my point of order.

Mr. HANNA. You will recollect some time ago the Senate passed a bill which had a certain section in it which was obnoxious to all of us, but before that bill was reached on the Speaker's table the Senate sent for it, and the obnoxious section was stricken out. It does not appear in the bill which has been read.

There is pressing public necessity for the immediate passage of this, for the reason that unless it is passed all the work which has been done, which employed these three commissioners for one year, may be lost to the Government and may be lost to the parties in interest. The main point of this is to revive the old act, to the end these three commissioners or three others to be appointed by the President may proceed to complete the work, so all parties in interest in that locality may have their rights saved and preserved. For one it does seem to me the public interest would be subserved by the immediate passage of this act.

Mr. FINLEY. The substitute which the gentleman from Indiana has saves all those rights, and I ask that it may be read.

Mr. HANNA. My purpose is to have some act passed, whether in strict conformity to this act from the Senate or not, I do not care.

Mr. FULLER. I wish to state to the members of the House that the bill the gentleman from Arkansas yielded to me to offer as a substitute, I am satisfied, will meet with the approbation of every member on the floor. I ask that the substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three discreet, competent, and disinterested persons, who shall constitute a board of commissioners, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum, and shall hold their offices for the period of one year from the date of their appointment, and shall have the same powers and authorities in all respects as was provided for the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas," which act is hereby continued in full force for the purpose of enabling said board of commissioners to determine the claims presented to the board of commissioners, appointed under said act, whose term of office has expired, and to do and perform all other acts and duties authorized and directed by said act. And said commissioners shall have power to employ assistant stenographers, not exceeding three in number, at such time as their services may be necessary to aid said commissioners.

And in the event said commissioners decline to serve further, or in case of a vacancy from death or resignation, the President of the United States is authorized to fill the vacancies thus made by appointment; and said commissioners, or their successors in office, shall have power to authorize the taking of depositions under such rules as they may prescribe in cases where the witnesses, by reason of physical disability, cannot attend the sessions of the commissioners, or when the witness or witnesses may reside more than one hundred miles from the town of Hot Springs, Arkansas. And all books, papers, maps, surveys, testimony, and records of every character heretofore in possession of the late commissioners provided for in said act, shall be taken by them and used for the completion of the work assigned to said commissioners.

SEC. 2. Said commissioners shall have power to sell for cash at public auction, to the highest bidder, all buildings which they have condemned, or may condemn, and have ordered or may order to be removed from the mountain reservation, the streets and alleys, first giving three weeks' notice in two daily newspapers, if such there be printed, in the town of Hot Springs, that such sale of any or all of such buildings not previously removed by the owners will take place on a certain day. The money arising therefrom shall be paid forthwith into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, The owner of any building shall have the option to take the certificate of its value or to remove the same at his own expense.

SEC. 3. The certificates for the value of condemned property shall be assignable in writing by indorsement, and shall be receivable at the Little Rock land office in payment for lots to be sold out of the reservation.

SEC. 4. All patents issued by the United States for lots sold in the town of Hot Springs shall contain the express condition that the title of the owner shall be forfeited to the United States whenever by boring or digging, or from any other cause, hot water shall be obtained therefrom, and that the United States reserve free forever the use and profit of all hot water obtained from the soil of such lots. And said commissioners shall have power in making adjudications provided for in this act in any case where a lot may be composed in part of a former street or alley to adjudge the right to purchase and to issue the certificate therefor to such person or persons as may have a valid claim to such lot.

SEC. 5. That the waters of the Hot Springs, situated on the Hot Springs Mountain reservation, in Arkansas, are hereby declared forever free, and that all persons shall have the right to lay pipes through the said reservation and along and across the streets and alleys of said town of Hot Springs, for the purpose of conveying the waters of said springs to bath-houses, hotels, and other buildings, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to charge a royalty upon all water discharged through pipes or otherwise consumed sufficient to pay the expense of maintaining the reservation: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to allow any person, firm, company, or corporation to use or control more of the water of said Hot Springs than shall be absolutely necessary to supply bath-houses and hotels kept by them for the use and accommodation of invalids; and it shall be the duty of the superintendent to apportion and equitably distribute the waters of the said Hot Springs to all who desire in such manner as shall prevent a monopoly of the hot water, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That to prevent a monopoly, no bath-house or hotel shall be supplied with more than enough water for forty bath-tubs of the usual size, unless there shall be more than enough hot water to supply all other demands for the same.

Mr. CRAVENS rose.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to reserve points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. What points of order?

Mr. BUTLER. The point of order that the substitute requires the expenditure of money.

The SPEAKER. So does the original bill.

Mr. BUTLER. That does not make it any better, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. The point of order as against the bill should have been made before it came up for consideration. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] made the point of order and withdrew it. No doubt the bill would have been subject to the point of order if it had been made at the proper time.

Mr. BUTLER. Pardon me. The substitute is not in order. This is the first time the substitute has been before the House.

Mr. CRAVENS. As the immediate representative of the people of Hot Springs I desire to say that I vastly prefer the Senate bill to the substitute. It is a necessity for these people that this board shall be continued so that they shall have their titles adjudicated and so that some sort of accommodations may be furnished to the people of this country who may visit the springs. None can be had; no permanent buildings, no buildings of any sort of value can be had there until this adjudication is made.

A short time ago there was a large fire in the town of Hot Springs, and many of the citizens have not a clapboard between them and heaven, and have not the ownership of a foot of land.

I shall not antagonize the substitution of this bill; but I call upon the House, in the event of any difficulty in its passage in the Senate, of which I have great fear, to recede from such amendments as may be made, pass the Senate bill, and allow these people to have their title adjudicated. That is their right, and it would be an act of cruelty not to pass a bill by which that adjudication can be made. The newspapers in Arkansas, each and every one of them that I have received, insist on the passage of the Senate bill providing for the extension of this commission, so that the rights of these parties may be ascertained at some time in the near future.

For this Congress to adjourn without the passage of a bill embodying that provision I say would be the greatest wrong that could be inflicted on any people anywhere; and there has been already wrong inflicted on the people of Hot Springs which has no parallel in the history of the legislation of this country.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for the printing of 2,000 extra copies of the message of the President transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State in reference to the deliberations of the fishery commission, with accompanying documents.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 109) defining the manner in which certain land scrip may be assigned, and located or applied by actual settlers, and providing for the issue of patents in the name of the locator or his legal representatives; and

A bill (S. No. 1277) to extend the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the southern district of Florida.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill to authorize the appointment of commissioners to determine claims, and for other purposes, at Hot Springs in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to let me state my views for a moment.

Mr. FULLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not see how anybody is to be harmed except the United States. After years and years of litigation at last the Supreme Court declared the title of the United States in this reservation to be absolute. That may have been a wrong to the settlers or not; I do not know; but the property is now—or was till this commission was started; I do not know whose it is now—the property of the United States. If any portion of the improvements have been burned off, why they are not there to be paid for by the United States. The commission was to find out who had claims, and as soon as you established a commission to find out who had claims you found one thousand, two thousand, five thousand, everybody having claims.

Now, then, this bill proposes to take that water and distribute it just as far as pipes can carry it for the use of hotel-keepers and whoever chooses to use it. My view of it is that it should be kept within the power of the United States and not allowed to be distributed to anybody; that it should be kept for the purposes of the health of the whole people of the United States.

Mr. GAUSE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. GAUSE. I would like to know what he would do with the water that flows out of those fifty-seven springs into a large creek unless it is distributed to the inhabitants on the reservation?

Mr. BUTLER. I will tell you what I would do with the water. I would have it so that there should be some control over it, and not pass a bill which allows everybody to put a pipe into the springs and carry it where he pleases; because the moment you do that you make a monopoly of it as against the people of the United States.

Mr. GAUSE. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to say that I think he has misunderstood the meaning of the bill. It provides that anybody shall have the water under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior shall see proper to impose and no more than he actually needs.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that anybody there got any more than that. If anybody has got more than he actually needs he has kept out of my sight. Nothing more than he actually needs! How much is that? Just exactly as much as may be needed for as large a hotel as he can build.

Mr. GAUSE. No; it is limited to forty tubs a day.

Mr. BUTLER. They are allowed to take forty tubs a day from this health-giving spring. Now, my belief is that it should be sacredly held by the Government and not given away to anybody. There was a company originally organized under this very bill who were to buy the whole of it, but that provision has been stricken out. But these springs belong to you.

Mr. GUNTER. I will state that the company to which the gentleman has referred did not propose either directly or indirectly to control the hot waters. The company was organized for the exclusive purpose of having the privilege of establishing cold-water conveniences, but they claimed no control over the hot water at the springs whatever.

Mr. BUTLER. Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, I am not mistaken as to that. I do not mean to antagonize my friend from Arkansas. They were to take control of all the cold water, which is more equable to the system than the hot water. I do not believe that there is so much cold water drunk at a hot-water spring that it requires a corporation with a capital of $150,000 to peddle it out. There is a cat in this meal somewhere. I do not know where it is for I have seen nothing but the tip of its tail. But I hold that we should not deprive the thousands of men who served in the Army and who are now broken down by rheumatism—I never had the rheumatism myself and do not care about it—of the right to visit this place and derive the benefits of its waters. I trust that we shall keep it for them forever.

Mr. CRAVENS. There is no cat in the Senate bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not say a word about anybody's bill or any particular bill. My proposition is that we should not take up this bill in this way, dealing, as it does, with two or three million dollars' worth of public property without consideration by a committee and pass it in the House. I protest against this legislation from the Speaker's table. I have been here ten years and every job that has gone through during that time has gone through in this way. This bill bears a strong family resemblance to such bills. I do not mean to say that any gentleman upon this floor is interested in it; I do not believe that any one here is, but I do believe that here is a property of the United States more valuable than its intrinsic value because it is more valuable than any property which you can buy upon God's footstool. It is proposed that you shall give it away to somebody.

Efforts have been made to induce you to give it away for years and years, and now it is proposed, without consideration by a committee or a report from a committee, to give it away. I have said my say, and I have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the bill is subject to the point of order that was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] in the first instance.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to refer it, I do not care to what committee; whichever is most appropriate.

Mr. GAUSE. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The point of order was a good one, and was made in time by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] but he withdrew it.

Mr. GUNTER. The question of order was not made in time.

Mr. BUTLER. I made the point of order on the substitute as soon as it was read.

The SPEAKER. The point of order should be made upon the original bill. The moment the bill is taken up it is before the House for consideration. The gentleman understands that well enough.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to inquire of the Chair what will be the condition of this bill if the House now adjourns?

The SPEAKER. It will remain upon the Speaker's table.

The question was taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion; and on a division there were ayes 144, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the result of the vote upon the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to the following:

To Mr. BENEDICT, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. EVANS, of Indiana, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. HAMILTON, for one day; and

To Mr. THOMPSON, for one week, on account of important business.

The result of the vote was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petitions of John G. Scherzer, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and of Mrs. Anna H. Nones, of the same city, for pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUTLER: The petition of P. Lorillard & Co., against reducing the tax on tobacco—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of J. B. Witter and others, that a pension be granted Joseph Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of citizens of Ohio, against the passage of the bill establishing a board of fish commissioners—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a communication from J. C. Lee, United States attorney for the northern district of Ohio, relative to the compensation of United States district attorneys and their assistants—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Medary, Dakota Territory, to Canby, Minnesota—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RAINEY: The petition of Martha Riordan, for compensation for damages to lot 12, square 222, in Washington, District of Columbia—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RICE, of Ohio: The petition of Charles Camper, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Arizona: The petition of citizens of Arizona Territory, for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Colorado River—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 29, 1878.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings; when, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

DECORATION DAY.

Mr. ANTHONY. To-morrow is set apart for the pious duty of decorating the graves of the brave men who have fallen in the defense of the Republic. In order that Senators may take part in this interesting ceremony, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. BARNUM conferees on the part of the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, a report on the subject of the appraisal of the property of Michael Fentenheime, at Pelican Point, Morris Island, South Carolina; which, on motion of Mr. HOAR, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Chippewa River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Vance and William Vance, of San Antonio, Texas, praying compensation for the use and occupancy of their property by United States military forces during the late war, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1335) for the relief of James Vance and William Vance.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4556) for the relief of F. W. Golladay, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 984) for the relief of William H. Merritt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 774) authorizing the Solicitor of the Treasury, by and with the consent of the Secretary of War, to cancel certain contracts for the sale of lots of land made at Harper's Ferry in the year 1869 by the United States, to resell the same, and sell or lease all other real estate and riparian rights now owned by the United States at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 786) for the relief of the Jeffersonville and Louisville Ferry Company, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 615) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1146) for the relief of Monroe Donoho, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 566) in relation to the Venezuelan mixed commission, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 210) for the relief of J. A. Stevenson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 503) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr., submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of David Hardie, passed assistant engineer, United States Navy, praying that the benefits of the acts of July 16, 1862, and July 15, 1870, may inure to his benefit, so as to allow him the benefit of his sea service in the line of promotion and that he may be placed on the retired list, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 632) for the relief of William H. Cornell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SARGENT. In the matter of the dismissal of Alexander Warner from the Brooklyn navy-yard, the Committee on Naval Affairs report back the testimony taken in the case with a report without recommendation, and ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

The report was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1336) to authorize the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of sciences, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1337) to establish a board to be known as the Pacific Railroad commissioners, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COKE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 32) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to Governor Hubbard, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the volunteers of the State at their summer encampment; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WILLIAM H. NESSLE.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I desire to have the bill (S. No. 482) for the relief of William H. Nessle, which is on the Calendar, recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I will say to the chairman of the committee that I do this after consultation with the member of the committee who reported the bill and upon the production of some statements that will probably affect the opinion of the committee. There will be no objection I presume to having the bill referred back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. MITCHELL. I gave notice on Friday last that I desired to submit some remarks to the Senate upon an amendment which I propose to offer to the river and harbor bill. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendment I submitted for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon according to notice asks the present consideration of the river and harbor bill for the purpose of submitting some remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MILTON B. CUSHING.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me to ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1918) for the relief of Milton B. Cushing, paymaster, United States Navy.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it leads to no discussion I have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I think it will lead to no discussion with a brief explanation. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, and I call the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] to it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the accounting officers to cancel a charge of $10,000 now upon the books of the Treasury Department against Milton B. Cushing, a paymaster in the Navy, which is based upon a certain requisition and receipt purporting to be made by him on and to Paymaster Henry H. Pangborn, and bearing date May, 2, 1866, the requisition being a fraud and forgery against him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the particular cause of this measure? It is unusual relief, I notice.

Mr. HOAR. The bill is accompanied by a very brief report, but perhaps I can make a statement even briefer than the report.

This paymaster receipted a requisition made upon Paymaster Henry H. Pangborn. That requisition was receipted by Cushing, the paymaster for whose relief this bill is proposed, and transmitted to Pangborn. Cushing was informed that the form of his receipt was irregular, and was directed by Pangborn, whom he treated as his superior officer—he was his senior officer—to send him a new one in a different form, the old one being still outstanding. He sent a new one in blank by an officer in the Navy with a view of having the form corrected and the old one taken up. The messenger by whom he sent this new one was taken sick. I am not sure that he did not die; at any rate he was taken sick. The paper was transmitted, and instead of being used simply as a duplicate of the other and the other canceled, it was filled up fraudulently for $10,000 and that $10,000 was charged to Cushing, which ought to have been charged to the other paymaster, Pangborn. These facts have been found by three successive Auditors, and unanimously by the House Committee on Naval Affairs twice, (the bill has passed the House,) and now by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs can answer any specific question better than I can.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is the bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HOAR. From the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. The Fourth Auditor gave his opinion that the evidence was sufficient. We had the report of the Comptrollers and this of the Fourth Auditor, in his letter on file stating that he has no doubt of the correctness of the statement and that this relief ought to be given. Cushing himself seems to be a very straightforward, excellent person. Advantage was taken of certain circumstances to compel him to give a duplicate receipt. I do not think there is any doubt of it. I do not believe there is any doubt in the mind of any man who has examined the case in either of the two committees of the fact that Cushing never received one cent of this money. He took some pains also to protect the Government by sending by the hands of Brown, another paymaster, the duplicate receipt to put into the hands of Pangborn and receive his original receipt in exchange. Brown was taken sick with small-pox at Pensacola and sent the papers to Pangborn, which gave him or his clerk McCoy an opportunity to practice the fraud, which was subsequently done. There is no doubt of the fact that the Government ought to relieve Cushing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will ask one question. I do not know but that I agree to the bill upon the statement made; but as to the money, will the Government be a loser?

Mr. SARGENT. The recourse of the Government would be against the sureties of Pangborn. There were $10,000 missing; there is no doubt about that. The committee believe that this money was taken either by Pangborn or by McCoy, his clerk, after the death of Pangborn, who died a few months afterward. That is the recourse of the Government, but the Government certainly does not desire to hold an officer responsible who is innocent, who did what he could to discharge his duty and really in obedience to the order of Pangborn who was his superior in rank.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The motive of my question was to know if the committee traced the money to any party, whether now the Government has any relief whatever, and whether that question was considered by the committee and traced through?

Mr. SARGENT. Oh, yes, we traced the money so far as these circumstances which substantiate our theory. They exclude any other conclusion of fact. They amount to demonstration that the money was lost in the office of Pangborn, taken there by him or by his clerk. Of course the Government, against which no statute of limitations runs, has its recourse against the sureties on his bond, and I have no doubt, under the circumstances, that it will be able to maintain its case. But meanwhile this is simply for the relief of Cushing, who, on any theory of the case, ought to be relieved. I can say that I gave this case a great deal of examination, and I hesitated at first about it. I considered it for two or three months; I read the papers over and over again, and the evidence of any and all sorts calling for original evidence, and finally the opinion of the Fourth Auditor, to satisfy myself that Cushing had used due diligence, for that was the only point with me. I never did believe that he received any part of the money. The evidence on that was conclusive; but when he did send by another paymaster his receipt in blank as to the amount to be delivered and his own was to be taken up and that paymaster was taken sick with small-pox and sent this paper to Pangborn, I thought Cushing had probably exercised all the care which a careful, prudent business man could be expected to give, and the last reason against the relief disappeared. Thoroughly believing in its justice, I have concurred with the House report and recommended the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

JOHN CLINTON.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Senator from Oregon to allow me to ask the present consideration by the Senate of House bill No. 430.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 430) for the relief of John Clinton, postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to place to the credit of the Post-Office fund, on money-order account, $265.37; and the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department to credit John Clinton, of Brownsville, Tennessee, in his account as postmaster, with this sum for money-order funds stolen from the post-office at Brownsville, Tennessee, while he was postmaster, but without fault or negligence on his part.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN E. EDWARDS.

Mr. THURMAN. The Committee on Private Land Claims has been pretty well crowded out this session, and I rise now, in the morning hour, to ask that two or three little bills, to which I think there will be no objection at all, reported by that committee, may be taken up. The first one is House bill No. 1119. If it gives rise to any discussion, I will give way to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, with the understanding that the bill will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It confirms to Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, the title to six hundred and forty acres of land, situate in the Territory of New Mexico, being the tract of land located by virtue of a certificate numbered 444, of the second class, issued by the board of land commissioners for the county of Bexar and State of Texas, to one Andrew Flores, the 16th of August, 1847, and the same tract of land for which a patent was authorized to be issued by the act of the Legislature of the State of Texas entitled "An act to require the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue patents for lands therein named," approved December 2, 1850, and which is more particularly described in the plat and field-notes accompanying the survey thereof, executed by R. S. Howard, deputy surveyor, and approved of by the district surveyor for the district of Bexar, on the 30th of November, 1849.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY A. HERRICK.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. Just one more bill, and then I will give way.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1895) for the relief of Nancy A. Herrick, of Rochester, New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper officer of the Government to issue and deliver to Nancy A. Herrick, widow of J. F. Herrick, deceased, a patent in due form for the northeast quarter of section 13, in township 101, range 30, containing one hundred and fifty-one and sixty hundredths acres of land, at East Chain Lakes, Minnesota.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, to insert the following preamble:

Whereas Nancy A. Herrick, under and in virtue of the homestead laws, is entitled to a patent for the land hereinafter described; and

Whereas, under the circumstances of the case, the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, in 1874, that she was not so entitled, was and is erroneous: Therefore,

The preamble was agreed to.

ADJUSTMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to give notice that as soon as the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill shall have been disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 373) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories. I give the notice now because it is a very important measure, and the Senators from some of the Western States and those who take an interest in the question ought to give their attention to the subject when the bill comes up.

AWARD OF FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say that so soon as the pending appropriation bill shall be disposed of, while I do not wish to antagonize the Senator from Ohio in the measure to which he has alluded, I certainly shall be obliged to ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. No. 1328) providing for the payment of the award made by the fisheries commission at Halifax, under the treaty of Washington, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. That is a matter which must receive the consideration of Congress at the present session, or we run the hazard of an extra session being called. There is certainly a greater necessity for action upon that measure than on the one to which the Senator from Ohio has alluded, and I trust the Senate, feeling its importance, will allow that bill to be considered immediately after the Senate shall have concluded its action upon the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I shall not object to that.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. FERRY, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, inasmuch as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Maine have given notice of different bills to which they say they will call the attention of the Senate, I desire to give notice that I shall seek the earliest opportunity after the appropriation bill, if not antagonizing too forcibly the other Senators who have given notice, to call up the post-route bill, in which all Senators are interested, as well as the entire country.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I trust I shall not be regarded as overzealous if once more I endeavor to attract the attention of the Senate, and especially the Committee on Commerce, to a subject of incalculable importance to the people of the whole Pacific Northwest. I refer to the great necessity for the vigorous prosecution of the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River. Never in the history of this or any other country was any natural highway, much less one of the grand proportions of the great Columbia, held so exclusively, so mercilessly, and so regardlessly of the rights of the people in the control of unyielding corporate rapacity and power as is that of the Columbia River.

Although draining an empire, and in more respects than one second to no river on the face of God's green earth, its waters have been from the time when white men first trod the rich valleys it traverses, and are to-day, the self-appropriated property of one corporation; while its commerce is dictated and controlled by one company. Although for hundreds of miles its waters are deep, broad, grand, with a capacity ample for the accommodation of all the fleets that fill the Mississippi from its source to the sea, yet monopoly, taking advantage of the obstruction of five miles in the gorges of the Cascade Mountains, has seated itself in haughty imperiousness upon its banks, has taken possession of its waters, and with an arrogance born of utter indifference to the public welfare, and with but one end in view, and that self-aggrandizement, it issues its imperial ukase with as much nonchalance as ever did a Russian Czar. It defies competition; it laughs at opposition; it scorns all appeals; it preys upon the producers of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho with a relentless hand; and its exchequer overflows with revenues wrung from the people of the great Northwest through unreasonable and unconscionable freight and passenger exactions.

It levies a tribute unwarranted, exorbitant, unjust, upon the industries of the people; and while with one hand it sustains the commerce of an empire, with the other it smites it to the earth and paralyzes its very vitals; while with one hand it develops to some extent the industries of the country, with the other it grasps to its own exclusive benefit almost the entire products of those industries; while it makes it possible for the Pioneers of the Nation, struggling to establish homes on the broad prairies, in the fertile valleys, and on the green hillsides of the wilderness of the far West to succeed, it at the same time robs them of the legitimate fruits of their toil which, beyond a reasonable and just compensation for services rendered, instead of going to swell the private fortunes of the common carrier should rightfully go to the permanent establishment and the adornment of those homes, the erection of school-houses, the building of churches, the construction of roads, the establishing of manufactories, the education and culture of their children, with any surplus to their own private bank account as a competency for declining years.

It says to all attempts at competition "this river is mine; on its broad waters I have laid my pre-emption; my title-deed is of record; and for lo these many years I have been in exclusive possession from the mountains to the sea, and who is there now that shall have the audacity to dispute my right." That such a state of things should exist or be permitted to continue on the second river on this continent when the remedy is in the hands of this Government, and when the commerce of one-eighth of this nation, territorially considered, is in issue, is a reflection upon the wisdom, the statesmanship, the fidelity of Congress. And yet such is the fact in reference to the Columbia River. And that the Senate may fully comprehend the situation as it is, I desire to attract attention to a circular recently issued by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, the corporation to which I have been alluding as having the supreme and undivided control of the commerce of the Columbia River; a fact only made possible by the circumstance of these obstructions to navigation at the Cascades of the Columbia River, and the construction by such company of a railroad on either side thereof, thus taking absolute control of this pass in the river where it bursts through the Cascade range of mountains.

I will state that the circular I am about to read was issued for the purpose of destroying a competing boat recently built and placed on the waters of the Upper Columbia; the only one, by the way, as I believe, that has had the temerity to attempt to dispute the right of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company to the exclusive use of these waters in the last fifteen years. It reads as follows:

CIRCULAR.

The following rules have been adopted by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, to take effect on the 22d day of April, 1878:

First. This company will not take freight to carry to any point upon the Columbia or Snake River, above Celilo, except upon an agreement that it shall have the entire water-carriage of the same to its place of final destination, so far as the company's lines extend. The company, before receiving such freight, may require of the owner or shipper such agreement in writing, with surety or otherwise, which shall provide that if the terminus of the water-carriage of the shipment, or of any portion of the same, shall be falsely represented in the shipping receipt or otherwise and the freight shall, by direction of the owner, in said shipping receipt or otherwise, be landed before arriving at such terminus and shall be further carried upon steamboat or boats or vessels not belonging to this company, then the party to such agreement shall be holden for and bound to pay to this company full freight for such further water-carriage at local rates, in the same manner as if this company had carried the same to the terminus of its water-carriage. And that such reshipment on another than a company's boat or vessel, within thirty days after a landing of the same as herein above stated from the company's boat or boats, shall be taken and held to be conclusive evidence that the terminus of water transportation of said freight was falsely represented and that the true terminus is the point to which it was finally carried. And said agreement shall contain a further stipulation that in case action is brought thereon and a recovery by the company had, the judge, justice of the peace, or court, before whom or which the action is tried, shall include in the amount of the judgment, as disbursements, such sum over and above the taxable cost as he or it shall determine to be reasonable attorney's fees for prosecuting said action.

Second. All down freight from points on the Columbia or Snake River, which is brought to Wallula, Umatilla, or Celilo, on any steamboat or other water-craft not belonging to this company, and is reshipped for further carriage by this company, will be charged the usual rates of the company, from the point of shipment upon such other steamboat or water-craft, which freight shall be paid in advance at the time of shipment.

This rule shall not apply to produce brought by the farmer or producer in his own boat to the said shipping points of Wallula, Umatilla, or Celilo.

S. G. REED,
Vice-President Oregon Steam Navigation Company.

Mr. President, was such a remarkable pronunciamento ever issued by any common carrier on any river, canal, lake, ocean, railroad, or wagon-road since the world began? I apprehend not; and I do not refer to it now in this connection because I for one moment entertain the thought that the Oregon Steam Navigation Company could in law much less in justice enforce any such doctrine as that enunciated in this circular, for they very clearly could not; but I refer to it for the purpose of showing the fact that this corporation regards itself as having the exclusive right to control the carrying trade on this great river, and to dictate its own terms, however harsh or severe, to the producers and shippers of that country. And while it may not be enabled in law to enforce the terms of this circular, that still, owing to these obstructions in the river and the firm footing this company has obtained by reason thereof along its entire navigable length of over five hundred miles, it has virtually absolute control of its waters and its commerce.

When the Northern Pacific Railroad bill shall have passed the House of Representatives if it shall pass as agreed to by the Senate, and under its provisions that company shall within the next two years have constructed its road around these obstructions at the Cascades and The Dalles, then and not till then shall the power of this monopoly be broken. But the commerce, the growing industries, the rapidly increasing population of the great North Pacific empire, demand and are entitled to more than mere competition by boats and cars. Never will justice be meted out to that deserving, enterprising, pioneer people until this Government, whose bounden duty it is, shall overcome these obstructions, so that boats from the greatest wheat centers of this continent in the wide, fertile, prolific basin of the Columbia, an extent of country unsurpassed in capabilities for production, shall be enabled to pass uninterruptedly without breaking bulk from the head of steam navigation to the sea. The agricultural, pastoral, mining, manufacturing, piscatorial, lumber, and commercial interests of the rapidly developing empire that separates the Rocky Mountains from the North Pacific Ocean unite with the social, political, and civilizing influences of this heroic and progressive age, as illustrated by a pioneer people in that pioneer country in demanding the speedy and thorough cleansing of this Amazon of North America from all obstructions, to the end that the millions of annual products of the world-famed valley of the Columbia may pass without interruption from the place of production to the sea.

But what is the character of this Columbia River monopoly, this commercial dictator to the internal commerce of the whole Pacific Northwest? What is the objection that with an almost unanimous voice is urged against it by the people who have established themselves upon these distant shores? Is it because the gentlemen composing this company are in any manner personally objectionable, or that they do not furnish suitable boats or proper accommodations for the traveling and freighting public? Not by any manner of means. On the contrary, the objection is simply this: their freight charges are unreasonable, burdensome, oppressive, and to an extent that paralyzes industries, obstructs commerce, retards immigration, circumscribes enterprise, palsies human energy, discourages capital, humiliates labor, inhibits manufactures; in a word, holds in absolute subserviency and complete subordination to personal advancement every element of commercial and business life and material prosperity of that section of our common country. And it is against this system of commercial oppression, of industrial bondage, and for relief from it that the people of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to-day appeal to the General Government. And am I wrong in my estimate of the character of the exactions to which the people are subjected on this river? Let us consider briefly the facts. I hold in my hand a copy of the freight and passenger rates of that company that went into operation April 1, 1877, and which I believe are the present rates. It reads:

Oregon Steam Navigation Company, Upper Columbia River. Freight and passenger rates, to take effect April 1, 1877. Rates of freight per ton measurement.

Portland to Dalles, 121 miles	$10 00
Portland to Umatilla, 217 miles	20 00
Portland to Wallula, 240 miles	25 00
Portland to Palouse, 317 miles	32 50
Portland to Penewawa and Almota, 348 miles	37 50
Portland to Lewiston, 401 miles	40 00

Fast freight $2.50 per ton extra to The Dalles.
Fast freight $5 per ton extra to all points above The Dalles.

Passenger charges:

Portland to Dalles	5 00
Portland to Umatilla	10 00
Portland to Wallula	15 00
Portland to Penewawa and Almota	18 00
Portland to Lewiston	20 00

All bills payable in United States gold coin.

That is to say, it costs to ship a ton of freight from Portland, Oregon, to Umatilla, a distance of 217 miles, via the Columbia River, $20 in gold coin, or nine and one-fourth cents per ton per mile.

From Portland to Lewiston, Idaho Territory, a distance of 401 miles, it costs $40 per ton, or ten cents gold coin per ton per mile.

Compare this for a moment with the cost of transporting a ton of freight by water from Chicago to New York, which is less than one cent or about nine and three-fifths mills per ton per mile.

Again, the freight charges on the Missouri River from Saint Louis to Fort Benton, a distance of thirty-two hundred miles, are only $32 per ton; $1 per ton for one hundred miles or one cent per ton per mile.

And in this connection the fact must not be lost sight of that the Missouri River is one of the most dangerous and difficult streams to navigate on this continent; filled with eddies, quicksands, and constantly changing channels, yet freight on this dangerous river is carried for about one-tenth the price that rules on the Upper Columbia. And why is this so? Simply from the fact that the Missouri River is, as it should be, free to competition, open to all; while the Columbia is owned, ruled, and controlled by a single navigation company.

In other words, the cost of moving a ton of freight up the Columbia River is about ten times greater than moving a ton along any of the principal water-courses of this continent. But not only so, that which constitutes a ton by weight on the route from Chicago to New York, and from Saint Louis to Fort Benton, on the Missouri River, and on most other of the water-transportation routes in this country, constitutes on the Columbia River under their system of measurement of freight an average of more than one-third more, and in many instances, depending on the character of the freight, one-half, three-fourths, twice as much, three times as much, and in some instances ten times more.

How is this, it may be inquired? What is the explanation of this startling proposition? The conclusive answer is found in the fact that the Oregon Steam Navigation Company determine their freight by measurement and not by weight, as do other transportation companies; unless perhaps it may be such freight as iron and other freight of like heavy character, which they weigh because it is to their interest to weigh it. That is to say, a certain number of cubic feet, an arbitrary number, of course, measuring from projecting points of the article shipped and deducting nothing for vacuum, constitutes according to the rules of this company a ton. So that it is not unfrequently the case, as I am credibly informed, that an article weighing not over two hundred pounds constitutes a ton of freight; and on such an article the cost of transportation from Portland, Oregon, to Lewiston, Idaho Territory, a distance of four hundred miles, would be $40, or at the rate of $400 per ton according to weight, or at the rate of one dollar per ton per mile, determining the ton by weight—two thousand pounds.

To illustrate this phase of the situation more clearly, I quote an article in the Palouse Gazette, issue of May 7, 1878, a newspaper published at Colfax, Washington Territory. The article is headed, "The Oregon Steam Navigation Company; is it a grinding monopoly;" and reads as follows:

In the Daily Oregonian of April 12 appears a communication from S. G. Reed, vice-president of the above named company, discussing the question of "transportation and monopoly, comparative rates," &c. Mr. Reed complains that his company has been "grossly misrepresented by designing parties before the committee of Congress," also that it has been called a "grinding monopoly," and to have been guilty of robbing the people of Oregon and Washington in various ways, and he undertakes to argue away the wide-spread and deep dissatisfaction of the people east of the Cascades who have been subjected to the exaction of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company. People do not complain of the style of the steamboats and cars employed by that company in the carrying trade, or in the department of its officers, but in the exorbitant rates charged for their services.

This is the only question: does the Oregon Steam Navigation Company charge too much for its services? The almost unanimous voice of the people of eastern Oregon and Washington is expressed daily that it does, and there need be no wonder expressed by the vice-president that they pray to Congress or any other power for relief from the "grinding monopoly."

They are not so exasperated, but they could follow Mr. Reed through a calculation showing what interest or income the company has received on its investment, whether it is greater or less than upon farming operations or upon similar investments in other States; this he does not do, but contents himself with a comparison of the tariffs of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, the Oregon Central Railroad, and the river lines of the Willamette Valley.

Said comparison is deceptive, inasmuch as the Oregon Steam Navigation Company does not mean by the word ton what the other companies mean. Ordinarily a ton is two thousand pounds; with the Oregon Steam Navigation Company sometimes a box weighing two hundred pounds is called a ton, and, in order to make a ton comparison it is necessary to multiply the Oregon Steam Navigation Company's price by ten. On a box of that kind the freight to Lewiston would not be $40 per ton, as the company calls it, and as other folks and transportation companies understand it, but $400 per ton. A common riding-saddle, weighing fifteen pounds, under such exaggerating calculations, is charged $2.70, or $352 per ton; a little bunch of fruit-trees, weighing twenty-five pounds, brings at the rate of $500 per ton; a parlor organ in box, weighing four hundred pounds, delivered at Lewiston, costs $40. $160 per ton by weight, and this rule of measurement holds with all dry goods, groceries, provisions, furniture, &c. A small lot of machinery, which cost $22 from San Francisco to Portland, was charged $225 from Portland by the Oregon Steam Navigation Company's line. Special and more favorable rates are claimed by Mr. Reed for agricultural implements and machinery, but this also is delusive when compared with the rates of other transportation lines. Iron, bolts, &c., are taken by weight, because they bring more by weight than by measurement.

Mr. Reed lays great stress upon the fact that wheat, flour, oats, barley &c., are charged only $8 per ton from points above Wallula to Portland, or at the rate of twenty-four cents per bushel. Now, in the name of our common humanity, is not this about all these products will bear? The cost of getting them to the river will average eight cents, which, added to above, gives an aggregate of thirty-two cents per bushel, to be deducted from the Portland price. The cost of raising a bushel of wheat, when it yields thirty bushels per acre, cannot be a cent short of forty cents, saying nothing of the interest upon farm capital, and adding this to the cost of transportation we have a total of seventy-two cents. How much can there be left after deducting cost of sacks, storage, wharfage, "rattage" and waste, to pay the up-river freights at from $160 to $500 per ton? Mr. Reed, the long suffering people wait your answer.

I also quote the following from the Walla Walla Union, a newspaper published at Walla Walla, Washington Territory. It reads as follows:

The Walla Walla Railroad received a locomotive a few days ago from New York, on which the charges were $265; from Portland to Wallula the charges, per Oregon Steam Navigation Company, were $541.

That is to say, the freight on this locomotive from New York to Portland, Oregon, a distance of about four thousand miles if it crossed the continent, over twice that if it came around it, was $265, while from Portland to Wallula by the boats of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, a distance of two hundred and forty miles, the freight charges were $541.

Mr. President, I might quote for hours from journals scattered all over the Pacific Northwest for the purpose of showing public sentiment in reference to this matter. Indeed, so thoroughly aroused and justly indignant were the people of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho at the issue of the recent circular to which I have asked attention, that with but a solitary exception, that of the Portland Oregonian, which is now generally regarded as the subsidized defender of this "grinding monopoly," its terms and the spirit that prompted it have been unqualifiedly and severely condemned by every public journal of all political parties of the Northwest.

Mr. President, when I first took my seat in the Senate, in March, 1873, I called the attention of the Senate to these facts, and to the great necessity of opening up the Columbia River to competition and free navigation by the construction of canal and locks at the cascades of that river. I then became a member of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and in connection with Senator Casserly of California was designated a subcommittee to investigate and report upon the commercial interests of the States and Territories of the Pacific coast. Senator Casserly, shortly after the appointment of this subcommittee, resigned his seat in the Senate, and the work devolved upon me; and the full committee, in its report to the Senate of April 24, 1874, through Senator WINDOM, its chairman, used the following language:

THE PACIFIC COAST.

The investigations of the committee have, under the terms of the resolution by which it was created, been confined chiefly to questions relating to the transportation of the surplus products of the Western and Northwestern States of the interior to the seaboard. The committee have, however, felt that in treating of a subject so truly national in all its bearings the interests of the States of the Pacific coast should not be neglected. Senators MITCHELL, of Oregon, and Casserly, of California, were in June, 1873, appointed a subcommittee to investigate and report upon the commercial interests of that section of the country. Mr. Casserly having resigned his seat in the Senate in November, 1873, the duty has devolved chiefly upon Mr. MITCHELL.

The rapid development of the States of California and Oregon in population, in commerce, and in mineral and agricultural wealth is a matter of history, the truthful recital of which bears almost the impress of fiction. The resources of all that vast territory lying west of the Rocky Mountain range present possibilities the full development of which waits upon the means of transport to the sea-ports of the Pacific coast.

The value of the exports of gold and silver, breadstuffs, provisions, and other articles from California, Oregon, and Washington Territory during the year 1873 was as follows:

Breadstuffs	$20,113,574
Gold and silver coin and bullion	14,490,577
All other articles	5,825,080
Total	40,430,631

The above statement does not, however, embrace the value of the commodities shipped from the Pacific States to the other States of the Union.

According to our annual statistics of foreign commerce for the year 1873, it appears that San Francisco was the third city of the Union in the value of domestic exports, New York being first and New Orleans second. And it also appears that San Francisco was the third city in the value of imports, New York being first and Boston second.

Wheat appears to be the chief exportable product of the Pacific coast. During the year 1873 the exports of wheat amounted to 12,235,708 bushels, this amount comprising 35 per cent. of the entire exports of wheat from the United States to foreign countries. It is estimated that the exports of wheat from Oregon during the year 1874 will amount to nearly 5,000,000 bushels, an increase of about 4,000,000 bushels since the year 1872. Oregon and Washington Territory also produce immense quantities of lumber and timber, and wool is becoming an important article of commerce in all the Pacific States.

The committee desire especially to call attention to the importance of improving that great natural highway of the Pacific coast, the Columbia River, with its principal tributary, the Willamette.

Portland is situated at the head of ship navigation. Improvements are required in the channel of the river below that city for sea-going vessels; also in the Columbia above the mouth of the Willamette, and in the Willamette above Portland for steamboat and barge navigation. The western part of the Territory of Idaho and the eastern part of the State of Oregon and of the Territory of Washington form one of the richest agricultural sections on the continent. The Columbia River is, at the present time, the only avenue of commerce from this region to the seaboard.

On the Columbia River there are two obstructions to navigation, consisting of rapids and falls; these are, first, The Dalles, fourteen miles in length, and, second, the Cascades, four miles in length.

Several years ago the Oregon Steam Navigation Company obtained a charter from Congress for the construction of portage railroads around these rapids, by which means that company now holds an absolute monopoly of the commerce of the Columbia between the seaboard and the territory east of the Cascade Mountains. No other persons or companies can engage in the business of transporting merchandise on the Columbia River. The freight charges imposed by this company are so burdensome as to stifle enterprise and prevent the legitimate development of commerce and agriculture. Wheat worth $1.25 at Portland is worth but forty cents at Wallula, only two hundred and thirty miles distant by river.

For transporting a ton of merchandise from Portland to Umatilla, a distance of two hundred miles, a freight charge of $25 is imposed. This is at the rate of twelve and a half cents (gold) per ton per mile. The freight charges on wheat from Wallula to Portland are $6 per ton on regular boats, twice a week, and $8 per ton on special boats.

The average rate of transport from Chicago to New York by the water-line is only 9.6 mills per ton per mile and the rate by all rail 12.1 mills. In comparison with these rates, the extortionate nature of the charges imposed on the Columbia River may be clearly appreciated.

The people of Oregon desire that the National Government, which has exclusive jurisdiction of all natural navigable streams, shall improve the rapids of the Columbia River by means of canals and locks so as to admit the passage of river steamers and barges. It is believed, also, that portage railroads can be constructed by the Government at a cost not exceeding $900,000; and in view of the pressing demand for the opening of free commerce on the Columbia River, this plan is thought to be the one which should be first adopted.

The required improvements of the Willamette and of the Columbia, below the mouth of the Willamette, consist in the removal of sand-bars by dredging and the construction of such works as may be necessary to maintain the required depth of water in the channel.

But aside from these improvements of such obvious necessity, the development of the State of Oregon and of the Territories of Idaho and Washington depends largely upon the completion of at least two mail-trunk railway lines connecting the State of Oregon and Washington Territory with the States east of the Rocky Mountain range.

To such main trunk lines numerous lateral lines would soon be constructed, reaching to all points and leading to that general development of the country which has followed the extension of the railway system throughout the interior and the Atlantic States.

The committee recommend that appropriations be made at the present session of Congress for surveys of the Cascades and Dalles of the Columbia River, and of the Willamette River, with a view to the improvements above indicated.

In pursuance of the recommendations contained in this report Congress at the same session made an appropriation for a survey of the Cascades and The Dalles, with a view of determining the practicability of the construction of canal and locks. This survey was made, and the War Department at the next session reported favorably and recommended an appropriation for the commencement of the work at the Cascades; and Congress at the session before the last made an appropriation of $90,000 for that purpose. At the last session, owing to the presidential controversy monopolizing the whole time and attention of Congress, no river and harbor bill passed either branch of Congress. Much delay was occasioned in obtaining the right of way, suit for that purpose having been commenced by the United States against the Oregon Steam Navigation Company, at whose request the case was continued by the United States District court of Oregon. The House at this session has inserted $75,000 in the river and harbor bill with which to continue the work.

The amount is entirely too small, and by every consideration of justice and economy should be increased. The estimate by the War Department for this year's appropriation is $500,000, and it is for the purpose of increasing the amount named in the bill as it came from the House that I have submitted this amendment, which is to make the appropriation for this year $300,000. There should not be the slightest hesitation upon the part of Congress in increasing this appropriation to this amount. It is no longer a question either as to the practicability of this work or its policy. The first has been fully determined, not only by the able and elaborate reports of the Engineers' department, which have received the approval of a military commission of engineers designated for that purpose, but by the Secretary of War himself, and the latter by Congress itself two years ago in appropriating $90,000 with which to commence the construction of the work. Why should there be hesitation, then, in making promptly each year such appropriation as will enable the Engineer department to proceed with the speedy construction of the work? Until it is completed all money invested is as so much dead capital. Every consideration, therefore, of interest, economy, and true statesmanship would seem to require the completion of this work at the earliest possible period. If this spirit of domination, of exorbitancy, of self-interest, so dangerous to the best interests of the people, so at war with the material development and general prosperity of this vast region, can be destroyed and its remorseless heel lifted from the necks of the producer and shipper—if such a thing can be accomplished by the congressional knife, then with Macbeth, when contemplating the assassination of Duncan, we would say:

> If it were done, when 'tis done then 'twere well
> It were done quickly.

This great enterprise once completed, and the white wings of commerce no longer pinioned by the fetters of monopoly will move in graceful splendor over the magnificent waters of one of the most majestic rivers of the globe. Then will every industry be vitalized, every energy awakened, every hope animated. Then will capital abandon its hiding-place and bring its reasonable returns, and labor stimulated and encouraged its rightful recompense. Then will enterprise rear in conquering triumph its victorious banner as it moves on from conquest to conquest amid the undeveloped regions of the distant West; while the feet of human progress, with sandals no longer chained to the inertia of monopoly, shall keep step to the music of a new civilization and new life along the busy shores and through the extensive valleys of the great Columbia.

I move that the amendment to the river and harbor bill to which I have spoken be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (H. R. No. 4286) to establish post-roads in the several States therein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WOMEN AS LEGAL PRACTITIONERS.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1077; it is only four or five lines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The Senator from California asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1077. Is there objection?

Mr. WHYTE. I shall have to object.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the bill?

Mr. WHYTE. A bill allowing women to practice in the Supreme Court.

Mr. SARGENT. In five minutes Senators can vote the bill up or vote it down.

Mr. WHYTE. It is a new departure, and the bill will lead to discussion.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the title of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. No. 1077) to repeal certain legal disabilities of women."

Mr. CONKLING. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. WITHERS. I call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who reported the bill, is not in his seat at present.

The bill was read.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that my amendment to the bill be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

> That no person shall be excluded from practicing as an attorney and counsellor at law before any court of the United States on account of sex.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on taking up the bill, which will exhaust the morning hour, because I want to ascertain whether the bill can be considered or not. If Senators do not like the bill, let them vote it down, and let them discuss it if they please, but, at any rate, I want the bill considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1077.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it expected within five minutes to dispose of that bill?

Mr. SARGENT. Not necessarily.

Mr. WHYTE. The legislative appropriation bill comes up at one o'clock.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not asking to set aside the appropriation bill. I am only asking that this bill may be considered.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want the bill taken up until the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is here.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not responsible for the absence of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I insist on my motion.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well, let the yeas and nays be taken on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am willing to take up this bill at almost any time; but now, just three minutes before the morning hour shall expire, when the unfinished business will be in order before the roll call can be concluded, I certainly do not feel called upon to vote to take up this bill.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator can vote as he sees fit. I wish to ascertain whether the bill has any more friends. I know it has one. I merely want this as a test vote, whether it has friends or not, and I hope Senators will vote on the question of taking it up or not, as they feel on the bill. Of course I understand that will exhaust the few minutes left of the morning hour, but that is not too much to give to the ladies who ask this privilege.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator cannot make a test vote by saying that it shall be a test vote upon taking up this bill. There are plenty of reasons for not taking up this bill, without reference to the merits or demerits of the bill; and I protest that the Senator cannot make any test vote on the subject at all until he gets the bill up. When he gets the bill up then he can have a test vote.

Mr. SARGENT. I can have my own judgment whether it is a test or not. I ask that the yeas and nays be taken.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Anthony,	Christiancy,	Matthews,	Sargent,
Blaine,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Saunders,
Bruce,	Hoar,	Oglesby,	Teller,
Burnside,	Howe,	Paddock,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Kirkwood,	Patterson,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	McDonald,	Plumb,
Cameron of Wis.,	McMillan,	Rollins,

NAYS—26.

Armstrong,	Conkling,	Harris,	Randolph,
Bailey,	Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Saulsbury,
Barnum,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Thurman,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Johnston,	Whyte,
Beck,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Withers.
Cockrell,	Grover,	Merrimon,
Coke,	Hamlin,	Morgan,

ABSENT—24.

Allison,	Dorsey,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Ransom,
Chaffee,	Garland,	Kernan,	Sharon,
Conover,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Spencer,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	McCreery,	Wadleigh,
Dennis,	Jones of Florida,	McPherson,	Wallace.

So the motion to take up the bill was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall try it again some other time.

TIMBER CULTURE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 396) to amend section 2464 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the cultivation of timber on the public domain, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

Section 1, line 10, strike out all after the word "acres" and down to and including the word "acres" in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the words "or less."

Section 1, strike out all of lines 18 and 19.

Section 2, line 12, strike out the word "naturally" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or other lands."

Section 2, line 20, after the word "dollars," insert the words "if the tract applied for is more than eighty acres; and $5 if it is eighty acres or less."

Section 2, line 27, after the word "cultivate," strike out the word "to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and put in."

Section 2, line 28, between the words "and" and "fourth" insert the word "the."

Section 2, line 29, strike out all after the words "five acres" down to and including the word "subdivision," in the thirty-fourth line, and insert the words "all entries of less quantity than one quarter section shall be plowed, planted, cultivated, and planted to trees, tree-seeds, or cuttings in the same manner and in the same proportion as hereinbefore provided for a quarter section."

Section 2, line 37, after the word "such," strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 38, after the word "are" insert the word "so;" also, after the word "provided" insert the word "further."

Section 2, line 42, strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 50, after the word "of," strike out the word "timber" and insert in lieu thereof the word "trees."

Section 2, line 53, after the word "least," strike out the words "nine hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "six hundred and seventy-five."

Section 2, line 54, after the word "such," strike out all to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof the words "tract of land."

Strike out all of section 3, and substitute the following:

That if at any time after the filing of said affidavit, and prior to the issuing of the patent for said land, the claimant shall fail to comply with any of the requirements of this act, then, and in that event, such land shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws, or by some other person under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the party making claim to said land, either as a homestead settler or under this act, shall give at the time of filing his application such notice to the original claimant as shall be prescribed by the rules established by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and the rights of the parties shall be determined as in other contested cases.

And to amend title of the bill by striking out the title and inserting in lieu thereof the following substitute:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies."

A. S. PADDOCK,
P. B. PLUMB,
L. F. GROVER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

P. D. WIGGINTON,
T. M. PATTERSON,
FRANK WELCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish a moment of time of the Senate while I make a statement relating both to myself and to the Senator from California, [Mr. BOOTH;] I hardly know which is most interested.

The Senator from California, the other day, spoke to me and said he would be absent for a day or two, and asked me to pair with him upon the bill against the further retirement of greenbacks. I agreed to do so; and when the motion was made to take up that question I rose in my place and so stated and abstained from voting. Yesterday the Senator who sits behind me [Mr. DORSEY] said he was necessarily called from the Senate Chamber, that he did not want to lose his vote, and asked me if I would pair with him. I said "certainly," the fact that I had done so with the Senator from California having escaped my recollection entirely. So I did pair my vote with the Senator from Arkansas, and I did not vote, while I should have been paired, in justice, with the Senator from California. I hope that Senator will forgive me, for I assure him it was entirely from misrecollection.

Mr. BOOTH. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Maine for his statement, simply as it puts me right on the record. The explanation is entirely satisfactory, and I do not know, on the whole, but that the Nestor of the Senate ought always to pair against two. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4807) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4200) relating to the national road in the State of Maryland, and to give consent of the United States to a certain act of the General Assembly of Maryland in relation to said road;

A bill (H. R. No. 4824) to amend section 3843 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to settlements of postmasters; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5052) to amend section 3835 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2132) to pay for clerical services and extraordinary expenses, under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, in the Pawnee land district in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2176) granting an increase of pension to Mattie McTaggart, widow of the late First Lieutenant McTaggart, Seventeenth United States Infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the second amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 35) to repeal the bankrupt law.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS.) The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, it may perhaps facilitate the consideration of the bill now before the Senate if I make a brief general statement with reference to it.

The total estimate for the legislative, judicial, and executive departments of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, is $16,362,617.91. The total of the act for 1878 (the current year, ending June 30) was $15,537,581.30. To that, however, there were added by various deficiency bills $340,945.47, as appears by the following statement of deficiencies for current year already passed on account of items in the legislative, &c., bill:

For the Senate	$52,546 65
For House of Representatives	43,096 52
For executive office—contingent	4,500 00
For collectors of internal revenue	20,000 00
For agents, surveyors, gaugers, &c	40,000 00
For detection, &c., for violation of internal-revenue laws.	20,000 00
For temporary clerks, Treasury Department	14,500 30
For contingent, Treasury Department	22,000 00
For mints and assay offices	25,900 00
For miscellaneous, Pension Office	4,000 00
For Patent Office—photographing	40,600 00
For Patent Office—contingent	26,000 00
For Land Office—contingent expenses	15,000 00
For Surgeon-General's Office	11,902 00
	340,945 47

Making the total for the year 1878 of $15,878,526.77. The total of this bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations is $15,564,942, being $313,584.77 less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year. If there be any objection to the bill, I think it will be found that the appropriations are in many of their items too small rather than too large. I repeat the statement that it is $313,584.77 less than the appropriation for the current year, and $797,675.91 less than the amounts asked for by the Departments.

The bill is by no means as formidable as the several hundred amendments reported would indicate. The decision of half a dozen general questions will cover probably nineteen-twentieths of the important amendments to the bill as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. I will mention a few of these general propositions. In the first place, the bill as it came from the House assumes to reduce the compensation and to dictate the number of employés of the Senate. Your committee, believing that the force of Senate employés is not too large nor the compensation greater than is necessary for the prompt and efficient transaction of the business, have recommended that the force of Senate employés and the compensation paid them be reinstated as they now exist.

This question was much discussed in the extended conferences of 1876, and again in 1877, and the present force and compensation are the results of that discussion. Your committee were the more ready to recommend this reinstatement from the fact that the Senate has always insisted upon its competency to decide all questions with reference to its own employés, and has always been quite ready to assume the responsibility for any extravagance either in numbers or in force.

The Committee on Appropriations have recommended a few changes in the force of the House employés, merely for the purpose of leaving open those questions to a committee of conference in case the House shall upon further consideration desire to change them. The Senate has always been quite ready to permit the House to settle such questions for itself, as it insists upon the right to settle similar questions relating to its own employés.

If the Senate shall agree with the committee on these points, the first six pages of the bill will require very little attention, because that is all there is on them.

I come now to the second general proposition. The House bill undertakes to reduce the expenditures for clerical service by regrading, or rather by degrading, the several classes of clerks in all the Departments and bureaus of the Government. This reorganization of the clerical force, or I think I might more properly describe it as the disorganization of the clerical force, extends through the entire bill. I can best illustrate what I mean by taking one or two of the bureaus. Take, for instance, the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. On page 28 of the House bill, page 32 of the bill before the Senate as printed, there are at present twenty-five clerks of class 4, thirty clerks of class 3, forty clerks of class 2. The principle which pervades the bill is this: of the twenty-five clerks of class 4, the bill provides for only twenty; the thirty clerks of class 3, it reduces to twenty-two; the forty clerks of class 2, it reduces to thirty-two; and it then adds a similar number of clerks at $1,000 each to make up for the reductions of the second, third, and fourth classes. The result, as we are informed by the heads of Departments and bureaus, is simply to disorganize their present clerical force and to very greatly reduce its efficiency. The committee believe that the present organization is much better, that the thousand-dollar clerks will be substantially useless in the Departments. We are so informed upon consultation with nearly all the heads of Departments and bureaus, and therefore we have recommended that the present number in their respective classes be reinstated and that the provisions for thousand-dollar clerks be stricken out.

If the Senate shall agree with us upon that proposition, they will dispose of a very large proportion of these numerous amendments. I do not know how many, but they are upon almost every page of the bill.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will inform the Senate that the classification to be restored has been in force ever since 1853 under the reorganization then proposed by Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, and others, Mr. Hunter then being chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I was about to state that—I am much obliged to the Senator, however, for suggesting it—the classification, as it has been restored by the committee, is of long standing—twenty-five years—and we believe it better to adhere to it. There is a remarkable unanimity of belief among the responsible heads of Departments and bureaus that the mode of reduction proposed by the House bill materially impairs the efficiency of the service. It is even worse than the iron rule of 10 per cent. reduction proposed two years ago. That merely shaved off the salaries of poorly paid officials. This proposes to accomplish the same thing by degrading men who have been promoted for efficiency and faithfulness, and thereby it demoralizes the entire clerical force. The small saving in expense will be much more than counterbalanced by the loss of efficiency.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I would also remind the chairman, which he knows very well, that the salaries of clerks provided for in this bill as we amend it were fixed in 1853.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly; the salaries of these various grades were fixed at that time.

Mr. BECK. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him. I thought he had passed away from that subject.

Mr. WINDOM. No; I intended to mention it; but I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it.

I want to say another thing on that point before I leave it: that in nearly all these bureaus and divisions the demand is for clerks of a higher grade. The members of the Committee on Appropriations will all bear me witness that we have very little application from any of them for clerks of the low grades, especially for clerks at a compensation of $900 or $1,000. Take the Comptrollers' offices, for illustration. The House bill has reduced the grades of their clerks very materially, and added thousand-dollar clerks. The business of the two Comptrollers' offices is to supervise the accounts that go through the six Auditors' offices, and they cannot make use of such clerks as can be secured for nine or ten hundred dollars. It would be very unsafe for the Government to do so. The duties of many of the clerks in these offices are more important and difficult than those of the judges in our State courts. The sums involved are many times greater and the questions of law and fact often much more intricate than those decided by the courts. The idea that such duties will be properly and safely performed by a man who can be employed for a thousand dollars a year is simply absurd. The same thing is true of all the Auditors' offices.

Take the Pension Bureau, and the Surgeon and Adjutant Generals' Offices, all of which have the settlement of questions relating to Pensions. An incompetent or dishonest clerk would cost the Government many times more than the salary of a good one. The questions decided in those offices require a kind of ability which cannot be secured for $1,000 a year. In fact this is true of all the offices. It is impossible to secure the kind of service necessary to the faithful and efficient discharge of duty for anything like the sums proposed in these reduced grades.

There are one or two other general questions involved in the amendments. The House bill abolishes the Fourth and Fifth Auditorships, and transfers the duties of the Fourth to the Second Auditor, and of the Fifth to the First Auditor. The Committee on Appropriations recommend that both of these auditorships be reinstated. Our reasons may be briefly stated.

These auditorships were established in 1817. They have remained unchallenged under all administrations from that time until now. I believe that when Mr. Chase was Secretary of the Treasury a committee was appointed for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the organization of the Treasury Department. They reported unanimously that it was not advisable to disturb the present organization. In the annals of Congress for 1816 I find the following:

> The President communicated a report, made in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, of the 20th of April last, requiring the Secretaries of the Departments to report jointly to the Senate, in the first week of the next session of Congress, a plan to insure the annual settlement of the public accounts and a more certain accountability of the public expenditure in their respective Departments, and the report was read. It is as follows.

The report is given in full, and is signed by James Monroe, Secretary of State; William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury; George Graham, acting Secretary of War; B. W. Crowninshield, Secretary of the Navy. This commission report among other things:

> That the primary and final settlement of all accounts be made in the Treasury Department, and that the organization of that Department be modified, so as to authorize the appointment of—
> 1. Four additional auditors.
> 2. One additional comptroller.
> 3. One solicitor.
> 4. That the mint establishment be placed under the direction of the Treasury Department.

It then proceeds to say:

> According to the modification here recommended, the
> First Auditor will be charged with the settlement of the public accounts accruing in the Treasury Department.
> Second Auditor will be charged with the settlement of all accounts relative to the pay and clothing of the Army, the subsistence of the officers, bounties and premiums, the recruiting service, and the contingent expenses of the War Department.
> Third Auditor will be charged with the settlement of all accounts relative to the Army, the Quartermaster's Department, the Hospital department, and the Ordnance department. Both of these Auditors will keep the property account connected with those branches of service in the War Department, confided to them, respectively.
> Fourth Auditor will be charged with the settlement of all accounts relative to the Navy Department. And the > Fifth Auditor will be charged with the settlement of all accounts relative to the State and Home Departments.

They say:

> If the Department should be thus organized and vested with sufficient power to compel all officers employed in the collection or disbursement of the public money to render their vouchers and settle their accounts, the annual settlement of the public accounts will be insured, and a more certain accountability established in the respective Departments.

In conformity with this recommendation the present organization was adopted the following year, 1817, and five auditorships were established. They have been in existence ever since. In 1817 there were less than nine million people in this country, less than one-fifth of the present population. The aggregate receipts and expenditures of that year were $48,553,659.60, and the receipts and expenditures of 1877 are $410,536,084.47. The receipts and expenditures last year were nine times greater than the receipts and expenditures of the Government at the time this eminent committee found it necessary to establish five auditorships.

The total sums embraced in the accounts settled by the Fifth Auditor in 1877 were $294,935,675.33, or six times greater than the entire receipts and expenditures of the Government at the time the five auditorships were established. And yet it is now deemed advisable by one branch of Congress to reduce the five auditorships to three, at a time when one of them settles accounts six times greater than the entire aggregate of receipts and expenditures when the five were deemed necessary by the Government in 1817. Your committee can discover no sufficient reason for this change, but very many why it should not be made.

The bill as it comes to us also changes the messengerships in the various Departments, striking down the messengers and appointing assistants instead, and also a number of pages in each of the Departments, in order to make up the deficiency created by abolishing the regular messengers. This is very much complained of by the Departments, the uniform testimony from all of them being that they have no use whatever for pages. Perhaps I might make an exception of one or two bureaus, but with the exception of one or two bureaus, the uniform testimony is that the pages cannot be used, and that under the present organization the messengers are very important. We have therefore reinstated the messengers as they stand under the existing law.

The watchmen and laborers in the Departments have been changed by lumping the sums appropriated for that purpose, instead of specifying the number and the salary. The experience of Congress has not been very favorable to appropriating lump sums for any Government service. The Committee on Appropriations believe it to be inexpedient, and they have restored the former plan. This comprises a very large number of the amendments.

The House also reduced the compensation of the laborers about the various bureaus and Departments. The committee were of opinion that the laborers were not overpaid, and that unless we proposed to commence at the other end of the line, and to reduce the salaries of the Secretaries and of members of Congress, it was hardly worth while to shave off a few cents from the scanty compensation of the laborer.

The laborers are about the only men whose salaries are directly reduced by the House bill. Our own salaries are untouched. The Secretaries, Comptrollers, Auditors, heads of bureaus, and other prominent officials escaped the savage economy of the bill. Even the clerks and messengers were reduced in grade rather than directly in salary. It was mainly when the bill reached the laborers that it reveled in the economical delight of clipping a few pennies from their compensation.

The committee think a reputation for economy cannot be won in quite so small a way, and hence they recommend that the pay of the laborers be not reduced.

There are very few amendments that are not included among some of the general propositions I have named. We have, as I have already shown, reduced the appropriations very considerably, more than $300,000 below last year. We have increased no salaries, excepting perhaps in one or two instances where it seemed to be extremely important. I remember but one. We have added very few clerks, and in no case except where the most extreme necessity was shown for it. I will say with reference to this increase of clerks that the House appropriated for thousand-dollar clerks in the Surgeon-General's Office and for an unlimited detail from the Army. On consultation with the Surgeon-General your committee became thoroughly convinced that this class of service is not of any use in that office, that the kind of clerks necessary for the examination of claims that are presented under the pension laws cannot be procured for such pay, and the committee have recommended the addition of thirty-two clerks in the Pension Office. This conforms to the action of both Houses on the deficiency bill at the present session, when that additional number was provided for the balance of this fiscal year.

You will remember, Mr. President, that the Senate instructed the Committee on Appropriations to investigate the question and to report what additional force would be necessary to facilitate as much as possible the payment of pensions. The result of that investigation was that the addition of thirty-two clerks was made to the force of the Surgeon-General, to be classified as suggested by him. Acting upon what we believed to be the judgment of both Houses as expressed in that bill, the committee recommend the addition of thirty-two for the ensuing year, to be classified as they were in the deficiency bill.

I believe I have stated all the important amendments in the bill covered by these general principles, and I ask that the reading may proceed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. WINDOM. I ask permission of the Senate, before the Senator from West Virginia proceeds, to have printed in the RECORD a statement of the differences between the various items of appropriation in this bill and the bill for 1878, so that it may be readily referred to in conference or otherwise hereafter.

The statement is as follows:

Legislative bill.

Object.	Appropriated for 1878.	Estimated for 1879.	Recommended by Senate committee.	Comparison of bill as recommended by Senate committee with act for 1878.
Senate	$739,081 80	$721,049 50	$711,809 50	$27,272.30 less than act for 1878. Occasioned by short session.
Congressional Directory	1,200 00	1,200 00	1,200 00
House of Representatives	2,000,930 00	1,971,066 66	1,984,424 00	$16,506 less than act for 1878. Occasioned by short session.

Court of Claims	33,340 00	34,940 00	32,840 00	$500 reduction in contingent expenses.
Southern claims commission	.....	.....	51,200 00	This is a new item, having been heretofore a permanent appropriation.
Total	15,537,581 30	16,362,617 91	15,564,942 00

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have listened with attention to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and agree in the main with all that he has said. The Committee on Appropriations probably gave this bill as much attention as has been given to any bill that has been reported to the Senate for some time. It will be noticed that there are a great many amendments, probably a thousand, in the bill, when one or two principles that have been stated by the chairman cover the whole ground. For instance, the House has changed the compensation of nearly all the employés of the Senate, reducing it in almost all cases. The question whether or not the House has control over the Senate employés and ought to arrange their salaries being settled, that settles the question of salaries between the Senate and the House.

The Senate has since I have been here insisted and the House has conceded (and it is the reverse when the House has asked anything for its employés) that each House ought to regulate its own employés both as to number and compensation. The Committee on Appropriations in this case has followed the example that has been set previously, and has in this bill put the salaries just as they were the last session and previous sessions, with very slight, if any, exceptions. The committee also made some changes in the House employés so as to give the House control over the subject of regulating the salaries of their own employés, believing that it was their place, and not ours, to provide how the compensation for the House employés should be.

Now, when we come to employés in the different Departments, it will be found that there are a great many changes, but one principle governs all, and that is, shall the salaries remain as they are now fixed by law and were fixed in 1853 and 1856 by the acts of those years both as to grades and as to compensation? The Appropriations Committee of the Senate has reinstated all the salaries and the employés as to number that were changed by the House, believing that the law as it now stands and as it has remained since 1853 and 1856 should stand. There may be changes which are necessary; but, if so, they ought to be made by investigation on the part of a committee appointed for that purpose, which would reduce all the salaries and arrange them in different form, and it ought not to be done on an appropriation bill.

There are some items in this bill that some portion of the committee disagreed upon, but they were generally compromised, and as a whole the bill is reported unanimously from the committee. There is generally no dissent; but there are items which standing on their own merits probably some of the committee would disagree to in the action of the majority of the committee. It will be found in many cases that there is a slight increase in clerical force. In every case I believe there were a large number asked for by the Departments that the committee declined giving. In some cases where ten were asked, only one would be given, and in that way these matters were compromised in the committee, or rather questions were taken in committee and amounts agreed upon.

The chairman has very well stated the general principles of the bill, and as there is nothing that I wish to say that I now think of I hope the bill as it comes from the committee, with the exceptions I have alluded to, will meet the concurrence of the Senate. I believe it is the best and the nearest to the right we can get.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none; and the bill will be considered under the five-minute rule. The Secretary will now read the bill; and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in their order in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, section 1, line 15, to increase the total appropriation "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate" from $140,640 to $178,030.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, to increase the item "for compensation of the Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer," from $4,500 to $4,896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 20, to increase the item "for hire of horses and wagons for the Secretary's office" from $600 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, to strike out "and minute and journal clerk," and insert "financial clerk and enrolling clerk at;" and after "hundred," in line 25, to insert "and ninety-two;" so as to read:

Chief Clerk, $3,000; and the additional sum of $1,000 while the said office is held by the present incumbent and no longer; principal clerk, principal executive clerk, financial clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,592 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "each," in line 26, to strike out "financial clerk and three clerks, at $2,250 each; librarian and," and insert "minute and journal clerk, librarian, and six clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,220 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 32, to increase the item "five clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate" from "$2,000 each" to "$2,100 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "each," in line 32, to strike out "one clerk at $1,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 34, to increase the item "for keeper of the stationery" from $1,600 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 37, to increase the item "assistant keeper of stationery" from $1,400 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 38, to increase the item "one messenger" from $1,200 to $1,296.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 39, to increase the item "four laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate" from "$600 each" to "$720 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 41, to increase the item "one special policeman" from $1,200 to $1,296.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 43, to increase the item "for secretary to the Vice-President" from $1,800 to $2,102.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 48, to increase the item "for clerk of printing records" from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 52, after the word "Commerce" to strike out "and;" after "Judiciary" to insert "clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and clerk to the Committee on Pensions;" and after "thousand," in line 54, to insert "two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For clerk to the Committee on Finance, clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and clerk to the Committee on Pensions, at $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

For twenty-eight pages, while actually employed, (including one riding page and one telegraph-page,) at $2.50 per day each, and for hire of horses, ($500,) $8,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "public printing," in line 310, to strike out "for chief clerk (whose appointment is hereby authorized,) $2,000; two," and insert "four," and in line 312 to strike out "one clerk of class three;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Public Printer, $3,600; four clerks of class 4; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; in all, $13,400.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment which strikes out the provision establishing a chief clerk in the Public Printing Office. There is a clerk there who acts as chief clerk, but he is left only as a fourth-class clerk. He is the second officer in command of the establishment which disburses a million and a half of dollars and employs fourteen hundred people, and in the absence of the Public Printer he has charge of it. I think the salary ought to be $2,500. This House provision only raises it to $2,000. I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment striking out that provision.

Mr. WINDOM. I believe, with the assent of the Committee on Appropriations, on the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Printing I will not insist on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, it will be necessary to amend in line 311 by striking out "four" and inserting "three," so as to read "three clerks of class 4."

Mr. WINDOM. That is agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. It now reads:

For chief clerk, (whose appointment is hereby authorized,) $2,000; three clerks of class 4, one clerk of class 3, and one clerk of class 2.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask the Senator how much that changes the gross amount of the appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. It increases the gross amount $200.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Only?

Mr. ANTHONY. Only.

Mr. WINDOM. The "one clerk of class 3" should be stricken out.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it reduces a clerk of class 4 to class 3.

Mr. WINDOM. We ought not to keep in now the words "one clerk of class 3." That adds another clerk.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, there are now four clerks of class 4, and one of them is made chief clerk by this clause.

Mr. WINDOM. Then there should be but three.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then there are but three, and "one clerk of class three" remains.

Mr. WINDOM. The chief clerk now is included among the four clerks of class 4, and if we make a chief clerk and then strike down the number of clerks of class 4 to three, we have the same number of clerks that is now provided for in the bill. If we reinstate the "one clerk of class 3," we add one sixteen-hundred-dollar clerk to the bill, which the Senator from Rhode Island does not intend to do.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not read the bill so. The House raised one clerk of class 4 to chief clerk and degraded one clerk of class 4 to class 3.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator wishes to make the number of fourth-class clerks only two, and then reinstate the clerk of class 3 and give a chief clerk, he will have the same number we proposed to give before; but if he leaves the three clerks of class 4 and then gives a clerk of class 3, that makes four clerks and the chief clerk makes five, whereas the design is to give but four clerks in these grades.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then let that be stricken out.

Mr. WINDOM. Has there been an amendment in line 313 changing the "four" to "six," Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It should read $13,600, instead of $13,400, as the total for this item.

Mr. WINDOM. If that has not been done, I move to make the word "four" in line 313 "six." That makes the total amount to be appropriated $13,600, to correspond with the other amendments just made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 346, to increase the appropriation for "improving" the Botanic Garden, "procuring manure, tools, fuel, and repairs, and purchasing trees and shrubs," from $4,000 to $5,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate providing for the adjournment of the two Houses of Congress on Monday, June 10, 1878, at twelve o'clock noon, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3064) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 363) granting a pension to James Newcomb;

A bill (S. No. 874) granting a pension to Alfred Richardson, late of Company A, Twelfth Indiana Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 430) for the relief of John Clinton, postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1918) for the relief of Milton B. Cushing, paymaster, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. No. 2176) granting an increase of pension to Mattie McTaggart, widow of the late First Lieutenant McTaggart, Seventeenth United States Infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 2132) to pay for clerical services and extraordinary expenses under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, in the Pawnee land district, in Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The Senate resumes the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to suggest to the Senator who has charge of this bill the propriety of taking up now and acting upon the resolution which has just come from the House fixing the time of adjournment.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not——

Mr. HAMLIN. Listen to me one moment. I suggest this because I believe that every hour is worth something to us beyond the time when we shall fix it. I mean, to be more explicit, that the earlier we determine that question we shall the sooner feel and see the necessity of working up to it, and we had better do it now than to postpone it until to-morrow. We had better do it to-morrow than the next day, and the earlier the time is agreed upon the better. That is my idea.

Mr. WINDOM. I think we should interrupt the business a great deal more by seeking to pass upon the resolution now than if we were to go on and finish this appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the amendment of the House to the resolution will meet the approbation of the Senate, without objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I prefer to make a motion to refer the resolution rather than to pass upon it now, and I would wish to discuss it a little.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator is going to make that motion I shall not now interpose. I am going to vote for the resolution just as it is.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. KIRKWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF A MEMORIAL.

On motion of Mr. WHYTE, it was Ordered, That the Baltimore merchants' memorial, introduced in the Senate on the 24th instant, be taken from the table and printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2083, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" in line 2086, after the word "dollars" to insert "three clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200;" in line 2091, after the word "force," to strike out "including two clerks of class 2, who shall be practical printers, forty-two thousand five hundred" and insert "fourteen thousand six hundred;" and after the word "all," in line 2094, to strike out "sixty-six thousand nine" and insert "sixty-five thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $3,000; chief clerk, $1,900; entomologist, $1,900; chemist, $1,900; assistant chemist, $1,400; superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $1,900; statistician, $1,900; disbursing clerk, $1,600; superintendent of seed-room, $1,600; librarian, $1,400; botanist, $1,800; microscopist, $1,800; engineer, $1,200; three clerks of class 4; four clerks of class 3; five clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; and for clerks, copyists, laborers, watchmen, carpenters, attendants in museum, and other necessary force, $14,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $65,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 2113, to strike out "and said seed, except flower seed, shall be distributed to each congressional district in the several States and Territories in proportion to the agricultural population residing in the same: Provided, That no more than $7,000 of this amount shall be used in the putting up and distribution of said seeds and plants: And provided further" and insert "Provided;" so as to make the clause read:

For purchase and propagation and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, trees shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expense of putting up the same, $75,000: Provided, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2133, to insert:

For investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture; for experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them; for chemicals, traveling expenses, and other expenses in the practical work of the entomological division, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, among the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, in line 2156, after the word "items," to insert "and for actual traveling expenses while on the business of the Department;" so as to make the clause read:

For stationery, freight and express charges, fuel, lights, subsistence, and care of horses, and repair of harness and wagon, paper, twine, and gum for folding-room, and for incidental and miscellaneous items, namely, for advertising, telegraphing, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, and care of stationery, purchasing supplies, and for other necessary items, and for actual traveling expenses while on the business of the Department, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph, from lines 2183 to 2192:

For salaries of the fifty-one district judges of the United States, $190,000. And section 613 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows: "All the circuit courts of the United States shall have the appointment of their own clerks, the circuit and district judges concurring; and in case of a disagreement between the judges, the appointment shall be made by the associate justice of the Supreme Court allotted to such circuit, except in cases otherwise specially provided for by law."

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask some member of the committee in regard to lines 2187, 2188, and 2189, the clause for the appointment of clerks to the circuit courts, which the Secretary has just read. What is the reason for that manner of appointing the clerks of the circuit courts; that is, with the concurrence of the circuit and district judges?

Mr. WINDOM. The committee knew of no objection to the clause, but if the Senator objects I will agree to strike it out.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it stricken out, and the committee can reconsider it in conference.

Mr. WHYTE. We cannot hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. The present law is that the judges of the circuit courts appoint their own clerks. This provision changes the law by inserting a provision that all the circuit courts of the United States shall have the appointment of their own clerks, the circuit and district judges concurring, requiring, therefore, the assent of all the district judges in the appointment of the clerks of the circuit courts, and in case of a disagreement between the judges the appointment is to be made by the associate justice of the Supreme Court assigned to the circuit. My suggestion was that if the Senate would strike it out the matter might be reconsidered by the committee of conference if they found reason for it. I do not want to detain the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will simply state that, as I understand it, is falling back upon the old law before the creation of circuit courts; it was the old law from the beginning of this century. I am told the reason of this provision was because a circuit judge recently appointed, Mr. Baxter, has been engaged in the business of appointing new clerks, turning out all the old clerks, which has not been common with the circuit courts we know, and he has appointed some of his own relations to that office.

Mr. HOAR. That difficulty cannot be cured now; that is accomplished.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That I understand is the reason.

Mr. WINDOM. The committee would be very glad to have the advice of either Senator on that subject. The committee have no special desire to retain the provision.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who is not now here, introduced a bill upon the subject embodying some such provision as that, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WITHERS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether it would not be better to let us get through with the bill as reported by the committee with amendments, and then Senators can suggest other amendments.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am not making any point about it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I made a suggestion which I understand the members of the Committee on Appropriations concur in, and if the Senate will amend the bill by striking out those lines the matter can go into conference and be reconsidered, and if the clause is adhered to I shall make no further opposition.

Mr. WINDOM. I speak only for myself; I have no right to speak for the committee. I have no objection to striking out the lines which the Senator from Massachusetts indicates. They provide general legislation, and I have no personal objection to striking it out.

Mr. WITHERS. I think we had better go on and finish the bill first, according to the custom, and then go back and consider the proposition.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that course.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2203, to increase the appropriation for salaries of the three judges of the southern claims commission from $4,000 each to $5,000 each, and to add after the word "dollars," in line 2204 the words:

One clerk, at $2,500; one stenographer, at $2,500; and one messenger, at $1,200; in all, $21,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line 2212 to line 2223, inclusive, as follows:

In the following words, namely: "Salaries and expenses southern claims commission: to pay the salaries and actual expenses of office rent, furniture, fuel, stationery, and printing of the southern claims commission," and so much of the fifth section of the act of March 3, 1875, as fixes the salaries of said commissioners at $5,000 per annum, is hereby repealed; and the salaries of said commissioners from and after the 1st day of July, 1878, shall be $4,000 per annum, to be paid as now provided by law.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

As makes the appropriation for "salaries and expenses of southern claims commission" permanent annual appropriations is hereby repealed.

So as to make the clause read:

For actual expenses of office rent, furniture, fuel, stationery, and printing of the southern claims commission, $30,000. And so much of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as makes the appropriation for "salaries and expenses of southern claims commission" permanent annual appropriation is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2228, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" in line 2232, after the word "dollars," to insert "naval solicitor, $3,500;" in line 2237, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" in line 2241, after the word "dollars," to insert "one messenger;" in line 2242, after the word "messenger," to strike out "one page, at $480; for laborers, $1,200," and insert "two laborers and two watchmen;" in line 2245, after the word "all," to strike out "seventy-one thousand five hundred" and insert "seventy-seven thousand one hundred and forty;" and in line 2247, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words:

And so much of section 349 of the Revised Statutes as provides for the appointment and payment of a salary to a "naval solicitor" is hereby repealed, and the office is abolished.

So as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor-general, $7,000; three Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; one assistant attorney-general of the Post-Office Department, $4,000; solicitor of internal revenue, $4,500; naval solicitor, $3,500; examiner of claims, $3,500; law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk, $2,200; stenographic clerk, $1,800; one law clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; additional for disbursing clerk, $200; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; five copyists; one telegraph operator, at $1,000; one messenger; one assistant messenger; two laborers; and two watchmen; in all, $77,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2268, after the word "dollars," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 2269, after the word "four," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 2270, after the word "one," to strike out "assistant;" and in line 2271, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-four thousand six hundred and twenty" and insert "twenty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury:

For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500; assistant solicitor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; two clerks of class 1; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $28,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations are completed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. On page 54, line 1301, the bill provides: "For salaries of governor, chief-justice, and two associate judges of the Territory of New Mexico, at $2,600 each." I move to amend by increasing the salaries of the chief-justice and two associate justices to $3,000 each. It seems to me that this is very vicious legislation. Every judge, when he is appointed, is entitled to the salary that is fixed for him at the time of his appointment. On page 332 of the Revised Statutes, section 1879 reads in these words:

The annual salary of the chief-justice and associate justices of all the Territories now organized shall be $3,000 each.

In my judgment these judges ultimately can recover from the United States the difference between $2,600 and $3,000. They certainly are entitled to the salary that is created by law. I think it is very vicious legislation to repeal a statute of the United States in relation to territorial judges in this way. Three thousand dollars is very small compensation for any gentleman worthy to fill the office of a territorial judge. I understand the late chief-justice of New Mexico, who is from the State of my honorable friend from Missouri, resigned his office there because the salary was too low. When he was appointed he supposed he was going to get $3,000. This legislation is similar to what occurred last year, and he got $2,600. The judge goes there with the understanding that he is to get the salary that is given to him by law. If I had the power I would increase the salaries of all of these territorial judges, for I do not believe any gentleman who is competent to hold the office should be restricted to a salary of $3,000. They are obliged to give their entire services to the office, and everybody is interested in having an able judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I was mistaken in saying that the last appropriation was $2,600.

Mr. BECK. The Senator has the act of August, 1876.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Kentucky hands me the statutes, and for the salary of governors in the Territories the appropriation is $3,000 each and for chief-justice and two associate justices in Colorado the same, Dakota the same, Montana and New Mexico the same, for all these Territories the same. We now propose to reduce their salaries.

Mr. WHYTE. Was that the appropriation last year?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I read from the laws of the Forty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. WINDOM. The salaries were reduced in 1876, I think.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The act is approved August 15, 1876.

Mr. WHYTE. There is a later one.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know what was done in 1877.

Mr. WINDOM. The reduction was made in 1876, if I remember.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do hope that the Senate will not deal with judges as it does with clerks in the different Departments. I think we should reduce salaries whenever we think it is proper, but the judges certainly of all these territorial courts ought to be paid the salaries that are given to them by law, and it is very poor economy to do otherwise.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish the Senator from Illinois would couple with his amendment a proviso that if any judge of the Territories shall be absent, with or without leave, from his judicial district for sixty days, he shall not receive compensation for that time. I know of one judge, a judge from the Territory of Wyoming, who has been in this town for three or four months, and he has rendered no judicial service whatever. I think it would be very important to enact such a provision.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The law as it stands now is that if they are absent with leave they receive pay. I do not think we ought to interfere with it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then, with a limitation of sixty days he may be detained under peculiar circumstances.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Nebraska can move his amendment after I get the matter as to the salaries settled. I hope that my amendment will carry.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment be reported. I do not understand what it is.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The salary of the governor was $3,000. The salary of the chief-justice and the associate justices was $3,000 each. I only move to amend so far as the three judges are concerned, increasing it to $3,000 each.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has not the salary of the governor been reduced?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not know about that. I did not look, because I was not interested in that.

Mr. WINDOM. These salaries were all changed in 1876, the salaries of the governors and of the judges of the Territories. I do not mean to say that the law was changed, but the long contest will be remembered very well in which the Senate adhered mainly to the law as it then existed; but there were certain exceptions made. In a few cases appropriations were made for less than the salaries fixed by law. These territorial judges I think were included in that class of cases. The Senate committee in framing this bill endeavored to reinstate the salaries as they are during the current year, and they have not attempted to place any above that grade. We have undertaken to adhere to the limit as to salaries that was made in 1876, and again agreed to in 1877, without any attempt to change the general question of compensation to officers. I think that it is the better way to adhere to it still. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that where the law fixes a salary it ought to be appropriated; but we have agreed on both sides to what I think is a slightly vicious style of legislation, leaving the salaries unchanged by law but providing at the beginning of the bill as we do in this case that all amounts herein appropriated shall be "in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879."

The design is to appropriate so much money in full for the salary for that year. I think there ought to be a general revision of salaries by the committees who are authorized to make such investigations and who are competent to make such a revision. It has not been done. There has been a sort of general agreement during the last two years that the salaries should remain at a certain fixed sum, and the Committee on Appropriations have thought it best not to disturb it. I am inclined to think now that if my honorable friend from Illinois shall succeed in raising the salaries of these judges he will find a great many others who will make a similar claim, that the law provides a certain sum and that we ought to put the appropriation for the salary up to that. For one I would not have the slightest objection to doing it, though I am perfectly satisfied that we should have a very long and troublesome contest in conference to secure it. I believe that when the law provides a fixed salary it ought to be appropriated until the law is changed, but it has not been done for the last two years and to do so now by this bill would require a pretty general revision. There are a great many of that kind of salaries. I think we had better not change it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the chairman of the committee is right in his position. There are probably five hundred salaries in this bill just in the situation that is referred to of these judges. If you undertake to change one, it is probable you will have to go through most of them, as there is no good reason why one should be changed and not the other. I hope the Senate will adhere to the bill as it was reported by the committee. As the chairman has stated, the Senate committee endeavored to leave all the salaries just as they are for the current year, making no changes. The House made perhaps a thousand changes in this bill, I do not remember the number, but it is very large. Perhaps I am not extravagant when I say a thousand salaries of individuals have been changed by the House. The Senate endeavored to put them back where they are for the current year; and any change from that standard of course opens up the whole question of two years ago when there was a general change made in the long conference as will be recollected, and we staid here until the 15th of August, trying to adjust these salaries. The committee endeavored to put them back to where that settlement fixed them in 1876, and any interference with that arrangement will make more serious disturbances.

Mr. WITHERS. That constitutes the whole difficulty with regard to the matter. In 1876, all who were here will remember that we had a very protracted struggle with the House. They insisted on a great reduction of salaries and we insisted that they should remain where the law fixed them. The salaries paid last year were the result of that compromise between the Senate and the House. If we attempt to violate the conditions of that compromise now, we shall find ourselves in a similar struggle at the present session.

Mr. BECK. I suppose I shall vote with the Committee on Appropriations, but the Revised Statutes, section 1879, page 332, make this provision:

> The annual salary of the chief-justice and associate justices of all the Territories now organized shall be $3,000 each.

After the very protracted struggle in the summer of 1876, as will be seen by volume 19 of the Statutes at Large, page 158, the House and the Senate agreed at the close of that struggle (August 15) that the chief-justice and associate justices of Arizona should receive $3,000 each; of Colorado, $3,000 each; of Dakota and Idaho, $3,000 each; and it was agreed to for all the Territories. I supposed that we were agreeing to stand by the salaries wherever they were fixed in appropriation bills as they now exist, but wherever there was a statute of the United States that remains unrepealed and the salary is fixed in that statute, I thought that the Senate committee endeavored to come under that statute and to pay whatever the statute required should be paid. In other words, we did not intend to repeal the Revised Statutes by cutting down the salaries in this way. It seems as though last year, as in 1876, both Houses agreed at the end of that struggle to stand by the provisions of the Revised Statutes in regard to salaries.

It looks to me as if the judges of the Territories occupy a different position from the great mass of others who are simply cut down and their salaries fixed by the appropriation bills, and I cannot help agreeing in a great deal of what the Senator from Illinois has said on account of the fact that these men, if they go on and do the work, would have a claim against the Government, just as it was said the Army of the United States could go on when no appropriation was made last year and do their duty and come in and get their pay because their salaries were fixed by law. I am not sure that it is not safer to give them what the law fixes, though I think I shall stand by the committee; but it never occurred to me until now that there was a distinction between this case and the other cases.

Mr. WINDOM. I find on further examination, and it is also suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, that I was mistaken in the statement that this reduction was agreed to in 1876. It was in 1877. The general arrangement or compromise as to salaries was made in 1876, but the salaries of the judges were not touched until last year.

I fully agree with the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Illinois as to the propriety of appropriating what the statute prescribes as the salary; but in many cases that has not been done for the last two years, and it has been, as my friend from West Virginia has said, the result of a sort of understanding between the two Houses, a compromise, last year that they should remain as they were the year before. This bill has undertaken to reduce hundreds if not thousands of them and changed them from what we fixed last year. The Committee on Appropriations, deeming the true ground to be to let them rest where we had agreed upon them for the last two years, intended to reinstate this bill upon the basis of that settlement, and we have sought simply to restore the salaries to where they are during the current year.

The law, I know, in this case, as in a score of other cases, fixes a different salary from that which is appropriated in the bill; and if it be the judgment of the Senate that we shall stand upon the law, reinstate these salaries where the statute now places them, and the Senate are disposed to adhere to that position, they will find no one more ready to stand by them from now until December in insisting that the law shall be complied with than myself. But I hope the Senate will not restore one or two and make an exception without restoring all the others to what the law now fixes. I think it is a very unsafe thing to do, and it will lead us into trouble to attempt to restore them.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think there is a difference between the salary of judges and that of any other class of men whose salaries are reduced. I do not believe they can be reduced. I believe these judges are part of the judicial force of the United States; but they are not political officers. Gentlemen accept the position of governor of a Territory or secretary of a Territory for political reasons. Judges do not. They devote their lives simply to the decision of cases that may come before them. They ought to be learned men, and their salaries should not be reduced during their continuance in office. That could not be done, of course, in regard to judges of courts of the United States, strictly speaking. Without expressing any opinion on the subject whether these territorial courts are courts of the United States or not, yet they are analogous, and it is bad policy to attempt to do anything of the kind, and I think if it has only been done in 1877 we should now restore the former salary, so that these judges shall have what the law provides for them. Of course I merely select the judges for New Mexico because I had to select some. It will follow as to the judges of the other territories if this amendment is adopted. I feel rather more interest in this class of service than I do in that of the governors of Territories, and therefore I have not made any motion with reference to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 12.

Mr. WITHERS. There is evidently no quorum voting, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not care about the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. Then withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, I cannot withdraw it, because I promised to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for.

Mr. BLAINE. If Senators will vote there is evidently a quorum present.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I cannot withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us have another division.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let everybody get up.

Mr. BECK. Is it in order to move that the Senate do now adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. BECK. I think I shall make a motion that the Senate adjourn, but I will withdraw it if the chairman of the committee objects. If there is a large class of cases of this sort and we have departed from the Revised Statutes in order to get the bill through, although I agree with the Senator from Illinois, yet rather than open them all up I would vote against his proposition. If, however, there are very few of this class or if this is an exceptional class, I would vote with the Senator from Illinois, because I believe that the law provides that these men shall have $3,000 a year salary. It is only because I want further time to examine it that I suggest an adjournment. The committee can meet on Friday morning. There are a very large number of other amendments that I know are going to be offered, to which my attention has been called, and perhaps in a two hours' meeting of the committee they could be carefully considered. The business would be expedited very much by having two hours' consideration on Friday morning before the Senate meet again. I have seen a dozen amendments, and I suppose the chairman has seen two or three dozen amendments that are to be offered. We ought to have a chance to look at them. I believe we should gain time rather than lose by that course. However, if the chairman objects I shall not insist on the motion.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senate has voted to adjourn over to-morrow, and if we postpone this bill until Friday it will probably take all day. I think we had better go on an hour longer and see what we can do with this bill. The question as to the restoration of salary in these exceptional cases to where the law now places it is an old one to the members of the committee who were on the committee in 1876. I had supposed the Senator from Kentucky understood that there were exceptions to the general rule. I think the yeas and nays had better be taken or another division had on this question, and let us proceed with the bill an hour longer to-day.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. A division will do without the yeas and nays. Of course I do not want to do anything contrary to the wish of the Senate; but I cannot withdraw the amendment, as I promised to offer it. I am perfectly willing, if there is a division on the subject, to submit to the result. I do not care about the yeas and nays being taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that we have another division instead of the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By general consent the question will be taken by another division.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand, the salaries here are just as I suppose hundreds of others are. Now, if we undertake to change from what has been agreed upon and has been fixed, there are two hundred other cases probably that will have to be treated in the same way. I hope the Senate in this vote will take into consideration that this amendment is opening up a new field and will involve a revision of the whole list of salaries if it is adopted.

Mr. EATON. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will be voted down. There is no reason that can be given, none has been given, why these officers' salaries should be kept up to what they were in 1876 than any other men. The idea that because they are judges therefore they are not to be subject to the action of Congress is thoroughly defective. I hope the Senate will stand by the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I will say in reply to the Senator from Connecticut that there is some special reason why the feeling of the Senate is not to extend this provision beyond the judges. In most sections of the country where these men are now receiving by this bill $2,600 a year a common clerk of the court would get as much as that and a justice of the peace would be able to make as much in his office. It is a contemptible sum for a judge of a court to have. A lawyer of any decent practice in that country would make probably from $5,000 to $20,000, and to ask a judge to sit on the bench and hear cases involving in some instances a half million or a million dollars for the mere pittance of $2,600 is simply absurd.

Mr. KERNAN. I am in favor of paying judges fair salaries, but I am embarrassed now because if we open this subject there will be others. It is proposed to raise the salary of the judges of the Territory of New Mexico from $2,600 to $3,000. I have the statute before me and I will call attention to it. The judge of the district court for the southern district of New York, who sits every working day of the year in court, gets but $4,000. The same is true of a large number of others. I think I would rather live in New Mexico to make money at $2,600 than in New York at $4,000. I did ask leave to introduce an amendment to raise the salary of the district judge at New York because it is a very exceptional case, but I was told that there was a bill pending in the Judiciary Committee to revise and relegislate as to all the district judges and fix their salaries justly, and therefore I have refrained from seeking to open the question on this bill. I think we had better not do it as to New Mexico.

Mr. WITHERS. There is no one who has resisted more strenuously than I have any proposition to reduce salaries below the amount fixed by law; but, sir, in this case it became necessary in order to secure the passage of the appropriation bills in 1876 and 1877; and while I feel perfectly sure that the amount proposed to be given as a salary to these judges is not at all too great for the services they render and the professional qualifications of the men who ought to be selected for these positions, I foresee an insuperable difficulty in adjusting the details of this bill in conference with the House committee if we attempt to go beyond the salaries which have been paid for the past year.

It is true that there is no reason upon earth that can be alleged why the exception should be made as to the judges in this case that will not apply with equal force to every other case where the Revised Statutes provide a different salary from that reported by this committee; and it will be an act of necessity, an act of strict justice, that the committee shall go over the whole bill and revise it in every particular, involving additional delays, when we all know that an adjournment is pressing upon us. But, sir, as to the difficulties which arise, I do not perceive that there is any difficulty whatever in securing the services of judges at the rate of salary fixed by this bill. We have no evidence that there is any difficulty whatever in that line. I will state that the chief-justice of the State of North Carolina only receives $2,500 per annum; the judges of the court of appeals, the highest court of my own State, have never received over $3,000; and I think that the judges of these Territories can get along very comfortably upon the salary fixed by the bill.

Mr. MATTHEWS. Mr. President, I understand this to be a proposition to change the salaries of these officers. I understand that the law fixes their salary at a certain amount, and we decline to appropriate the money necessary to pay the salary which we have promised. Is that right? I have heard a good deal on the floor of the Senate during this session about the performance of contracts, about the sanctity of public obligations, about the necessity of preserving the faith of the Government toward its creditor. Are not these officers with whom we have made this contract entitled to consideration? If the proposition is to change their salary, let it come in that shape, let us understand it; but if it comes in the shape of a proposition refusing to appropriate the money necessary to pay the salary which has been promised by law, and which still stands as the law, giving them a right of action against the Government, I do not see why there should be any hesitation. Even if it involves on the part of the Committee on Appropriations the necessity of revising the entire bill, let it be revised. I do not think it is acting in good faith to refuse to appropriate money which by law is due and which is necessary according to the stipulations of that law for the support comfortably of these gentlemen to whom we have promised it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, on which there will be another division of the Senate.

The question being put, the ayes were 20.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I see the yeas and nays have got to come. I ask for the yeas and nays. We may as well settle the principle whether we shall have to go through the whole bill or not. It will involve a general change.

Mr. WITHERS. I am willing to accept the result of the yeas and nays as the settlement of the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. I understand the amendment is simply to make the appropriation conform to the statute.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. I do not see how anybody can object to that.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The salary is fixed on page 58 of the Revised Statutes. The section fixing the salary of the territorial judges on page 58 is in these words:

> The annual salary of the chief-justice and associate justices of all the Territories now organized shall be $3,000 each.

And as was just said by the Senator from Ohio, the question is whether we will vote them their salaries or not.

Mr. HILL. How can the Senate object to giving the appropriation the law fixes?

Mr. MATTHEWS. This appropriation bill only gives them $2,600. The law gives them $3,000.

Mr. HOWE. I want to make one suggestion, and that is that this inconsistency can be reconciled in either of two ways: either by making the statute conform to the appropriation or making the appropriation conform to the statute. Undoubtedly the appropriation should conform to the statute; but, if reconciliation is insisted upon at this time, I beg leave to suggest that it may possibly result in making the statute conform to the appropriation, whereas if the appropriation be allowed to stand and the subject go over to another session, the probability is that the appropriation can then be brought up to the statute. Upon that theory I shall vote, for once in my life, against appropriating the sum which the statute requires for a salary.

Mr. WINDOM. I only want to say, in a single word, as the yeas and nays are to be called, that I hope the Senate will continue to vote hereafter upon reports of conferees as they vote to-day, if they shall vote to increase this salary, as I think they will have ample opportunity.

Mr. WALLACE. I beg to say that my vote on this question will be controlled by the fact that a judicial officer is entirely different from an officer of another character, and I do not believe that the voting of the salary fixed in the Revised Statutes for judicial officers should control us in voting against a salary fixed in the proposed bill for other officers. A judicial officer is, from the very position, from the recognized custom, excluded from engaging in other business, while in every other vocation men are permitted to engage in other business. Whenever we permit them to occupy the same ground with other officials, then perhaps the same rule would apply. I would stand by the Committee on Appropriations upon the subject of other officers where they have reduced the salary; but in regard to judicial officers where they cannot engage in other business, where the custom and practice—and that which is a good custom and practice and ought to be sustained—are to keep them from other business, I believe in giving them simply that which the law provides they shall have. I will stand by the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BECK. A few moments ago I suggested that the motion made by the Senator from Illinois, in my judgment, was right; but after hearing what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said as to the impossibility without a revision of the whole bill of doing like justice to all others, and in view of the impossibility of agreeing in conference about it, I believe I shall vote with the committee, although I am thoroughly convinced that the motion of the Senator from Illinois is right in point of principle. I say this in explanation of my vote after what I have said before.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, it strikes me from the reading of this whole bill that there is something more in this clause than a simple appropriation of money; that this bill itself and the bill of twelve months ago not only made an appropriation but changed the Revised Statutes, not only made an appropriation of money in terms, but repealed the salary fixed by the Revised Statutes, or, if the bill of twelve months ago did not, this does. Look at it:

> Territory of New Mexico:
> For salaries of governor, chief-justice, and two associate judges, at $2,600 each.

That not only makes an appropriation, but it fixes the salary; and if there were any doubt concerning that, the last section in the bill, it seems to me, makes it certain:

> That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

That does attempt to fix the salary of the chief-justice and of two associate justices in New Mexico at $2,600 each. It says that is their salary and fixes it; and the last section says that if there is any law inconsistent with this it is hereby repealed, and if there is anything in conflict with it it is hereby repealed. So, then, there is something more in this than a simple appropriation of money. If the law twelve months ago did not, as I think it did, for it was in hæc verba with this bill, repeal the Revised Statutes, this does. I do not like this character of legislation, it is true; but it did do it; it made the law on this subject; and from that time on the salaries of these judges were changed.

As far as I am concerned, I have no fears that these judges could by a suit against the General Government obtain any more than the sum fixed in the bill of last year and this bill of this year, unless for salary accruing prior to the bill of last year. This certainly does change the salary, seeks to do it, does do it, and then repeals everything inconsistent with it; and if the Revised Statutes referred to by the Senator from Illinois are in conflict with this they are repealed. Any provision of the Revised Statutes inconsistent with this is repealed. There is more in this than simply an appropriation of money, or more in it, to use the language of other Senators, than a mere neglect to appropriate; it is a repeal of any law in conflict with it and fixes the salaries of these judges.

Mr. BECK. I rose when the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] was speaking to prevent him falling into the error into which he has just fallen. As he did not seem to desire that I should interrupt him, I did not. I now rise to say that the statute of last year, which he asserts did repeal the Revised Statutes, has no repealing clause in it at all.

Mr. HEREFORD. But this has.

Mr. BECK. The bill we are now proposing to pass has, but the one to which he refers did not contain a repealing clause, but simply failed to make the appropriation fixed by law; did not attempt to repeal that law; and certainly the Revised Statutes stand just as though the act of March 3, 1877, had not been passed. All it says is that the sums appropriated by it shall be "in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, for the objects herein expressed," without any repealing clause. In the bill before the Senate we are proposing to change the Revised Statutes, but the question is, ought we to do it in this way? They have not been repealed by any prior act.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is more in it than that. The Senator from Illinois said that if we did not make this appropriation in full he did not know but that they could maintain a suit against the General Government. I say they cannot maintain a suit against the General Government unless it be for something due under the past act; but under this they cannot, because here is a repealing clause, here is a clause in this bill repealing all laws in conflict with it. Thus the argument that I stated in the first place I yet maintain to be good, that any law in conflict with this is hereby repealed. The first section that I read does attempt to fix the salary. Whether it is too much or too small is a different proposition. As to the propriety of such legislation upon an appropriation bill I have nothing to say. But there is no danger of any suit being maintained against the General Government with success, for this does repeal the law giving them any other salary than that fixed by this bill. So the argument I stated originally I yet maintain as good, and I say that there is more in this than simply making an appropriation or failing to make an appropriation. There is a repeal of the Revised Statutes so far as the salaries of these judges are concerned, and the salaries that are given these judges are as much as the salaries that are given many of the judges in the States. They are as large as the salaries given to judges in my own State, as large as the salaries given the judges in the State of Virginia; I think more than the salaries paid to the judges in several of the New England States.

Mr. BECK. Now, will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEREFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he has referred to section 1, article 3, of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that—

> The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services, a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Does that apply to these judges? I am advised that it does not apply to territorial judges.

Mr. HEREFORD. I thought the Senator from Kentucky would yield the point that that does not apply to territorial judges. What I am talking about was these territorial judges. That does not apply to territorial judges, but to a very different class of judges. That provision applies to United States judges. It has no application to territorial judges whatever.

Mr. DORSEY. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent, I desire to move an adjournment.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will not adjourn. I wish to present the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic bill whenever the Senate decide that they will go no further with this bill; but I think we might continue longer in session.

Mr. DORSEY. I think it is hardly worth while to continue this bill longer to-night. There is a misunderstanding on this point which ought to be considered further, but I will yield for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Minnesota to present the conference report.

Mr. BLAINE. Before that I ask that the Army bill from the House be referred.

Mr. DORSEY. I yield for that.

Mr. BLAINE. I want the Army bill printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate, House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. No. 4200) relating to the national road in the State of Maryland and to give consent of the United States to a certain act of the General Assembly of Maryland in relation to said road;

A bill (H. R. No. 4824) to amend section 3843 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to settlements of postmasters;

A bill (H. R. No. 5052) to amend section 3835 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. No. 4866) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. On the question of reference I take occasion to say that it seems to me the Senate had better remain to-day half an hour longer on the legislative appropriation bill. Many Senators desire to adopt the resolution as amended by the House making the adjournment on the 17th of June. The Senate has already agreed to adjourn over to-morrow, which makes a day lost for business. Now, it seems to me that in view of the early adjournment desired all around, we had better sit half an hour later to-night and finish the legislative bill, which is nearly through.

Several SENATORS. All right.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly, if there is any disposition to adopt that resolution, we ought to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. SARGENT. There is a very strong disposition to adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. DORSEY. I do not.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall move to refer that portion of the Army appropriation bill which relates to the reorganization of the Army to the Committee on Military Affairs. If it is in order I move now that that portion of the bill referring to the reorganization of the Army be referred to the Military Committee.

Mr. WINDOM. That is not in order now.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order that that is not in order. You cannot divide a bill for the purpose of reference.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I give notice that at the proper time I will make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from California.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 376) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4236) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, to report the same back with various and sundry amendments. I give notice that I shall call this bill up as soon as practicable.

Mr. MORRILL. How much is the amount appropriated?

Mr. SPENCER. It increases the appropriations of the House about $900,000.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4104) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.

Mr. DORSEY. At the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and other members of that committee, I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. SARGENT. I hope the five-minute rule will be lived up to hereafter on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays will be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Anthony,	Christiancy,	Hoar,	Teller,
Bayard,	Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Florida,	Wallace.
Booth,	Dennis,	Kirkwood,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Matthews,
Burnside,	Hill,	Paddock,

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Dorsey,	Kernan,	Randolph,
Barnum,	Eaton,	McCreery,	Rollins,
Beck,	Eustis,	McDonald,	Sargent,
Butler,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Maxey,	Windom,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Merrimon,	Withers.
Coke,	Howe,	Morgan,
Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Morrill,

ABSENT—29.

Allison,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Spencer,
Armstrong,	Garland,	Mitchell,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Grover,	Oglesby,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Harris,	Patterson,	Wadleigh,
Chaffee,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Whyte.
Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Conover,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Dawes,	Lamar,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend this bill, in line 324, by inserting "five" in place of "two," where it occurs near the end of the line. The effect of the amendment is to give the Librarian of Congress three additional assistants at $1,200 each. The necessity for it I can make apparent in a very few words, if any Senator wishes any evidence on the point.

Mr. WINDOM. Is it recommended by the Committee on the Library?

Mr. HOWE. The amendment comes from the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. WINDOM. And I understand it has the approval of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations. I make no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. By the authority of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and with the concurrence of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the following amendment, to be added at the end of line 334:

And $3,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary, for the purpose of purchasing the copyright and stereotype plates of a work entitled Reference Index to the Revised Statutes of the United States, published by Little, Brown & Co., of Boston, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; the legal evidence of such purchase, if made, together with said plates, to be deposited in the Department of State for use as required.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I will state what this amendment relates to. Mr. Lyman, an employé in the Treasury Department, has spent two years in preparing an index of the statutes of the United States down to and including the whole of the sixteenth volume, taking all the statutes in the order of their date and showing where each section of every statute in the Statutes at Large is revised in the Revised Statutes. It constitutes a work of sixty-eight pages only. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws have unanimously recommended the amendment which I have offered, and the Committee on Appropriations have been all individually consulted upon it to-day and they all agree also in the same amendment. I am informed by Mr. Boutwell, the commissioner of revision, who is himself strongly in favor of it, that it can be inserted in the edition of the Revised Statutes, now being prepared, without increasing the size of that volume beyond the size of the present edition of the Revised Statutes. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the chairman of the committee assent to it?

Mr. WINDOM. I understand that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws recommend this unanimously and that a majority, if not all, of the Committee on Appropriations have been consulted and agree to it. On that statement I make no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This is the first I have heard of it. There is no reason why I should know more of it than anybody else.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I will say that when I went this morning to consult the members of the Committee on Appropriations I did not find the Senator from West Virginia in his seat; that is the only reason why he was not consulted.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator that a majority of the Committee on Appropriations have consented to it?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Yes, sir; all that I consulted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan if this interferes with the index to the Revised Statutes, which will soon be published.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Not at all; they relate to entirely different things. This is a cross-index from the Statutes at Large to the Revised Statutes, showing where each section of every act of Congress heretofore passed is to be found in the Revised Statutes. It is entirely distinct from the index now under preparation by the commissioner of revision, which is an index of subjects. This is an index of statutes, as I have explained it, entirely.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand the Senator from Michigan to say that this amendment is recommended by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws unanimously.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Unanimously.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to say further that the gentleman who is preparing the general index has examined this carefully, and he has advised in favor of its being put into the volume with the index which he is preparing. It will aid very much in examining the statutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have the letter of Mr. Boutwell here strongly recommending this.

Mr. COCKRELL. To what date does this index come?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It comes down to the date of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Of the present edition?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Of the present edition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer this amendment, to be inserted after line 1573:

For additional compensation to the chief clerk of the Navy Department while performing duties as Assistant Secretary of the Navy by assignment of the Secretary, $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, taking effect from February 10, 1878.

For additional compensation to clerk of the fourth class performing the duties of chief clerk under similar assignment, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, taking effect from February 10, 1878.

One stenographer, $1,600.

Mr. President, the Navy Department, as it will be seen, is run by a very slight force of clerks. We are continually calling on them for documents of various kinds for reference. I have been surprised myself at the amount of clerical duty that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate have been compelled to require of the Navy Department, and am at a loss almost to know how they succeed in complying with the demands we make upon them.

In addition to that I wish to say that there is no assistant Secretary of the Navy. All the duties which in other Departments devolve on one, two, or three assistants, fall solely upon the head of the Secretary; and he is a very hard-worked man for that reason, and always has been. This is not a proposition to make an assistant Secretary of the Navy, but to allow the Secretary from time to time to detail the chief clerk to act, probably for a few months in a year, when he is absent, so as to give an opportunity for official papers to be signed by this officer.

I also desire to make the statement that there is not in the whole Navy Department a stenographer. Many of the bureaus in the other Departments have stenographers. It is now a necessity of public business that stenographers be used. That has got to be a great art, and it facilitates work so much that it saves an immense amount of time. By this amendment the committee ask that a stenographer be allowed the Secretary of the Navy. I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move, in line 2028, after the word "seven," to insert "and five hundred;" so as to read:

Solicitor-General, $7,500.

This is a single officer whose compensation for this year is fixed at $7,000 by the bill, while the Revised Statutes creating the Department of Justice provided that there should be as an assistant to the Attorney-General "an officer called the Solicitor-General, learned in the law," who was to take the place of the Attorney-General in case of his absence and perform his duties whenever it was necessary to do so. Then there were three Assistant Attorneys-General, with salaries fixed at $5,000 each. This bill preserves the salaries of the Assistant Attorneys-General, preserves the salary of the Attorney-General, but the Solicitor-General, whose salary is $7,500 by law, is reduced $500. Why make that discrimination?

Besides, this gentleman is to my knowledge one of the most useful officers in this Government. The whole business of preparing the Federal cases in the Supreme Court and Court of Claims has to be supervised by him. He is constantly arguing cases in the Supreme Court, and I think I shall be borne out by the Senators from North Carolina in saying he is not only a gentleman learned in the law but one of the most estimable gentlemen in the country. I think that reducing his salary to $7,000 when it is fixed by law at $7,500 is a matter that is too small for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to say that by the act of March 3, 1877, the Solicitor-General was put at $7,000, and by the act of 1876 it was $7,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. They are appropriation bills. Of course I do not want to complain of this thing; but there has been no provision of the law except the present bill changing the Revised Statutes upon this subject.

Mr. BECK. The House struck him down to $6,000 and the Senate has raised him to $7,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then you ought to repeal the law giving a salary of $7,500. It is the most vicious legislation in the world to proceed in this way. The chief law officer of the Government, the Attorney-General, has to supervise the Department; he cannot argue cases before the Supreme Court; he has not the time to do it. I do not mean that he is not able to do it, for the present Attorney-General is a very able man, but he has not the time to do it. The business is given to an officer who really could earn a great deal more money than that. To make a distinction between him and his Assistant Attorneys-General, when they are paid $5,000, the legal salary, and say he shall be paid $500 less than the law provides, seems to me rather small business.

Mr. WITHERS. It strikes me that this involves precisely the same principle which we debated some time ago, and it was generally agreed that the yeas and nays upon that amendment would settle the question.

Mr. WINDOM. Precisely the same question.

Mr. WITHERS. I can see no difference in it, except that it applies to one particular individual instead of to a class. I hope the Senate will not go back and have this whole argument gone over again as to the necessity of adhering to the agreement which was had with the House. The present bill fixes the salary at $7,000. The last year's bill fixed it at $7,000. The House bill reduced it to $6,000. This committee put it back at just what it was before, $7,000, and I hope the Senate will permit it there to remain. As to the repeal of the Revised Statutes, that is done by this very bill which we have now under consideration.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Virginia has stated the precise facts in regard to this matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. When we voted on the other question it involved a change of dozens of places in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WITHERS. This will involve precisely the same thing if we act with fair and even-handed justice. The whole principle in it is that the Revised Statutes fix the salary at $7,500 and this appropriation bill reduces it to $7,000. In every other case where the Revised Statutes fix a salary and this bill reduces it, the same principle would apply.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think there is more merit in the case of this officer than any other whose name is mentioned in this bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I make no question as to the merits of the officer.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask a separate vote on it, because there is more merit in the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SARGENT. The salary is $7,000. The House reduced it to $6,000, and we put it back to $7,000 upon the principle that we would stand upon the salaries as heretofore existing.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I read the salary as provided by law. It is exactly the same case as that of the judges; it is a salary provided by law.

Mr. SARGENT. This is exactly the salary he has been receiving. We put it at $7,000. To put it at $7,500 is to violate the principle and lose the whole moral force of the position of the Senate in reference to salaries. We say to the House conferees when we meet them: "The Senate are not disposed to legislate on appropriation bills; the law has fixed the price; and if not, the appropriation bills have fixed the price over and over again; there is a certain standard; now we ask that an amount which the law allows be appropriated; we do not ask to increase salaries ourselves, but we resist the attempt to decrease them; if that is to be done let it be done by general legislation." That is the principle upon which we stand, and the House conferees in repeated conferences have yielded to the soundness of the principle; and to violate in a single instance, as is now proposed to do, takes away the argument of consistency on the part of the Senate. For that reason, as well as for the reason that $7,000 is an ample salary for this office, nearly as large as that of a Cabinet minister, with all the high duties devolved on that place, I trust the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The matter must go to a conference committee, because the House bill was $6,000, and you raise it to $7,000 instead of $7,500, which is the salary prescribed by law; and this officer is one of the ablest this country has at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I have a few formal amendments from the Committee on Appropriations which I intended to propose a moment ago, but some Senator wished to offer an amendment and I postponed them. On line 104 I move to strike out "six" and insert "seven." That is merely to correct a footing so as to make it "$14,700" instead of "$14,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 134 I move to insert after the word "dollars:"

And of this amount not exceeding $400 may be used for the purchase of platform scales for weighing coal.

The purpose is to enable the architect of this building to weigh the coal that is bought for the use of the two Houses of Congress and to prevent frauds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 249, after the word "library," I move to insert "at $720."

This is to supply an omission.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 327 I move to change the footing to correspond with an amendment already made by the Senate. On motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] the number of clerks in the office of the Librarian was changed, which requires a change in the footing.

Mr. WITHERS. I suppose it is hardly necessary to make a specific motion with regard to every change in the footing which is necessitated by a change in salary.

Mr. WINDOM. It is necessary in committee, I suppose. After the words "in all," in line 327, I move to strike out "$26,640" and insert "$30,240."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On line 759 I move to strike out the word "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

One stenographer, $1,800.

I have not had the opportunity of consulting the committee, but I understand the committee are unanimously agreed in that. It is to conform to what is paid to the other stenographers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out from line 1106 to line 1133. The Senate will notice that is a somewhat sweeping amendment, and I will call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to it. The bill now provides:

And for the purpose of enabling the several mints and assay offices of the United States to make returns to depositors with as little delay as possible, the provisions of section 3545 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall hereafter apply, &c.

I can, if desired, present reasons for moving to strike that out more readily by having a brief letter read than by any other way. I think it will meet the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.
Washington, D. C., May 23, 1878.

DEAR SIR: The effect of the provisions of lines 962 to 984, pages 40 and 41, bill H. R. 4104, now pending in the Senate, if enacted into a law, will be to require the mint at Denver to pay the value of bullion which may be deposited thereat in coin or coin notes, less the lawful mint charges.

The bullion will become the property of the United States and will have to be transferred at Government expense to one of the coinage mints for coinage on account of the United States.

The Treasury would hold the resulting coin as an offset for the coin paid for the bullion or for the redemption of the coin notes given in payment for the bullion. In so far as the receiving, assaying, and accounting for the bullion and its transfer to another institution for coinage on account of the United States is concerned, there would be no difficulty, but it would be necessary to increase the bond of the superintendent of the Denver mint to $100,000; it is now but $10,000.

If this provision is retained, it will largely increase the responsibility of the superintendent at Denver, and his salary should be, in my opinion, increased to $3,000 per annum.

As to the expediency of issuing coin notes through an assay office or mint, the Secretary of the Treasury would be a better judge than myself, and I therefore say nothing upon that point.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

Hon. WM. WINDOM,
United States Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I am willing to submit the question on that statement without any further discussion. I move to strike out the entire clause from line 1106 to line 1133, inclusive.

Mr. BECK. It came to us applying to the mint at Denver. We heard there were several other applications to make it apply to other mints, and therefore upon my suggestion it was amended as it now reads, "the several mints and assay offices," so as to make it general, applicable to all the mints.

Mr. WITHERS. We understood that several already enjoyed the privilege.

Mr. BECK. But after hearing the letter read I think we had better strike out the clause, and in conference we can look at it and determine what to do.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call attention to section 3545 of the Revised Statutes, which provides:

For the purpose of enabling the mints and the assay office in New York to make returns to depositors with as little delay as possible, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in such mints and assay office, when the state of the Treasury will admit thereof, such an amount of public money, or bullion procured for the purpose, as he shall judge convenient and necessary, out of which those who bring bullion to the said mints and assay office may be paid the value thereof, in coin or bars, as soon as practicable after the value has been ascertained. On payment thereof being made, the bullion so deposited shall become the property of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury may, however, at any time withdraw the fund or any portion thereof.

This was a proposition put in the bill by the House for the purpose of buying bullion at Denver. A year ago an attempt was made to induce the Department to make an order for the buying of bullion, as we understand they might at Denver. It would be a great accommodation to all the people in that State who are mining, as well to the people of Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, and Arizona. Denver is a central position through which all the mining products of that region come. The miners of that section of country are compelled to send all their money either to New York City or to Philadelphia, or they are compelled to sell it at the banks. The superintendent of the mint at Denver was willing at that time and is willing now to take charge of and do this business, giving the additional bond, as I understand, without any claim for extra compensation at all. It costs the Government nothing except the mere charge upon the transportation of the bullion from Denver to New York or Philadelphia. Cannot the Government of the United States afford to give this vast region west of the Mississippi River a little facility to enable the people to dispose of their productions which are especially desirable in this country, and which it ought to be the policy of the Government to encourage? If it is upon the theory that the Government cannot afford to do it, I suppose those people will have to submit to the same difficulties that they have experienced for the last fifteen or eighteen years; and you thus give the bankers an opportunity to buy their gold at less than it is worth in many instances.

In this case I think it is extremely desirable that the mint at Denver should have this privilege; and so does my colleague. While he is connected with the largest bank, the one that buys probably the most gold in that country, and I am individually connected with another bank that makes some money in buying gold, yet we know that it is not the interest of the people that they should sell their gold bullion to the banks, but that the Government should establish this depository for the purchase of bullion at Denver. It is not a simple question of accommodating the people of Colorado, but a question of accommodating the people of the extreme western mining regions, except it may be California.

Mr. MERRIMON. What the Senator from Colorado has stated is in a very large measure applicable to the assay office at Charlotte.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope that motion will not be made. We can complete this bill now in fifteen or twenty minutes. It will take all day Friday if we adjourn now.

Mr. MERRIMON. This bill is a very important one, and we have got on with it very much more rapidly than was anticipated when it was taken up. It appropriates millions and millions of dollars. If we are going to hurry through in a few minutes' work that which ought to take hours, it is rather remarkable to me. And now it is proposed to strike out a very important provision of the bill. I for one am opposed to striking it out, and would like to have an opportunity to acquaint the Senate with the reasons why I am so opposed to it.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senate will be very glad to hear the Senator; and with the consent of the Senate I will withdraw the motion to strike out and leave the subject to the conference.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am content to adopt that course.

Mr. WINDOM. With the consent of the Senate I will do that. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. WINDOM. One other proposition only. I move on line 98 to strike out the words "during the session six," and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Telegraph operator, $1,200 per annum.

The Senate has already passed a bill appropriating $1,200 for that purpose. I do not wish to argue it. The Senate has expressed its opinion on the subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Then there should be a change of the total corresponding with the amendment just made to $78,630 by inserting "six hundred" after "thousand;" so as to read "$78,630."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I believe the committee have no further amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to offer a slight amendment at lines 2148 and 2149. By those two lines the sum of $1,500 is appropriated to the chemist and microscopist connected with the Agricultural Bureau. The duties of those two officers are entirely distinct, and they desire, as I am informed, and I think it is very proper, that the appropriation should be made separately to each of them. I do not propose by my amendment to increase the appropriation. I propose to insert after the word "chemist" the words "$1,000," appropriating to the chemist $1,000 for the purposes indicated, and then to strike out line 2149 in these words:

And microscopist, $1,500.

And insert in lieu thereof:

To investigate the history and habits of cryptogamic plants injurious to agriculture, for experiments in ascertaining the best means of preventing their growth and destroying them, for traveling expenses, chemicals, and other expenses connected with the practical works of the microscopical division, $500.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if both the chemist and microscopist understood that this is the relative amount that they need. Are they agreed as to the division of the sum?

Mr. WINDOM. I must beg pardon of the Senator from Wisconsin. I did not understand his statement as I was engaged in another matter. I think I have no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin if this is understood among these officers.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to know the object of the amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. One object is to divide the appropriations. The bill appropriates $1,500 jointly for the use of these two officers. The officers themselves desire that the appropriations should be divided and a certain amount appropriated to each.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Commissioner of Agriculture recommend this change?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am not aware that he has recommended it officially, but he is satisfied with it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has he said so to the Senator?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He is satisfied that the change shall be made. I am informed that until last year this appropriation was divided, but last year it was made jointly, and this year that example has been followed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Commissioner of Agriculture was before the Committee on Appropriations and the bill, as I understand, is as he then desired it. Now I ask the Senator if any new light has come to the committee or himself, or has it only come to some of the officers who are to expend this money and who want this change?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The officers have not the spending of the money; the money is spent under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But my friend knows well that if the accounts are transferred from one to the other the Commissioner has no control except to spend the money for the particular objects specified. Unless the Senator from Wisconsin has properly considered this matter and knows that the Commissioner of Agriculture desires this change, I think it is unsafe to vote it.

Mr. MORRILL. On the face of it the Senator, if he will look at it, will see that it is proper, and I understand the Senator from Wisconsin has had ample information on the subject. It is to give the chemist a thousand dollars and the microscopist $500. Any one with a knowledge of the duties of the two professors under the Commissioner of Agriculture will see at once that the professor of chemistry ought to have a larger sum than the other.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. With all due respect to both the Senators, I happen to be a member of the Agricultural Committee and also of the Committee on Appropriations, and I ought to have known what took place in either committee; and so far as I now know, no request has come from the Agricultural Department, either to the Committee on Agriculture or to the Committee on Appropriations, to make this change; and unless there is such a request I see no reason for it.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is my embarrassment. I am also connected with the Committee on Agriculture as its chairman, and I have had no intimation from the Commissioner of Agriculture that he desired to have this change; but if the Senator from Wisconsin says that he understands it to satisfactory both to the Commissioner of Agriculture and to the officers interested, I shall waive any objection I might otherwise make. I understand this sum to have been put in the appropriation bill in accordance with the general suggestions in relation to all these matters made by the Commissioner of Agriculture, with whom I went to the committee for the purpose of determining what should be done in reference to these matters. I should be very glad to accommodate the two officers concerned.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion and let us see if we cannot get through with the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. There is no trouble in finishing the bill within the next fifteen minutes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I insist on my motion.

Several SENATORS. Vote down the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 12, noes 29.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays. ["No!" "No!"] It is impossible for us to do business in this way.

Mr. WITHERS. We have just voted down the motion to adjourn. Why further attempt to consume time by calling the yeas and nays?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am astonished that the Committee on Appropriations insist upon going on.

Mr. WINDOM. We can finish the bill before the yeas and nays are called, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his call. There is no serious cause of disagreement here at all so far developed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for upon the motion to adjourn. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that as this whole amount of $1,500 can be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture he has a perfect control of the whole matter; and if in his opinion it requires the expenditure of $1,000 for the one and $500 for the other he will so divide it, but if he prefers a different division and the public service may in his opinion demand it, we ought not to prevent his distributing this fund between the two objects of investigation as in his opinion may be most judicious.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In addition to what the Senator from Virginia says, it will be noticed that the amendment gives traveling expenses. Just below he will find that there is already a provision for the traveling expenses of the Commissioner and others who may go out. This "traveling expenses" is a new thing in the place the Senator from Wisconsin desires to put it, and it will take a part of this money that ought to go to legitimate purposes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. On the preceding page, page 87, the Senate Committee on Appropriations proposed an amendment, which amendment has been adopted by the Senate in Committee of the Whole. It provides—

For investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture; for experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them; for chemicals, traveling expenses, and other expenses in the practical work of the entomological division, $5,000.

That is the only provision which I find in the bill in regard to traveling expenses. Is there any other?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will notice in lines 2157 and 2158 he will find:

And for actual traveling expenses while on the business of the Department.

It confines it to actual traveling expenses while on business of the Department. The Senator's amendment goes to another portion of the bill and says for traveling expenses whether on business or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. On line 219 I move to strike out the words "architect of the Capitol," and insert "Doorkeeper;" so as to put the engineers and others engaged in heating and ventilating the House under the orders of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. HOAR. Was it ever known that when the House passed a bill regulating as it chose the management of its own officers, the Senate undertook to make an amendment to that? This is something which has passed the House relating exclusively to the conduct of the officers of the House in the management of its Hall.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina, if he will allow me, that there is already an amendment in this clause, and it will be within the jurisdiction of the conference committee. If the House desires to change it they can have it done in conference.

Mr. BUTLER. I make this motion by the request of gentlemen of the House. I do not know what has been the rule heretofore on the subject, but I was informed that it was simply an accident that this matter was made subject to the order of the architect of the Capitol instead of the Doorkeeper. I am not at all particular about it.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it had better be referred to the conference. I did not notice that when the Senator spoke to me about it a few minutes ago, but it is within the jurisdiction of the conference.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer the following amendment: in line 54, after the word "Pensions," insert the words:

And clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I dislike to resist the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama; but I think if we undertake to increase the number of permanent committee clerks it will be quite a large task; we shall have to go through all the clerks of committees.

Mr. SPENCER. In answer to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I notice that they have increased the number of permanent clerks.

Mr. WINDOM. In one case, the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPENCER. They give the Committee on Pensions a permanent clerk. If there is any reason for any committee of the Senate having a permanent clerk, it is certainly the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Private Land Claims has a permanent clerk.

Mr. WITHERS. Not under this bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly, under this bill.

Mr. WITHERS. No; I mean it is not provided for originally in this bill.

Mr. SPENCER. He is provided for this year by this bill and so are several others.

Mr. WITHERS. It is no new legislation.

Mr. SPENCER. The clerk of the Committee on Pensions is new legislation.

Mr. WITHERS. The clerk to the Committee on Pensions is added to this list because the Committee on Pensions have a very large amount of work he can do in the vacation.

Mr. SPENCER. So has the Committee on Military Affairs a very large amount of work that he can do during vacation. I submit to the Senate that if there is any committee in the Senate which is entitled to a permanent clerk it is the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that the Committee on Military Affairs has charge of one Department of the Government. An immense amount of work is done by that committee, as I happen to know as a member of the committee, and I believe it is wise and proper that it should have a permanent clerk. I therefore agree to the amendment proposed by the chairman of that committee.

Mr. SARGENT. There is really no necessity in this case, and I do not think there is in the case of the Committee on Pensions. The rule of the Senate is that on the adjournment of the Senate the papers shall be returned to the Secretary's office. I know of no power of the Committee on Pensions to sit during the recess nor of any power or disposition on the part of that committee or its clerk to work during the recess of the Senate. I doubted in committee whether this addition ought to be made. The argument was, "It does not increase the number, because we forego one permanent clerk." The majority of the committee thought it ought to be reported; but the principle certainly ought not to be extended to the Committee on Military Affairs. There is no business of the Committee on Military Affairs during the recess in a state of peace at any rate. If there is any I should like to know what it is. I should like any Senator to suggest any business the Committee on Military Affairs has during the recess. It is only an attempt to prolong the pay of a clerk. The Committee on Naval Affairs is just as important a committee, has just as much work. Put the work side by side and I think it has more, for I believe we are bothered more by naval officers than the Committee on Military Affairs is by military officers. There is no necessity for a permanent clerk for either. If there is a necessity for it in one case there is in the other, and there is just as much reason for it.

You might run through all the committees and you would find that just as good arguments can be advanced in favor of others as for the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs. One committee that has had a permanent clerk, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, is now dropped from that list. There are exigencies when a committee may require the assistance of a permanent clerk. When there was so much dispute in reference to seats in this body, when that committee was required to send subcommittees to the Southern States, &c., there was a good deal of necessity for a permanent clerk to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, because the business piled up mountain-high, and by consent of the Senate they sat during the recess of the Senate—in fact, sat during the daily sittings of the Senate. The same is true of the Military Committee during a time of war when war measures have to be originated and other matters of legislation of great importance are before that committee; but in a time of peace there can be no necessity for it at all. It is the most extravagant method of paying public servants, this making permanent clerks during the recess. I do not think it ought to be done, and am opposed to it.

Mr. SPENCER. There are seven or eight committees that pay their clerks annual salaries; and if there is a reason why one committee should have its clerk paid an annual salary there is the same reason why the Committee on Military Affairs should have it. The committee considered this question and unanimously directed me to report this amendment. I hope the Senate will adopt it. Seven or eight other committees have permanent clerks. Some of them have a great deal less business to do than the Committe on Military Affairs.

Mr. MERRIMON. What will the clerk have to do in vacation?

Mr. SPENCER. The same as other clerks. We have missed from our library at different times valuable works and books which if the committee had a permanent clerk we should not have lost. Now, we must ask for an appropriation, as we shall have to do, of several hundred dollars to furnish that committee with books that have been taken from the committee-room. If we had a permanent clerk who would be responsible for them, that necessity would be obviated. What have other clerks of committees to do during the recess? What does the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations do during the recess? So with the clerk of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WINDOM. Let us vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 16.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope we shall adjourn if we have got down to this kind of propositions.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope we shall not adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the motion to adjourn, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is out of order, but I ask the chairman what he has to say about adjournment.

Mr. SARGENT. That is out of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know it is out of order, and I said so; but I should like to know what the chairman says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken; and the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Armstrong,	Cockrell,	Hill,	Morgan,
Bailey,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Barnum,	Conkling,	Kernan,	Sargent,
Bayard,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Eustis,	McCreery,	Spencer,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Merrimon,	Wallace.

NAYS—25.

Anthony,	Davis of W. Va.,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	Matthews,	Teller,
Booth,	Ferry,	Maxey,	Windom,
Burnside,	Hereford,	Morrill,	Withers.
Butler,	Hoar,	Paddock,
Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	Randolph,
Davis of Illinois,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,

ABSENT—27.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Chaffee,	Grover,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Christiancy,	Hamlin,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Conover,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Wadleigh,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Oglesby,	Whyte.
Eaton,	Johnston,	Patterson,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to be heard one moment on that. I understand the proposition is to make the clerk of the Military Committee a permanent clerk and pay him a salary by the year. Inquiry was made of the chairman of that committee what special duties that clerk would be required to perform during the recess of the Senate. Here is a proposition, now, to take money out of the public Treasury to give to a clerk when the chairman of the committee cannot state one single duty he would have to perform during the recess of the Senate. Have the people of this country no rights? Have the tax-payers of the country, who furnish every dollar that goes into the Treasury, no interests to be protected by the Senate? Why, sir, during the last fifteen years there has never been such a strain upon the people of any portion of the earth as has been placed on the American people by the unwise appropriations passed through Congress.

Sir, we hear some talk of depressed labor, we hear some talk of the risings of men because they are oppressed and cannot get employment. If there is any cause of complaint existing anywhere for an uprising in this country, it is that the tax-payers of the country should rise up and protest against the squandering of the money which they have paid into the public Treasury. Here is a proposition to give to the clerk of a committee a few hundred dollars during the recess of the Senate when he has not a single duty to perform so far as I can learn from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I interrupt the Senator from Delaware and save a little time? One of the members of the Military Committee, the Senator from Texas, stated a few moments ago that it was the wish of the entire Military Committee that it should have a permanent clerk. The reasons he did not assign perhaps as fully as he might have done, because he did not want to occupy the time of the Senate. It was the sober judgment of the Military Committee that a clerk could be profitably employed during the whole session and during the whole year. The chairman of the committee was asked the question what could be done by that clerk during the recess. I regret to say that he did not answer it quite as I should have answered it. I say as a member of that committee that the clerk of that committee and three other men can be profitably employed during the whole of the coming vacation in performing this sort of duty; in gathering information concerning bills now before that committee sufficient in number to keep the committee at work continuously from now till Congress meets again. I have given hours almost every day for the last two months to doing work which a clerk ought to have done. It may be my duty; I cannot say; but I do know that if the clerk of that committee, an unusually intelligent gentleman, gives his time during the vacation, there will be presented by the Military Committee at the opening of the next session a mass of testimony concerning delicate cases before the committee such as will not be given without his assistance. That is what the clerk will have to do.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed by so many Senators on the other side of the House that they have amendments which they desire to offer that, if it meets the approval of the Senate, I will ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference which will take but two minutes, and then I will move an adjournment.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3064) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 46, 47, 49, 50, 54, 55, 57, and 58.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 51, 52, 53, 56, and 59, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out lines 3 and 4, page 2, of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That hereafter chargés d'affaires ad interim shall receive no additional pay beyond that which the law provides for the regular offices which they hold in their respective legations.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the comma between the words "Paraguay" and "Uruguay," and inserting the word "and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out lines 14 and 15, page 2 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the words "Turk's Island;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the word "Milan;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
WM. W. EATON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

O. R. SINGLETON,
WM. A. J. SPARKS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 29, 1878.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I desire to submit a request to the House.

Mr. WOOD. I will yield for that purpose.

EVENING SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that there be an evening session of the House to-day, commencing at half past seven o'clock, for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. BURCHARD. I think we had better have an evening session for business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there is a great pressure to have a session for debate.

Mr. HALE. Let them have a night session for debate this week.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

VENEZUELAN CLAIMS.

Mr. BRIDGES. As one of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask consent to present some views upon House bill No. 4799, in relation to the Venezuelan mixed commission. I ask to have them printed and recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be considered in connection with the report of the majority of the committee upon the same subject.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. WOOD. I now call up from the Speaker's table the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the final adjournment of this session of Congress on the 10th day of June next. I move that the further consideration of that resolution be postponed until Saturday, the 8th day of June, after the reading of the Journal, and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. And if that is voted down, the resolution will come up for action on its merits.

Mr. BURCHARD. Should the previous question be seconded and the main question ordered, will it run to the adoption or rejection of the resolution, should the motion to postpone not be agreed to?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WOOD. Do not be in a hurry; we will get along.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, June 10, 1878, at twelve o'clock noon.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to postpone the further consideration of the resolution, which has been read, until Saturday, June 8, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. PATTERSON, of New York. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it in order to move a call of the House at this time?

Mr. HALE. Not until after a vote has been taken, and not then unless a quorum does not vote.

Mr. WOOD. The rule requires that we shall know whether there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. HALE. We can tell that by voting.

Mr. WOOD. No vote has yet been had.

Mr. REAGAN. It is not indispensable to a call of the House that there shall be no quorum.

Mr. CONGER. There is no doubt of a quorum being present. If the gentleman will look around the House he will see that there is a quorum here.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is a call of the House in order after the previous question has been ordered until a vote shows no quorum voting?

Mr. WOOD. Do not be in such a hurry. For the purpose of ascertaining whether there is a quorum present or not, I move that the House now adjourn, and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. That does not prevent them being ordered on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Can the House now adjourn, after the previous question has been ordered?——

The SPEAKER. The House can adjourn at any time. The Chair was examining the rule in regard to a call of the House. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] want to filibuster on his own motion?

Mr. WOOD. I want to have a full House.

Mr. HALE. We gave the gentleman the previous question on his motion, as he asked. Now, does he want to adjourn on that?

Mr. WOOD. I want to have a full House, and the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn will give members an opportunity to come in.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 0, nays 245, not voting 46; as follows:

YEA—0.

Mr. BURDICK. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MANNING.

Mr. JORGENSEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. GLOVER.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York to postpone the further consideration of the resolution till the 8th day of June, immediately after the reading of the Journal, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 132, not voting 35; as follows:

So Mr. WOOD'S motion to postpone was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING. If he were here, I should vote in the affirmative. I presume he would vote in the negative.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. TOWNSEND. Were he present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. KNAPP, is paired with my colleague, Mr. TIPTON. Mr. KNAPP, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. TIPTON. My colleague, Mr. TOWNSHEND, is in error in stating that I am paired on this question with my colleague, Mr. KNAPP. This question was expressly reserved from the operation of the pair.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. EVANS. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. SLEMONS, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. SLEMONS, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. HENRY. My colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. STARIN. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. KELLEY. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCKINLEY, who is detained at his room by sickness. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. DURHAM. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. BURDICK. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MANNING. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. BUNDY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BEEBE.

Mr. JORGENSEN. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. GLOVER. If he were present, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HALE. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, refusing to postpone the further consideration of the Senate resolution for final adjournment; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD. I move to lay the Senate resolution on the table.

Mr. COX, of New York. If that does not prevail cannot we amend the resolution of the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order.

Mr. HALE. The main question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read Rule 132.

The Clerk read as follows:

132. The previous question shall be in this form: "Shall the main question be now put?" It shall only be admitted when demanded by a majority of the members present, and its effects shall be to put an end to all debate, and to bring the House to a direct vote upon a motion to commit, if such motion shall have been made; and if this motion does not prevail, then upon amendments reported by a committee, if any; then upon pending amendments, and then upon the main question. But its only effect, if a motion to postpone is pending, shall be to bring the House to a vote upon such motion.

Mr. HALE. Is the motion of the gentleman from New York in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALE. Then let us have a vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say in reply to the gentleman from New York, that if the motion to lay on the table does not prevail it will bring up the resolution as the Senate sent it to the House for a direct vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to amend?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered, which cuts off all amendment and debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. But when a motion to postpone was pending the rule says the only effect was to bring the House to a vote on that.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone has been voted down and the main question has been ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. The previous question continues until the resolution is disposed of.

Mr. SAYLER. Is there no opportunity to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. That motion has been made and laid upon the table.

Mr. NEAL. If this motion to lay upon the table prevails, can the resolution be taken from the table unless by a suspension of the rules, which requires a two-third vote?

The SPEAKER. If this motion carries the resolution will be laid upon the table, which is an adverse vote.

Mr. MCKENZIE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 125, nays 131, not voting 35; as follows:

So the House refused to lay the resolution of final adjournment on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. LIGON said: My colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am paired with Mr. LORING. If he were here, he would vote in the negative and I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative and he would vote in the negative.

Mr. SHELLEY. I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I am paired with Mr. MCCOOK, of New York.

Mr. KELLEY. I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, who is detained from the House by sickness. If he were here, I would vote in the affirmative and he would vote in the negative.

Mr. HUNGERFORD. My colleague, Mr. CAMP, is paired with Mr. BENEDICT. Mr. CAMP would vote in the negative.

Mr. BURDICK. I am paired with Mr. MANNING. If he were here, I would vote in the negative and he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. RYAN. I am paired with Mr. QUINN. If he were here, I would vote in the negative and he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BUNDY. I am paired with Mr. BEEBE.

Mr. CARLISLE. My colleague, Mr. DURHAM, is paired with Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If Mr. DURHAM were here, he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. STARIN. If he were here, I would vote "ay" and he would vote "no."

Mr. REA. My colleague, Mr. GLOVER, is paired with Mr. JORGENSEN.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GOODE. I move to amend the Senate resolution by striking out "Monday, June 10," and inserting "Thursday, June 20."

The SPEAKER. This matter came up this morning as a question of privilege. The gentleman from New York moved further to postpone the consideration of the Senate resolution until the 8th day of June, and the question was asked of the Chair whether the effect of the previous question would be to carry the House to a vote upon the resolution itself in case the motion to postpone did not prevail. The Chair decided and so stated to the House that that would be its effect; so that the House was perfectly well advised as to the effect of ordering the main question. The Chair thinks his decision is in accordance with the rule and the practice. He desires further to say that there is but one way he knows of by which this proposition can be reached for amendments. If the motion to concur is voted down and that vote is then reconsidered the proposition would be stripped of the main question and the resolution would be open to amendment.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Would a motion be in order to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. That motion has already been made, and has been laid upon the table.

Mr. GOODE. I desire to inquire of the Chair if, when the gentleman from New York made a motion to take this resolution from the Speaker's table and postpone its consideration until the 8th day of June, upon which motion the main question was ordered, the effect of that was not simply to bring the House to a vote upon the pending motion, which motion was to postpone until the 8th day of June?

The SPEAKER. The question was called up as a question of privilege, and the Chair has stated that under the rules, and under the practice, when a motion to postpone is pending and the previous question is seconded, the operation of the previous question runs to the main question involved if the motion to postpone is voted down.

Mr. COX, of New York. Will the Chair permit me to read the rule?

The SPEAKER. The rule has already been read, but the Chair will cheerfully listen.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask the attention of the Chair to the statement at page 277 of the Manual in regard to the previous question:

> But its only effect if a motion to postpone is pending shall be to bring the House to a vote upon such motion.

The SPEAKER. That is a part of the rule which has been read. But the ordering of the main question has always the effect of bringing the House to a vote upon the main question, if the motion to postpone does not prevail or if a motion to commit, if entered, does not prevail.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in reference to the inquiry made by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] that if you read the whole rule together, when you come to the clause that has been referred to by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] it will be found consistent with the prior sentence, constituting a new sentence beginning with the word "but," which in this instance is used as a qualification of the general operation of the rule. The statement of the Speaker that if the House has ordered the main question it goes to all the questions then pending, both amendments and main question, is undoubtedly correct. But where there is a motion to postpone to a day certain that is a distinct, positive, self-subsisting proposition, and if the previous question is ordered upon it and the vote taken, then the operation of the previous question is exhausted absolutely. That must be the effect of that portion of the rules because it is in the form of an exception to the general effect of the rule that when the previous question is ordered it is not exhausted till the whole subject-matter has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must construe the whole rule together, and he has so construed it in relation to this matter. And he would state in addition that the practice of the House has been uniform, so far as the Chair recollects. When the previous question has been ordered the practice has been that it shall run to the main question, and the Chair distinctly stated so in the early part of this controversy.

Mr. WOOD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the position of the question now before the House. The Chair having, in my judgment, very properly determined that the previous question is operating all the way through down to the resolution itself, if the House should now proceed to vote upon a concurrence in the Senate resolution, and should refuse to concur, the previous question thus having been exhausted, would it not then be competent to move a new proposition fixing some later day on which Congress should adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated how that object could be reached. The Chair will cause to be read a paragraph on page 278 of the Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Where a vote taken under the operation of the previous question is reconsidered, the question is then divested of the previous question, and is open to debate and amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair therefore answers the question of the gentleman from New York in the affirmative. The resolution would then be open to amendment.

Mr. WOOD. As I understand, the question is now upon concurrence in the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WOOD. And if that shall be voted down——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to ask a parliamentary question.

Mr. WOOD. If that shall be voted down, then it would be in order to offer an amendment as to the time?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. HUBBELL. And if the resolution should be concurred in, then I suppose no amendment would be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was the point of order sustained that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] was not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decided; he reaffirmed his former decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry. If the House refuse to reconsider the vote upon the concurrent resolution after it is given, then there is no remedy, no way in which its decision can be altered.

The SPEAKER. There is a remedy. The motion to reconsider, if carried, would strip the proposition of the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. But if the House lays the motion to reconsider on the table?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine and not for the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair upon that question. [Loud cries of "Too late!" "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the appeal.

Mr. WILSON. Then I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always entertains an appeal from his decision, taking no advantage of a member's tardiness.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There can be no appeal when the Chair has only decided as to what may be in order after the pending vote shall have been taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois does not appeal from that, but from the construction which the Chair has given to the rule.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw that appeal. We can reach the object in another way.

Mr. WILSON. If he insists upon his appeal I move that it be laid upon the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 430) for the relief of John Clinton, paymaster at Brownsville, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assignees, or legal representatives, to a tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1918) for the relief of Milton B. Cushing, paymaster, United States Navy.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill (H. R. No. 1896) for the relief of Nancy A. Herrick, of Rochester, New York.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 3259) providing a form of government for the District of Columbia, and agreed to the conference asked by the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. BARNUM conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Having been assured by my friends that the course pointed out by the Speaker will be pursued, I will withdraw the appeal.

The SPEAKER. The appeal being withdrawn, the question is upon ordering the yeas and nays upon concurring in the resolution of the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 131, not voting 33; as follows:

So the House refused to concur in the resolution of the Senate.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. LORING. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. COVERT. I desire to announce that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were present, I would vote "no."

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to say that upon all political questions I am paired with Mr. SLEMONS. I am assured by gentlemen upon both sides of the House that this is considered a political question; and therefore I do not vote.

Mr. SHELLEY. I desire to say that I am paired with Mr. EVANS, of Indiana. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. MULLER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. STARIN. If he were here, I would vote "no."

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina. I am paired with Mr. MCCOOK, of New York.

Mr. RYAN. On this question I am paired with Mr. QUINN, of New York. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. JORGENSEN. I am paired with Mr. GLOVER, of Missouri.

Mr. KELLEY. On this question I am paired with Mr. MCKINLEY, of Ohio. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to announce that my colleague from Indiana, Mr. BAKER, is paired with Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky.

Mr. BURDICK. I am paired with Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I would vote "ay."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. CAMP and Mr. BURDICK, are paired. If Mr. CAMP were here he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. JAMES. My colleagues, Mr. STARIN and Mr. MULLER, are paired.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. WOOD. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to concur in the Senate resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon concurring in the Senate resolution.

Mr. WOOD. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "10th" and inserting "17th," after the words "Monday, June."

Mr. COX, of New York. Is that open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is now stripped of the operation of the previous question, and of course is open to amendment.

Mr. WOOD. I will modify my amendment so as to insert "24th."

Mr. CLYMER. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it the "17th," and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the House refused to concur in the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not that the end of the matter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York then moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to concur in the Senate resolution, and that motion was agreed to. That stripped the resolution of the previous question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] then moved to amend the resolution so as to make it read "Monday, June 24;" and the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to amend the amendment by inserting "17th" in place of "24th."

Mr. CLYMER. And on that I have called the previous question.

Mr. WOOD. Is not the question to be taken on the longest time first?

The SPEAKER. That rule applies to filling blanks. The question before the House is in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There is so much confusion in the Hall that we cannot understand what is being done.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair will suspend all further business until gentlemen resume their seats and order is restored in the Hall. [After a pause.] The Chair will state the question before the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] moves to amend the Senate concurrent resolution by striking out "Monday, June 10th" and inserting "Monday, June 24th." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] moves to amend the amendment by striking out "24th" and inserting "17th," and on that calls the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to know whether the rule does not require that the question shall be first put upon the longest time, as in the case of filling blanks?

The SPEAKER. This is not a case of filling blanks, because there is no blank in the original proposition, which provides for the final adjournment on the 10th day of June.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the amendment is to strike out "10th," which will make a blank.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is to strike out and insert. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

In filling up blanks, the largest sum and longest time shall be first put. [But where a specific time or sum stands part of a motion, it is not until it is struck out, and a blank thereby produced, that this rule can begin to operate.]

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CLYMER, and upon a division there were ayes 150.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. BLACKBURN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 93, not voting 33; as follows

So, Mr. CLYMER's amendment to the amendment of Mr. WOOD was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I have been requested by the gentleman from New York, Mr. MULLER, to announce that he is paired with his colleague, Mr. STARIN, and that, if not paired, he would vote "no."

Mr. ROBBINS. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. TOWNSEND. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. KELLEY. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCKINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. FREEMAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. SLEMONS. If he were here, I do not know how he would vote; I should vote "ay."

Mr. HUNGERFORD. My colleague, Mr. MCCOOK, is paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. EVINS. Mr. MCCOOK would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BURDICK. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MANNING. If he were here, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question then recurring on the amendment of Mr. WOOD as amended by the adoption of the amendment of Mr. CLYMER, it was agreed to.

The resolution of the Senate, as amended, was then concurred in.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 363) granting a pension to James Newcomb;

An act (S. No. 874) granting a pension to Alfred Richardson, late of Company A, Twelfth Indiana Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 430) for the relief of John Clinton, postmaster at Brownsville, Tennessee;

An act (H. R. No. 1119) to confirm the title of Benjamin E. Edwards, his heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, to a certain tract of land in the Territory of New Mexico;

An act (H. R. No. 1918) for the relief of Milton B. Cushing, paymaster United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 2132) to pay for clerical services and extraordinary expenses, under the seventh section of the act of August 18, 1856, in the Pawnee land-district in Kansas;

An act (H. R. No. 2176) granting an increase of pension to Mattie McTaggart, widow of the late First Lieutenant McTaggart, Seventeenth United States Infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 4413) to provide for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for encouragement of the arts or sciences, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 4425) to alter and amend a law of the District of Columbia relative to the inspection of flour; and

An act (H. R. No. 4663) to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to make a privileged report—the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3064) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 46, 47, 49, 50, 54, 55, 57, and 58.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 51, 52, 53, 56, and 59, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11 and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out lines 3 and 4, page 2 of the bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That hereafter chargés d'affaires ad interim shall receive no additional pay beyond that which the law provides for the regular offices which they hold in their respective legations.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 12, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the comma between the words "Paraguay" and "Uruguay," and inserting the word "and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 15, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out lines 14 and 15, page 2 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 24, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out "ten" and inserting in lieu thereof "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 43, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the words "Turks Island;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 48, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the word "Milan;" and the Senate agree to the same.

O. R. SINGLETON,
W. A. J. SPARKS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
W. W. EATON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SINGLETON. One word. I will not take the time of the House to explain the matter unless required to do so. I wish simply to say that by the bill as it passed the House the amount appropriated for the consular and diplomatic service was $100,000 below that of last year. The Senate, by amendments, put on in round numbers $84,000. When the conference committee met the Senate agreed to yield $44,500 and the House $39,000. So the bill as it is now by report of the conference committee makes the expenditures next year below that of this year $61,000. If any gentleman desires to know how it is made up I will state it, but if not, I will demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under operation thereof the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURCHARD. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to take up the special order, being the bill to organize the life-saving service.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to test the sense of the House?

Mr. COX, of New York. I do.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am on the floor and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House will have an opportunity of deciding what business next to consider.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield the floor to me.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do for a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPENSES OF SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. ATKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5053) to provide for the expenses of the select committee on alleged frauds in the late presidential election; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, appropriates the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the actual expenses necessarily incurred by the select committee of the House of Representatives appointed under resolution of the House of May 17, and under that resolution, and the resolution of May 22 following, directed to investigate alleged frauds in the late presidential election, said to have been committed in Louisiana and Florida, or which may be charged to have been committed in any other State; said appropriation to be added to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and to be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee, and the Clerk of the House shall pay such parts of said sum as the chairman of said committee shall in writing direct for the purpose aforesaid to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, who shall as soon thereafter as practical make a report in writing to the House of the manner in which the sums thus paid to him have been expended, accompanied by vouchers in detail; which report and vouchers, when examined and approved by the Committee of Accounts of the House, shall be deemed a sufficient settlement of his accountability, and any unexpended balance remaining in his hands after such settlement shall be paid by him into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the fund for which it was appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the previous question on the third reading and engrossment of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that the bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering that bill.

Mr. COX, of New York, rose.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman will allow us to go into committee, as this will take but a very short time.

Mr. BURCHARD. That is not in order, to proceed to the consideration of particular business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states his object is to take up that bill for consideration.

Mr. BURCHARD. He will have to set aside all prior bills.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not suppose there would be any objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. Yes, sir; there will be. It is all wrong to go into committee to consider this in advance of all other business.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 57; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. ATKINS and Mr. CONGER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 64.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

Mr. ATKINS. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILSON. Is it competent to raise the question of consideration as to what the committee shall consider? I desire to proceed with the consideration of House bill No. 2117, known as the Mexican award bill, and I shall raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order of business in the committee.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be competent to move to set aside the regular order and proceed with the consideration of the bill which has just been referred to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will have to make the motion on each bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I will make it on each.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bills in Committee of the Whole be read in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the first special order in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2695) to regulate the compensation of postmasters, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURCHARD. That is not the regular order. The regular order in the Committee of the Whole is the tariff bill; but I do not know that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means desires to bring that up so as to antagonize the measure reported by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the first bill on the Calendar be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit that the reading of the bill is not in order on a motion to set aside.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the business before the committee be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the first special order has been read. The Clerk will again read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2695) to regulate the compensation of postmasters, and for other purposes.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that that bill be laid aside.

The question being taken on Mr. ATKINS's motion, there were—ayes 75, noes 8.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] and the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 4.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BURCHARD. I would suggest to the gentleman that the point has not been made that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; let the next bill be called.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to lay aside the first order is agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, a quorum did not vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Michigan make the point that a quorum had not voted?

Mr. CONGER. I did make the point, and the Chair ordered tellers to ascertain whether there was a quorum.

Mr. ATKINS. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to make the point that a quorum had not voted, and it was for that reason that I made the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CARLISLE. I ask that the roll be called, as required by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the committee rise.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I believe there is a misapprehension on the part of members. I suggest that the tellers again take their places.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no right to suppose that gentlemen who did not vote intended to vote.

Mr. CONGER. A quorum not having voted there is but one thing to be done, and that is to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I understand that there is no intention on the part of gentlemen to refrain from voting to prevent a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] having made the point that no quorum has voted, the tellers will resume their places.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 62.

So the motion to lay aside the bill (H. R. No. 2695) was agreed to.

The Clerk read the title of the next special order, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3258) to regulate the granting of pensions on account of death, or wounds or injuries received or diseases contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of arrears of pensions; also to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to restore to the roll of invalid pensioners the names stricken therefrom on account of disloyalty, and to repeal sections 4709, 4716, and 4717 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. McMAHON. I hope it will not be laid aside.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to hear the bill read.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask for the reading of the bill and for its present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. ATKINS. I made the motion to lay that bill aside because I did not suppose that gentlemen wanted to act upon it at this time. But as there seems to be a difference of opinion on the part of gentlemen with regard to taking action upon that bill just now, and not desiring to place any gentleman in a false attitude—for myself, I know nothing about the bill, and perhaps when I understand it I may vote for it—having made the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole merely with the view of reaching the bill I offered in the House, and as I got the floor not in my own right, but by the courtesy of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who had the floor for the purpose of moving to take up the bill in reference to the life-saving service, not desiring to treat that gentleman with discourtesy and not desiring to retard the business of the House, wishing that everything may move along smoothly that we may adjourn on the 17th of June, seeing that the road appears now to be entirely blocked, and not desiring to contribute on my part to any blocking of the public business, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I hope that the committee will not rise and I give notice now——

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ATKINS, there were—ayes 79, noes 53.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ATKINS, and Mr. RICE of Ohio, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 54.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration various matters and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call for the regular order, which is the consideration of the bill with reference to the life-saving service.

Mr. BURCHARD. I also call for the regular order, which is the bill (H. R. No. 4414) relating to the internal revenue.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit that the regular order is the unfinished business, being the interstate-commerce bill. But if the Committee on the Judiciary wish to occupy the morning hour I shall not antagonize them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give each gentleman an opportunity to obtain the opinion of the House, so that whatever business the House desires to take up at this time may be proceeded with.

Mr. FREEMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FREEMAN. My question is whether it would be in order to go into Committee of the Whole to take up the letter-carrier bill.

The SPEAKER. The House has just come out of Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FREEMAN. I am aware of that. But would it be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole again in order to reach that bill.

The SPEAKER. If the House should go into the Committee of the Whole it would be for the committee to decide what business it should take up.

Mr. FREEMAN. Would it be in order to make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. COX, of New York. I wish to say that my motion pertains to a bill which has been reported from the committee and made a special order.

Mr. FREEMAN. I would like to have a decision upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. On what point?

Mr. FREEMAN. Whether it would be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill to regulate and fix the pay of letter-carriers.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole regulates the order of its business just as the House does, and the technical motion is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and then the committee can regulate its order of business.

Mr. FREEMAN. Would it be in order to make the motion which I have suggested?

The SPEAKER. The motion which the gentleman suggests is never made technically.

Mr. FREEMAN. Is it in order to make it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. FREEMAN. I move to go into Commitee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up that bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. I object to the latter part of the motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was upon the floor before the House went into Committee of the Whole and yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS.]

Mr. FREEMAN. Do I understand that my motion has been ruled out?

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is in order.

Mr. FREEMAN. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken on Mr. FREEMAN'S motion, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say one word. I do not want to antagonize the bill called up by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] but I wish to say that that bill, like the one which I am endeavoring to bring up, was reported by the Committee on Commerce, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ROBERTS] who reported that bill is absent on account of indisposition. I think that either he or some other member of the committee ought to have control of the bill, and I do not like this idea of some one else, who is not a member of the committee, taking up a bill that has been reported by the committee and antagonizing another bill reported from the same committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to remind the gentleman from Texas that it was at his special instance and request, and also at the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ROBERTS] who is absent, that I agreed to bring up the bill at the earliest opportunity. I know it was reported from his committee, but it is my bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. I shall raise the question of consideration upon the bill of the gentleman from Texas. I have supported him in his efforts to bring the bill before the House until I find that the House does not care to take it up, and I shall therefore raise the question of consideration for the purpose of taking up the bill relating to the administration of the Internal Revenue department. That bill has been under consideration for some length of time and was prepared at the suggestion of the bureau, and it is very important that it should be disposed of.

Mr. COX, of New York. When we are talking about the importance of bills, I desire to say that the bill I propose to bring up affects human life and unless it is passed and sent to the Senate we shall have the same trouble in the future that occurred on the coast of North Carolina in the cases of the Huron and the Metropolis.

Mr. BURCHARD. We have passed bills in relation to the life-saving service time and again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is the next business in order. If the House should decline to go on with that, then the Chair is bound to recognize the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] and if the House should decline to proceed with his bill then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. CONGER. I should like to know why the bill of the gentleman from Illinois has precedence.

The SPEAKER. He has called up the bill on two occasions and it remains as unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. I would state that whenever he has called up that bill I have objected and it has not come before the House for consideration.

Mr. REAGAN. We have reported a bill in regard to interstate commerce, a subject on which I am daily receiving letters and telegrams. If it is the purpose of the House not to act upon the bill I should like to know that fact. I have been antagonized by committees desiring a morning hour and it would require but a short time to dispose of the bill one way or the other. It is of sufficient importance to be either passed or rejected by a vote of the House, and I hope the House will let me dispose of it and get it out of the way of other business.

Mr. COX, of New York. There was a vote against taking it up the other day and I voted with the gentleman and I think it would be kind of him to help me now to take up my bill. This is greater than tobacco or revenue or interstate commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. Not greater than the whole commerce of the country.

Mr. BURCHARD. Tobacco is not in my bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the first business in order under the rules would be the bill in regard to interstate commerce. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] raised the question of consideration upon it and the question is, will the House consider the bill?

The question was put; and on division, there were—ayes 71, noes 87.

So the House refused to consider the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. I now call up the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that that is not the unfinished business until after the morning hour, and we have had no morning hour today.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will allow me to "antagonize" the bill—I believe that is the word.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that the bill is unfinished business. The Chair recollects very distinctly that it was unfinished business.

Mr. COX, of New York. Allow me to refresh the recollection of the Chair. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] called up the bill at a night session and made a speech on it himself. He is the only person who considered it; and that certainly is not properly "consideration by the House." [Laughter.]

Mr. BURCHARD. I suppose if the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] had made a speech upon it, then it would have been considered by the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The fact that it was called up and a speech made on it makes it unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. The RECORD shows that it was made a special order after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The journal clerk informs the Chair that the Journal shows that the bill was called up for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Then I raise the question of consideration upon it now. I desire that the House may take up and consider the life-saving-station bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to raise the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 89, noes 77.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. COX, of New York, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COX, of New York, and Mr. BURCHARD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 90, noes 75.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. COX, of New York, called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COX, of New York. I withdraw my call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report that there are—ayes 90, noes 75. So the House determines to proceed with the consideration of the bill. The bill is to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] will take the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that the bill will be read. It has never been read to the House, and I want to hear it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the bill being read at length.

Mr. CONGER. This is a very good time of the day to have it read.

Mr. BURCHARD. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, so that the House can proceed at once to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule. That will give the fullest opportunity for debate and amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw my call for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill and read the following:

That section 3163 be amended by striking out all after the number thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Every collector within his collection district and every internal-revenue agent shall see that all laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes are faithfully executed and complied with, and shall aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto; and, when specially authorized so to do by the Commissioner, any internal-revenue agent may exercise the power conferred by law upon collectors of internal revenue to examine persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, to administer oaths, and to summon persons to produce books and papers, or to appear and testify under oath before him, and to compel a compliance with such summons under the provisions of section 3175, which are hereby made applicable to cases of disobedience of any summons issued under this section. And it shall be the duty of every collector and of every internal-revenue agent to report to the Commissioner in writing any neglect of duty, incompetency, delinquency, or malfeasance in office of any internal-revenue officer or agent of which he may obtain knowledge, with a statement of all the facts in each case, and any evidence sustaining the same.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding to it that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The said Commissioner may, by notice in writing, suspend from duty any deputy collector, inspector, gauger, or storekeeper, and he may suspend any collector for fraud, gross neglect of duty, or abuse of power. And in case of any suspension of a collector as aforesaid, the Commissioner shall, as soon thereafter as practicable, report the case to the Secretary of the Treasury for such action as he may deem proper.

Mr. SAYLER. I would inquire if this is not entirely new legislation? Is it not conferring upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a power over collectors which he has not heretofore had?

Mr. BURCHARD. All of the paragraph last read, from line 59 on page 4 of the bill to line 84 on page 5 inclusive, is new legislation; it gives new power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

I will add that this is a suggestion made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I myself question whether it is desirable to confer upon him power to the extent that would be given by this amendment if adopted. The Committee of Ways and Means felt that it would be well to submit the amendment for the consideration of the House. It gives power to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to suspend a collector, a deputy collector, an inspector, a gauger, or a storekeeper, in case of fraud, and in such other cases as are mentioned in the amendment.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue holds that there are cases where collectors and other officers might be concerned in a fraud, and in regard to whom the power of suspension should be given. It is an arbitrary power. These officers, especially the collectors, are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Whether a bureau officer, even with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, should have the power of suspending a collector is a question for the House to determine.

Mr. SAYLER. I have great confidence in the gentleman who now occupies the position of Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and I am not inclined to think that he would be disposed to exercise his office arbitrarily. Yet it does seem to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD]—and I want the House to understand that it is his amendment, it is not a proposition from the Committee of Ways and Means, for that committee has not authorized any such amendment to be offered, and I hope the House will bear that fact in mind in regard to this amendment as well as in connection with other amendments that may be offered—it seems to me that the amendment will confer an arbitrary power upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which he should not possess. Unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] can give good reason why the amendment should be adopted I hope the House will not agree to it.

Mr. TUCKER. In the bill as reported from the committee there was a proposition to strike out of section 3163 of the Revised Statutes the substance of what is now offered as an amendment at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In section 3163 of the Revised Statutes will be found these words:

He [the Commissioner of Internal Revenue] may, by notice in writing, suspend from duty any inspector, gauger, or storekeeper, and he may suspend any collector for fraud, or gross neglect of duty, or abuse of power.

Now, the subcommittee, composed of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] and myself, struck out that in the bill which we reported to the Committee of Ways and Means and which that committee directed us to report to the House. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue proposes that we shall re-enact the particular words which were proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. I confess that the power thus proposed to be vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue seemed to me liable to abuse, and I think we agreed that it should not be re-enacted, though the Commissioner of Internal Revenue desired that it should be done. I am myself opposed to the extension of the power.

Mr. BURCHARD. I felt it my duty to call the attention of the House to the proposed change of the law. My own opinion concurred with that of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] that there should be a restriction. The Commissioner, however, thought that in some cases this power should be exercised by him. But as the provision seems to strike unfavorably members of the committee who have examined it, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "thereto," in line 64, down to and including the word "section," in line 74.

The Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And, when specially authorized so to do by the Commissioner, any internal-revenue agent may exercise the power conferred by law upon collectors of internal revenue to examine persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, to administer oaths, and to summon persons to produce books and papers, or to appear and testify under oath before him, and to compel a compliance with such summons under the provisions of section 3175, which are hereby made applicable to cases of disobedience of any summons issued under this section.

Mr. CONGER. Whether it was proper to confer upon a collector such powers as are here conferred, is a question that I do not raise at this time. The inquisitorial powers exercised by collectors of internal revenue are offensive enough to the American people; but here is a provision that any person appointed a revenue agent may be authorized by the collector of internal revenue to exercise powers which are not given to any court in the United States without some restrictions: powers in the examination of persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, to administer oaths, and to summon persons to produce books and papers or to appear and testify under oath before him and to compel compliance.

In my judgment a great part of the odium which has heretofore attached to the internal-revenue laws of the United States has arisen from the fact that secret agents of the Department have been permitted, under powers either granted or supposed to be granted, to go upon the premises of individuals, examine their private papers and books, and to compel them to testify, not in court, but in the private chamber of the agent, in regard to all matters touching their private business. I do not believe the enforcement of the internal-revenue laws of the country requires that any such power shall be given to the wandering agents of the Government—a power which is not exercised by many of the inferior courts of the country, and which we have reason to believe may in the hands of these agents be exercised to the oppression and wrong of the people of the United States.

I make this motion that I may ask gentlemen who are supporting this provision, and especially the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] who is usually so earnestly watchful of the interests of the people, why we should grant to a wandering revenue agent a power which is not given to recognized courts of the United States or of the States, to invade premises, examine private books and papers without limitation, and to inflict penalties for disobedience of summons to appear or refusal to answer and produce papers?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am as ready as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] or any other man can be to limit the powers of these internal-revenue agents; but if the gentleman from Michigan will look at the present law he will find that in section 3163, to which the proposed provision is an amendment, power is given to every supervisor under the direction of the Commissioner "to see that the laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes are faithfully executed," &c. This power is transferred by this provision to the internal-revenue agents who are authorized to be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I think that if gentlemen will compare the provision of the bill with the present law they will find that the Committee of Ways and Means have limited this power of investigation very much. It has certainly been our purpose to limit it so far as was consistent with the requirements of the public service.

The power which is conferred upon the collector of internal revenue "to examine persons, books, papers, accounts, and premises, to administer oaths, to summon persons to produce books and papers or to appear and testify under oath," applies only to the books of parties engaged in distilling; and those books and papers are a part of the public archives, so to speak, of the internal-revenue system. That is to say, every person engaged in distilling has to keep certain books and papers which are open to inspection; and his distilling premises must be open to the inspection of the collector of internal revenue. Now, the only additional provision here is that the power already vested in the supervisor shall be given to these agents who may be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In other words, if the Commissioner should suspect that a collector is permitting improper practices in the distilleries of his district, the internal-revenue agent, under authority expressly given to him, will have power to examine the books which the distiller is obliged to keep for the inspection of the revenue officers.

Mr. CONGER. I will say in reply that these powers conferred upon the collector are conferred upon an officer established by law, appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, having at least some little notoriety in the very mode and manner of his appointment. The powers transferred from the supervisors to these revenue agents were conferred upon an officer who had charge of one or more States, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate whose duties and powers were defined by law, a responsible person known to all. Now, these powers are conferred upon any revenue agent whom the collector may appoint, and upon any revenue agent whom he may authorize to exercise the power which the law gives to the collector. The law may give to that higher officer, the collector, certain powers with some degree of safety, but that they shall be given to every person who may be appointed an agent, not nominated by the President, not confirmed by the Senate, but appointed for a longer or shorter time by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, seems to me to place distillers, for whom I have no particular charity, at the mercy of wandering agents of the Government.

I speak of it because I do believe the great odium and the great trouble which exists throughout the country between the collectors and the collection of internal revenue and those from whom it is collected arises more from the ill-advised efforts of irresponsible men to enforce doubtful provisions of law than it does from the legal exercise of collecting known taxes of the United States by the regularly recognized and known officers of the Government.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I fully concur with the gentleman from Michigan in his views.

Mr. TUCKER. My friend from Missouri will allow me a single word.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. I will merely state that as far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to strike out the power to internal-revenue agents. The only reason we gave the power was at the earnest instance of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who said it was necessary to the faithful execution of the internal-revenue laws. We were willing to concede that much to the wishes of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but we are not pertinacious upon this point.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. As I stated before, I fully concur in what the gentleman from Michigan has said. If these agents of the department were always reliable as the commissioner himself, I would feel no hesitancy in delegating that power, but we cannot find many such men as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I think we had better restrain him from delegating that power to the thousand and one men all over the country who generally, if you invest them with too much power, are likely to abuse it.

Mr. BURCHARD. The power proposed to be conferred here is not conferred upon every internal-revenue agent. The committee in considering this limited it to the cases where specially authorized so to do by the Commissioner. The collector has the power. We cut out the power now given by law to suspend the officers. But if there is a collector or deputy who is in collusion with the men who are defrauding the Government, and one of the agents appointed as a trusted officer to represent the Internal-Revenue Bureau and the Government shall go to the premises he ought to have the power to make the same examination of the books of the distiller or the books of the tobacco manufacturer that the collector has. He should have the same power to enter upon the premises. As it is now he cannot do it without he takes the collector with him, who may be acting against the Government. He must take him along and act under him. We thought the power asked should be granted to that extent that, in a certain case where the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be satisfied the officers were not doing their duty, there the agent may specially be authorized to enter upon the premises and make examination of the books and papers. It is not a general power for the examination of books and papers of every person. It only relates to books and papers of a party who is engaged in the manufacture of tobacco or in the distillation of spirits or fermented liquors. There is where the power is specially given. And the power to summon is limited under section 3175 to cases where the court makes the order for examination.

But, as the gentleman from Virginia says, we have no desire on our part to be pertinacious about this. We agreed with the Department there are cases where there should be this power granted and provided in this bill as suggested by the Internal-Revenue Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. CABELL. I move to strike out the last word. I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] The Commissioner of Internal Revenue already has too much power, and to confer upon him the right to delegate his power to other persons is more than I think this Congress should do. The amendment, I conceive, is a proper one, and I trust the House will vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. This clause as it now stands confers on the internal-revenue agents a power I should not be willing to commit to any but intelligent and discreet persons. These agents in the country are not always of that character and I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HANNA. I apprehend it is the purpose of every good citizen, first, that we shall have a proper system of laws, and then that those laws be rigidly executed. And while the enforcement of certain of our revenue laws may be deemed harsh in certain localities, while those who advocate a rigid enforcement of our revenue laws incur the displeasure sometimes of certain classes, or of persons engaged in a certain class of business, yet the people as a whole desire that these revenue laws shall be enforced.

Now, it does seem to me that my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] as well as my friend from Missouri, [Mr. CRITTENDEN,] have discovered what is a mere scarecrow which need not give any alarm. Let us read what precedes the provision which they propose to strike out:

> Every collector within his collection district and every internal-revenue agent shall see that all laws and regulations relating to the collection of internal taxes are faithfully executed and complied with, and shall aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto.

And then follows that portion of the section which seems to be obnoxious to my friend.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana the question which I desired a few moments ago to address to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.] This is a delegated power, delegated to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Now, would it be proper for us to give him the power to delegate that power to Tom, Dick, and Harry, all over this country?

Mr. HANNA. It would be just as competent for us, I think, in this act to give the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to delegate to an agent what is proposed in this section as it was in the first instance to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to delegate it to a collector of internal revenue—unquestionably so.

Now, I can conceive of a state of things where it may be material to the best interests of every honest tax-paying citizen that this power should be given. It is only a power to be given by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it is not proposed that he is to give it indiscriminately to agents as a class. He is only to give it in those cases where, as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, acting under his oath in the discharge of his duty, he may deem it material to the interests of the country that a given state of things should be thoroughly investigated.

Now, I assume that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in selecting an agent to discharge that duty will select a competent and faithful agent. That agent would be powerless to unearth a given fraud; powerless to subserve the public interest, unless he had authority to make the power given to him effective.

Now, suppose he goes into any given district to investigate a fraud in connection with a distillery, if the agent has not the power to call for the books, so as to make a thorough investigation, in the name of God, what does his investigation amount to? He is powerless to investigate. He is powerless to unearth the fraud. It cannot be pretended that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has the time to go and make personal investigation of these cases; nor will it be pretended that the collectors have time to investigate all these cases.

If, then, it is the purpose of the representatives of the people to see that the laws are enforced, if you intend to collect the tax from the persons engaged in these pursuits, I say give to your agents the power necessary to execute the law and to unearth fraud or crime wherever it may be committed. It is no answer to say that if you do this some man's private papers will be brought to light—that if you do this you will render the law more obnoxious. It will not render a good law obnoxious to effectively and faithfully execute that law. All good citizens are interested in the faithful execution of the law, and it will not do to say that the faithful execution of the law will make it obnoxious. The law itself will become a failure if you take that position.

Mr. BROWNE. I think if gentlemen will reflect for a moment they will find that it is indispensable for the efficiency of the internal-revenue service that this power should be given to revenue agents. This does not contemplate an inquisition into the private books, strictly so-called, of persons engaged in the business of distilling spirits. The law requires that these books shall be kept, and that they shall be open to the inspection of the revenue officers.

Under the old system supervision over these matters was given to a class of revenue officers known as supervisors. They were abolished, I suppose, because they were expensive. But in the recent investigations into the giant frauds that were committed upon the internal-revenue laws in the Northwest it was discovered that these frauds have been systematized; that railroad companies had been subsidized; that railroad clerks had been purchased to keep shipments off their books. Now the law requires that the wholesale dealer and distiller shall keep books stating the amount of spirits he has produced, when he produced them, the amount of material used in their production, when they were sold, with the name, residence, &c., of the person to whom sold; so that by an inspection of that book it can be ascertained how much has been produced and what disposition has been made of it. I undertake to say, unless you can examine the books of the distiller, unless you can ascertain where his shipments have been made, unless you can go into railroad offices, unless you can examine the books of transportation companies, unless you can go into every department of business involved in the manufacture of distilled spirits, frauds will be perpetrated in the future as they have been perpetrated in the past.

I remember in the city of Evansville, where a large quantity of spirits that were manufactured at distilleries were sent to New York, they did not appear upon the distillery books as a matter of course, and you could not find any account of their shipment on the shipping books of the railroad company. The freight was paid and little slips were kept and they were reported to the auditor of the railroad company, but there was no memorandum or statement found anywhere at the railroad depot of the shipment, and it would have been impossible for the Government to unearth these frauds had not the power been given to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to go to the books of the railroad company and examine the books; and I say to gentlemen to-day that if you deprive the Government of this power of examining books and papers in reference to the shipping of distilled spirits and their distillation, you practically stop the collection of the tax upon that product.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CABELL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SCALES. I renew the amendment. No gentleman is more ready than I am to admit the importance of the collection of the revenue. It is important to the country. It is important to the honest traders and distillers that the law should be enforced and the revenue honestly collected; but while that ought to be done, I think it is time in this country that we should be paying some attention to the rights and liberties of citizens.

Now, this is a very high power which is sought to be conferred upon these agents and such agents as now traverse the country. The collector of internal revenue has this power now, and let it reside there. Do not go below him. Do not give any man the power to authorize men who are irresponsible, as many of these men are, to traverse this country from one end to the other for the purpose of summoning men and looking into their affairs and see whether they are violating the revenue laws or not. If in any case there is a suspicion or probable cause for belief that fraud is being committed, there is a remedy. Have the parties carried before the proper officer, the officer appointed by law; but do not give him power to delegate his powers to others. I hope the paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. RIDDLE. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to perfect the section previous to a vote being taken on striking it out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order to perfect that portion of the paragraph which is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. RIDDLE. Then I move to insert after the word "Commissioner," in line 65, the words "upon the recommendation of the collector of the district in which the examination is to be made;" so that it will read:

And when specially authorized so to do by the Commissioner upon the recommendation of the collector of the district in which the examination is to be made, &c.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RIDDLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE. Suppose it turns out, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has cause to believe, that the collector in any district is in collusion with the distillers and he desires to send a special agent to that point without the knowledge of the collector, would it be possible to do it under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RIDDLE. I think not. But now will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. RIDDLE. Does not the law now require the collector to make this examination?

Mr. BROWNE. Not necessarily so; a special agent may do it if appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the object is to clothe that agent with the necessary powers when appointed.

Mr. RIDDLE. I will state the object of my amendment. I do not know but what it is proper that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] should be adopted. But it seems to me that the collector of the district where the examination is to be made should be in some measure responsible for the acts of the agent or for his appointment. Now, in my part of the country I notice that the subordinates of the collector are much less cautious and careful in the performance of their duties than the collector himself. I would be willing to confide a great many powers, and extraordinary powers, to the collector in my own district, but he has subordinates who transcend the law every day. Murders are committed, and most extraordinary proceedings are resorted to, and I think the collector should be in some degree held responsible for the action of these subordinates.

The object I have in view is that the collector himself may recommend the appointment of the agent. I admit that the amendment is open to objection where there is reason to believe that the collector is in collusion with parties who are seeking to defraud the Government. I admit that then it would not be proper.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to say a word in reference to some remarks made by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. DAVIS] and my friend from Virginia, [Mr. CABELL.] If the committee will examine this paragraph as carefully as it was examined by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] on the Committee of Ways and Means and myself, they will find that the only power which is vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to the examination of books, papers, and premises is to examine the books, papers, and premises of parties who are engaged in the subject-matter of taxation. He has no power to examine the premises or the books and papers of any stranger, but to examine the premises of the distiller, to examine the books of any manufacturer who is engaged in the business which is the subject of taxation. Gentlemen will notice that the only power given to these internal-revenue agents is authority to exercise the power which is now vested by the Revised Statutes in the collector of internal revenue. The whole purpose of giving it to any internal-revenue agent, I will say to my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. RIDDLE,] is that if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue thinks the collector is not doing his full duty he can send some agent of internal revenue who will do the work for him and detect any fraudulent collusion on the part of the collector himself.

Mr. RIDDLE. I thought the object was this: that perhaps the duties of the collector might be so multifarious as to render it advisable to transfer this duty to another.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. RIDDLE. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SAYLER. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. SAYLER. I would inquire of the gentleman whether, in case the collector of any district is suspected of dishonest collusion with parties for the purpose of cheating the Government, he would not be subject to discipline by the Secretary of the Treasury, and whether there is not power over him in that respect.

Mr. TUCKER. Only in accordance with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he be authorized to suspend a collector in case of fraud.

Mr. SAYLER. But the Secretary of the Treasury would have power over the collector.

Mr. TUCKER. He would have power to remove him; but he would not remove him upon a mere suspicion.

Mr. SAYLER. Certainly not. But there is a difficulty on the other side of this question, and it is very well put by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER. I am very glad occasionally to agree with that gentleman.

These revenue agents who are sent throughout the districts where large operations in whisky and tobocco are conducted make it their business to oppress business men. I do not say that unadvisedly; I know it. They subject the men who are engaged in this business, and who pay largely the revenue of the country, to all sorts of annoyances, inconveniences, and trouble. Oftentimes they will suspend the run of their distilleries for a day, shut up their establishments, and call for their books in the most arbitrary manner. All this is an outrage.

I do not say that all restraint should be removed and that all men who make whisky and manufacture plug tobacco or cigars are honest. But I do say that the proportion of honest, decent, well-meaning men among that class of people is vastly greater than among your revenue agents, who are sent out as a set of spies, and who generally only want to be bought off.

Mr. HANNA. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. TUCKER. All this is in my time, and my five minutes is about out.

Mr. HANNA. Just a question.

Mr. SAYLER. Certainly.

Mr. HANNA. Does the gentleman know of any distiller who honestly pays his taxes, who at any time ever objects to the production of his books and papers? On the contrary——

Mr. SAYLER. I can answer that question.

Mr. HANNA. On the contrary, does not the complaint come from that class of men against the moonshiners who are defrauding the revenue?

Mr. SAYLER. I know honest distillers who pay their taxes, and pay large amounts of taxes, who have protested to me time and again against the annoyances to which they were subjected by the intrusion of these revenue agents. If the gentleman has any distillers in his district, I think he must know that himself.

Mr. HANNA. I have no distillers in my district who are——

Mr. SAYLER. I thought so.

Mr. HANNA. Who are not anxious to have any officer authorized by law to fully investigate their books and papers, because they pay their taxes honestly. And they are praying Congress to give them relief against the dishonest distillers and the moonshiners who curse that section of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. Has my time run out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I hope some gentleman who has taken up so much of it will take the floor and yield his time to me.

Mr. HANNA. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.]

Mr. PRICE. I desire to say——

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the gentleman will excuse me from yielding further.

Mr. PRICE. I only want to say this: the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] seems to be that agents can go into these establishments and examine the books of the manufacturers of liquors and put them through a regular process of examination and see whether there is anything wrong or not in their business.

Now let me say to that gentleman and to the House that there are in the United States two thousand national banks. Special agents walk into these banks at any time, without a moment's notice; not only examine the books and accounts and every bill receivable and every dollar of cash, but they take possession of the concern for the time being, without anybody's leave, and examine everything. They overhaul everything in every possible direction and keep possession just as long as they think proper to do so. That is the existing law, and, if that can be done in the case of national banks, what possible objection can there be in allowing the same thing to be done in regard to distillers?

Mr. TUCKER. Now I want to say to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] especially that I am as jealous of the rights of the citizen as any man on this floor, and I think he will accord me that merit.

The only thing that he refers to is the power of these agents to call upon persons to testify, and he seems to think that that is a power which may be exercised coercively by one of these administrators of the law. That is not so. I have looked at this matter very carefully. If gentlemen will refer to lines 71 and 72 of this paragraph they will find that while one of these officers may summon a person to appear and testify, if he does not choose to do so he need not come forward; and he cannot be compelled to come, except under the provisions of section 3175 of the Revised Statutes, "which are hereby made applicable to cases of disobedience of any summons under this section."

Now, under that provision, if the collector summons a party to testify or produce his books, and the party does not choose to do so, the collector must go before a judge of the district court and have a summons issued; and if the judge does not think the inquiry a proper one to be made, he has power to act in the matter himself; hence in all these cases the right of examination cannot be enforced except under judicial supervision; and this we look to under the present system.

I admit that the only remaining question is, whether this power should be given as well to these internal-revenue agents at the instance of the Commissioner as to the collector. If gentlemen think that there ought not to be these internal-revenue agents, they must go further and repeal section 3152, which provides that "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, when the necessities of the service so require, employ competent agents not exceeding at any time twenty-five in number," to whom he shall assign certain duties in connection with this very matter.

Now I confess that I entertain the same jealousy which other gentlemen express in regard to sending these internal-revenue agents to spy out abuses in the land; but I do not see any more objection to this than to granting the same power to the collector.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWNE obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. TUCKER. It is further provided in the existing law that the "Commissioner may assign any such agent to duty under the direction of any officer of internal revenue, or to such other special duty as he may deem necessary." I say that the only question is whether it is safe to give to the internal-revenue agent the same power we give to the collector, for we do not propose to give any larger power; and this power of the collector and the internal-revenue agent cannot be exercised coercively upon a citizen except under judicial supervision.

Mr. SCALES. Would it not be very dangerous to intrust such a power as this to the class of men who, as we know, are generally appointed to attend to this business?

Mr. TUCKER. I do not know anything about the character of the agents; I have never had much to do with them; but if the gentleman thinks this power too dangerous, I am willing to vote with him to strike out the provision.

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman will allow me to say that but for the special agent of the United States, who is now the chief of the secret-service division, none of the frauds in Missouri and Indiana would probably have been ascertained.

Mr. RIDDLE. Has not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue this power now where he suspects that the collector is in collusion with the distiller?

Mr. TUCKER. I do not think he has.

Mr. RIDDLE. How, then, have these frauds heretofore been detected?

Mr. SCALES. Can you not under the existing law arrest any man and carry him before a commissioner upon probable cause and have him examined?

Mr. TUCKER. Unquestionably you can upon probable cause where the matter in question is a crime.

Mr. SCALES. Can you not do so when a man is suspected of carrying on an illicit distillery?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCALES. Then, why give this power?

Mr. TUCKER. The power proposed now to be conferred is not to arrest for crime, but to examine into the question whether there are abuses or frauds upon the revenue.

I am not enamored of this provision. As I have stated, we agreed to it at the instance of the Commissioner, who said it was necessary in order to make the service efficient. I for one am willing to vote with the gentleman to strike out the clause.

Mr. CONGER. Having heard the explanations of these gentlemen, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SCALES. I renew the amendment.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before the vote is taken upon this amendment, I desire to say one word in regard to these frauds. When the Revised Statutes were passed we had, in addition to a large number of collectors and internal-revenue agents, ten supervisors with special powers—greater powers than those of the collectors; and very many of the frauds that have been spoken of were detected by the exercise of the power given to those supervisors. It was thought best for the purpose of retrenchment to abolish the office of supervisor and to give those powers to the collectors.

Now, I do not know that among all the collectors of internal revenue we have found any case where there has been actual proof that the collector has been in collusion with the distillers. It has been proved that gaugers and storekeepers and in some cases deputy collectors have thus been in collusion with distillers; but no case has come to my knowledge (though perhaps there have been such cases) where the collector has been concerned in any such transaction. There is now no other officer than the collector who has power, under the authority of the bureau, to make such an examination as is here contemplated. Where there is a suspicion of fraud the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should have authority to designate some person to go to the distillery, to go upon the premises; and the honest distiller will not object. The collector is now the only internal revenue officer having authority under the law to go upon the premises without the consent of the distiller himself. Any special agent sent out to make examination must get the collector to accompany him. Such an agent cannot make examination of the books which the law requires the distiller to keep, though the collector can do so.

It has seemed to us that this additional authority requested by the Commissioner for the detection of frauds should be granted. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to make a single observation. The collector has the right to visit distilleries, but every distiller who wishes to commit a fraud upon the Government has his watch on the outer wall for the coming of the collector, and if there is anything wrong about the distillery then, before the collector reaches it, everything wrong is made right. It is indispensable, therefore, that revenue agents at times should be sent to distilleries, so that men who are unknown can light down upon those engaged in defrauding the Government. For that reason I think it is indispensable power should be given to revenue agents specially appointed to enter upon the premises and make examination.

Mr. HANNA. One word. We have been told, not in any exactly authoritative form, that the income tax is to be restored by this Congress. I submit to you if that is to be done a provision of this sort will be vitally necessary. If you intend to restore the income tax and expect to collect it from those who ought to pay it, I submit to you who are specially interested in behalf of the tobacco and whisky men, you want a provision of this sort to enforce that when it becomes enacted into law. Without some such provision to aid in enforcing the income tax it will become as powerless on a given class of capitalists in my section of the country as the Government is powerless to-day to collect this tax from a certain class of distillers. So, let us look at this in both ways; and I say to each and all who desire an honest enforcement of the law for the benefit of the General Government there is nothing in this objection, and that the provision ought to be insisted upon.

Mr. DEAN. I trust we shall not all desire to have the land flooded with spies.

Mr. HANNA. One word in reply. This is not flooding the land with spies. I repeat again that I never heard of an honest man fearing spies. What honest lawyer ever feared to exhibit his books to any internal-revenue collector or agent? Those who fear spies, as a rule, are those who are seeking to defraud the Government. That is the truth about it. This cry of spies and prying into business comes from those who build little distilleries down in ravines or in cellars, and refuse to pay honest taxes while other large distillers are doing it. The large distillers say, "Here are my books, investigate them; I want to obey the law, and I ask you to enforce it against those who seek to avoid paying their taxes to the Government." It is those who refuse to pay who compel the Government to resort to spies. That is the truth about it.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I am glad the gentleman from Indiana is not afraid of investigation. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEAN. It is not fear alone that controls the judgment with regard to spies. Every manly feeling that any Anglo-Saxon has is utterly against the employment of spies. The gentleman speaks of a coming income tax, and he wants this provision in regard to the collection of that tax. When you get that tax there will not be a merchant in the country who would not be visited by spies. Spies would go to every merchant's counting-room and insist upon examining his books. Such a thing is revolting to every manly sentiment.

The question recurred on Mr. SCALES's amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move the House adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. SAYLER. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been an order for an evening session for debate only.

Mr. BURCHARD. I withdraw the motion to adjourn and will call for tellers, and pending that will move to take a recess.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I hope, by unanimous consent, we will be permitted to take from the Speaker's table a concurrent resolution from the Senate in reference to printing the report of the Polaris expedition.

Mr. BURCHARD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. DUNNELL. What is the business for the evening session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For debate only.

Mr. BANNING. Is that in order when the House is dividing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to take a recess.

Mr. BANNING. But that cannot be done when there is no quorum present.

Mr. MILLS. There was a demand made for tellers.

Mr. EDEN. Is this bill to be considered to-night or is it a meeting for debate only?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For debate only.

Mr. MILLS. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table some resolutions for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn cuts off all other business.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

NARRATIVE OF POLARIS EXPEDITION.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for reference to the Committee on Printing, the bill (S. No. 1208) authorizing the publication, for sale, of an edition of the narrative of the Polaris expedition.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of five thousand extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1876–'77 be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and the resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution of the House for the printing of 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877, with amendments by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing.

There was no objection, and the resolution, with the Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ARMS FOR THE ARMY AND MILITIA.

Mr. BRAGG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5054) to secure the most efficient arms for the use of the Army and militia of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT FOR SERVICES IN DOORKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BOONE. I ask unanimous consent to offer, for reference to the Committee of Accounts, the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the following-named persons, for services rendered in the Doorkeeper's department during the Forty-fourth Congress, the amounts specified in this resolution, to wit: to Robert Coates, the sum of $210, for services rendered from August 15 to 1st day of December, 1876; to Charles Carter, J. Cook Nickens, James Hall, and Henry Hall, each the sum of $180, for services from the 1st day of September to the 1st day of December, 1876.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the reference.

Subsequently the objection was withdrawn, and there being no further objection the resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BALLOU, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family;

To Mr. GARTH, until Monday next;

To Mr. BOYD, until Tuesday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, for three weeks, on account of sickness in his family;

To Mr. SWANN, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. MCCOOK, for four days, on account of important business;

To Mr. TURNER, indefinitely, on account of important business; and

To Mr. WADDELL, for one week from Friday.

SAN ANTONIO AND LAREDO RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Quartermaster-General on the proposed construction of a railway from San Antonio, Texas, to Laredo, and on Corpus Christi, San Diego, and Rio Grande Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

ADDITIONAL SIGNAL STATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report on House bill providing for the establishment of additional signal stations in several States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILTON KENNEDY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter relative to the claim of Milton Kennedy; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] that the House take a recess.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to say just one word. The House has fixed a session to-night for debate only, and I hope gentlemen will not antagonize that order.

The question being taken on Mr. BURCHARD's motion, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., Mr. STEELE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session this evening for debate only, no business to be transacted. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] is entitled to the floor.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the merits of this bill in detail. They have been exhaustively set forth by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] and by others, and I do not care to reinvite the attention of the House to the vast domain and incalculable wealth acquired to the Union by the sacrifices and services of the soldiers of the Mexican war, nor to rehearse their heroic deeds, their trials and endurances in a malarious climate, under the burning rays of a tropical sun. They are a part of the wealth, the history, and heritage of the country. But I must remind the House that these hardships and perils were endured from a spirit of patriotism and not for the paltry pay meted to those gallant soldiers. Allow me to add that when they volunteered to leave home and comfort and to peril their lives and health for their country they had a right to believe, from its past history and practice, that it would in due time extend to them some token of its regard and gratitude, some substantial recognition of its appreciation of their services, to solace and assist them in the evening of their days.

My purpose in taking the floor was to respond to what, with all due deference, seemed to me an ungenerous argument urged against the bill by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAYES,] to wit, that the bill should be rejected because, forsooth, some soldiers would be entitled to the benefit of it who in obedience to honest convictions or local prejudice had joined the rebel army or sympathized with the rebellion.

I bore an humble part in the Mexican war, and was a friend of the Union and adhered to the fortunes of the old flag in our late unhappy sectional strife in a section where it involved a sacrifice of property and popular favor, and brought neither place nor fat contracts, and I hope I may, without offense, be permitted to doubt whether the gentlemen from Illinois and Vermont and their constituents could have been successfully subjected to such a test of their devotion to the Union as were the Union men of my section.

The sensitive loyalty and assured infallibility of those who never cease to pursue their fellow-citizens who have dared to differ with them, and which would withhold from a whole class of deserving veteran soldiers a just and merited pension lest some of them who had dared to differ with it, and to express that difference in words or acts, should receive the benefit of the general provision, might well be cited to the noble conduct of the officers of the army of Spain toward their fellow-officers who had participated in the late Carlist rebellion and fought against them in obedience to local sympathy and honest convictions.

I have somewhere read that after the Carlist rebellion was over and the insurgents had laid down their arms and returned to their allegiance to King Alfonso, that the rebel officers who had left his army and joined the insurgents applied to be reinstated to their former rank and positions in the king's army, and he at first refused their request, and thereupon the officers of the regular army who had sustained the king and conquered the insurgents met and with one accord signified their determination to resign their commissions unless the request was acceded to, and thus compelled King Alfonso to restore their rebel brethren to their ancient rank in his army. I commend this generosity to the members of this House and the officers of the United States Army as worthy of imitation.

Let it not be said that the American people are less generous and have less Christian charity and more intolerance than the historically vindictive Spaniard. I trust there is no one on this floor who, from motives of personal, political, or party advantage, would be willing to keep alive the passions of war, or who, in their sectional hatred, are willing to deliberately give forth utterances which subject the whole Amerian people to the charge of vindictive malignity. Such sentiments may command the approbation of pot-house politicians and contract patriots, but I cannot believe they meet an approving response from the gallant Union soldiers who bore their country's banner aloft upon the red field of battle. I, for one, Mr. Speaker, would scorn to accept the provisions of an act which excluded from its benefits a portion of my fellow-soldiers because of subsequent differences of political opinions.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, (and every patriot should,) that the bitter memories of our late civil war could be forever buried in the waters of Lethe, and that we could only remember the noble deeds, the gallant acts, and the generous conduct of the gallant soldiers of the armies of both sections. They were Americans all; they are now all citizens of the same American Union. I wish we could realize how much more important it is to restore the prosperity and promote the interest and preserve the liberties of the present and future, than to approve the opinions or gratify the prejudices of the past; and now that the war is over we would unite in an earnest and honest effort to cement the Union and make our country one of equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none; a Republic and a Union in fact as well as in name and worthy of all emulation.

I hope the bill will pass and that no distinction will be made between Mexican soldiers because of late differences of political opinion; and in expressing this hope I am sure I voice the sentiments of every true and gallant Mexican soldier who was also a Union soldier.

Mr. Speaker, I have often wondered why a benign Providence permitted the sections in their madness to wage our late cruel civil war; but since I have had a seat on this floor I have arrived at the conclusion that His chief purpose was to furnish the average republican Congressman with something to talk and speak about who else would have been kept in an enforced silence.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have not often trespassed upon the attention of the House, and I would not do so now but for the fact that the section from which I come, its aims, and its purposes are being grossly misrepresented, not intentionally of course, by gentlemen whose feelings and prejudices so warp their judgments that they can form no accurate estimate with regard to anything that relates to the South. It is made manifest by what we have heard time and again upon this floor, and by the utterances of the public press, that it is the purpose of the republican party to seek to regain its lost power in the North by rearousing the passions and hatreds that were engendered by the war, and to this unhappy end there is a systematic and persistent attempt to show that it is the purpose of the South to get control of this Government and then bankrupt and destroy it, by what they are pleased to term "raids upon the Treasury with southern claims."

Our republican friends remember that their party had its birth in an attack upon an institution which unfortunately existed in the South alone, and which, though guaranteed by the Constitution which our fathers made, was one upon which the passions of good men could be easily excited, and upon this sectional question they fed and grew till that institution was wiped out of the Constitution in blood, and seeing now that any patriotism that is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace the whole country will leave them wrecked high and dry upon the political shore, they return to their old device and talk of "southern masters."

I propose to show how utterly unfounded are the statements upon which this attempt is made and how utterly unfair the means by which it is sought to be maintained. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been burdened with figures, and column after column has been published with a reckless (I will not say willful) disregard of the truth that is sad and sickening.

I shall, by an appeal to facts and figures, expose some of the misstatements upon which the charges against the South rest and show how unjust—not to say unpatriotic—these charges are. In doing this, I desire to say that I, for one, make no apology for presenting claims from the South. Any man who has or who thinks he has a just claim against the Government has a right to present it here, and in this respect there can be no difference whether the claimant comes from the South, the East, the West, or the North. It is the duty of Congress to hear and consider every claim that is presented in proper form. If the claim be just and proper it should be paid; if it be one that ought not to be allowed it should be rejected; and in passing upon any claim, as a member of this House, I should scorn myself as mean and worthless if I could be knowingly influenced by the question as to whether the claimants came from the South or from the North, from the East or from the West.

I say, then, in discussing this question, I am making no apology for introducing claims here from the South. Gentlemen from the South stand here with precisely the same rights that gentlemen from the East, the West, or the North, and when they present claims those claims are entitled to the same fair and just consideration as those presented by gentlemen from other sections. The gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HANNA,] in his speech commenting upon war claims, said, (I read from the RECORD:)

> Ever since the suppression of the rebellion the persistence with which this class of claims has been pressed upon the attention of Congress has furnished well-grounded and grave fears in the mind of the people that it is the determined purpose of the democratic party in the event of ascendency to compel the Government to assume and pay all losses and damages resulting from the prosecution of the war in defense of our nationality. Each succeeding year furnishes cumulative evidence in support of the truth of the charge that such is the well-settled purpose of those who control the action of that party. For a time the approaches to the Treasury were cautious, guarded, gradual, and well calculated to deceive the unsuspecting.

Now, sir, this is a broad and unqualified statement from the gentleman from Indiana. He then says:

> I have carefully examined thirty-seven hundred and ten of the bills introduced and the abstract of the character stated of those referred to the Committee on War Claims, I will, by leave of the House, print as part of my remarks.

And the list is published, headed:

> Abstract of war-claim bills introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress.

I have taken pains to count the list and I find the number to be six hundred and thirty-one. To make this terrible array of long columns—six pages of the RECORD—I find that bill No. 415, introduced by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL,] has been repeated just fifty-four times; bill No. 582, by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CRITTENDEN,] four times; No. 878, by Mr. HOUSE, twenty-four times; No. 955, by my friend Mr. VANCE, eight times; No. 1025, by Mr. TURNER, six times; No. 1030, by Mr. CARLISLE, twenty-nine times; No. 1049, by Mr. ATKINS, forty-nine times; No. 1722, by Mr. GIDDINGS, nineteen times; No. 2568, by Mr. WILLIAMS, eight times, and No. 2780, by Mr. CARLISLE, seventeen times.

Of course I will not do the gentleman the injustice to charge that this was done for the purpose of misleading anybody, but it does make the array look imposing, and then, too, it shows how careful was the "examination." But it so happens, as I am informed by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CALDWELL,] that bill 1049, introduced by Mr. ATKINS, and which is divided by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA] into forty-nine parts, was reported back to the House from the Committee on War Claims, and the same bill, appropriating $24,257.31, is charged again in the list to Mr. CALDWELL, thus not only doubling the number many times, but doubling the amount. Now it seems to me that a little careful examination would have sufficed to show not only that Mr. CALDWELL was reporting a substitute, but that the names of the parties were the same. How many more errors there are in the gentleman's "carefully prepared statement" I am unable to say, but I have added up the figures and I find the whole to amount to $5,000,107.06. One would infer, naturally, from the gentleman's speech that all those were southern war claims—"rebel claims," as gentlemen call them—which the "controlling element of the democratic party"—this is his language, not mine—intended to "extort" from the people by "a raid upon the Treasury."

I have already shown the means—I will not say the disingenuous means—by which these claims have been magnified; but that is not the worst of it; I have taken some pains to examine and analyze the character of these claims, not as carefully perhaps as did the gentleman from Indiana and others on that side of the House, but still with sufficient care to find out some things that were strangely overlooked by them in their "careful" examinations. I find in the first place that only $2,573,028.69 of the claims in the gentleman's schedule are from the late Confederate States. I find that ten of his bills are for loyal churches, seven of them in loyal States; one of the bills is for a loyal temperance society in a loyal State; two for loyal academies in loyal States; one for Touro almshouse in Louisiana (possibly this may have been some disloyal charity, I do not know how this is;) one for the loyal State of West Virginia; one for an agricultural association in Kentucky, the State from which my friend near me [Mr. TURNER] comes, a State which sent more Union soldiers to the war, if I mistake not, than Massachusetts.

Mr. TURNER. It sent more than Maine and Vermont together, and yet they would call it a disloyal State.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Certainly my gallant friend from Kentucky has not expressed such sentiments on this floor as have fallen from gentlemen from Maine and Vermont.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have had neither the time nor the patience to examine all the claims in the list published by the gentleman from Indiana with the minuteness and carefulness with which he professes to have done, but I have made quite an extensive inquiry in regard to them and I have been able to find only one claim that originated during the war which is not that of some loyal person—most of them are for loyal republicans. I find a few of them—not one in ten—are for property or services growing out of transactions subsequent to the war.

Now let us take a running review of the gentleman's list of war claims which are going to bankrupt the Treasury. Here it is. [Holding it up.]

To begin with, the very first we find on the list is a claim from the loyal State of Connecticut for $8,655, first introduced into the republican Forty-third Congress by Mr. Kellogg, a republican; and next on the list is a claim for $5,000 from the State of New Jersey. The next comes from Tennessee; there is not a claimant from that State who is not a loyal man. Then there is a claim from Pennsylvania—the State from which our Speaker comes. Then comes New York; and then Maryland with twenty-two claims, all in a bunch and, as I learn from my friend from Maryland, [Mr. WALSH,] they are all the claims of loyal men. Then comes Virginia. Then comes North Carolina, which is a little claim, but North Carolina has been very modest in this respect. Then Ohio comes for one-fourth of a steamboat. Then comes Pennsylvania for $22,927; and then the loyal State of Kentucky with a long array of these claims and the bill H. R. No. 415 which is repeated fifty-four times on the list, and that claim as I learn from my friend [Mr. DIBRELL] is for persons some of whom were soldiers and the widows of soldiers in the Union Army—one of them a widow who lost her husband and two sons in the Union Army.

Mr. SCALES. What does the gentleman mean by saying that the claim has been repeated fifty-four times.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I say that the bill has been repeated fifty-four times upon the list as you see it here, [holding it up,] of course not for the purpose of deceiving anybody, but to make the thing look large. Then comes Kentucky again, and then comes Indiana, the State from which the gentleman [Mr. HANNA] hails; and then comes Illinois, with a claim of $29,000 for losses on account of the steamer S. C. Baker. Then comes the claim of A. L. H. Crenshaw, from Missouri, and that is an interesting case about which I wish to say a word.

This "war claim" was first introduced in the Forty-third Congress. It will be remembered that was a republican Congress. There was a report made by Mr. Cobb, a republican, in which he gives the character of the claim. It was for fifty-five mules of which "he was robbed," I quote from the report, "by United States officers * * * in September, 1863, for the loss of which he claims the Government was rendered liable by subsequently taking possession of them. His claim was referred for investigation to a board of Army officers convened at Kansas City, Missouri, who, after full inquiry into the facts of the case, report that Crenshaw, a licensed cattle-dealer, * * * and an unconditional Union man, was the victim of a conspiracy organized by Lieutenant Lindsay, Eleventh Kansas Volunteers, Wiley Aiken, W. Logan, John Hampton, Andrew Hammond, and Major Plumb, provost marshal, * * * to rob him of his property." The report then details one of the most infamous conspiracies and robberies that ever disgraced humanity, and this is put to the charge of the South. The claim was reported favorably to the Forty-third Congress by Mr. Cobb, a republican, and to the Forty-fourth by Mr. EDEN, democrat, and any one who wishes to read a dark page can find it in the report of the board of Army officers and in House report 819, Forty-fourth Congress, in which the outrages are detailed. Surely if the gentleman from Indiana had been a little more "careful" he never would have laid this claim to the South, and for humanity's sake he would have kept it out of view.

Then comes another long list from Missouri; then Tennessee again; then Ohio comes in for several thousand dollars; and then again comes in one introduced by my friend Mr. CARLISLE, which is enumerated twenty-nine times upon this list, for some property belonging to Union men in Kentucky. Then comes Tennessee again with loyal claims, and then follows Illinois with a claim for chattels furnished to the Union Army, and then comes in Michigan for $62,480 for a steamboat, and then again Ohio, and then there are two cases from Massachusetts. Then comes a claim from Illinois, and then two from Pennsylvania, and then a number from the District of Columbia, and then New Jersey and Pennsylvania again, and then Massachusetts comes in again for property taken. Well, then comes in a claim from Tennessee for the destruction of a Presbyterian church, and I know that my colleague who sits near me [Mr. SCALES] would be in favor of that.

Mr. SCALES. Yes; if it is just.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. My friend knows that the Presbyterian Church would not present any claim that was not just. Then comes another claim from New York and another from Pennsylvania. I only enumerate these claims for the purpose of showing how utterly unjust is this charge about southern claims. I hold in my hand a republican paper, the Cincinnati Commercial, containing a letter written from this city by a republican, giving an account of the claims introduced by Mr. DIBRELL:

> Mr. DIBRELL, from the third Tennessee district, many of the counties of which had more men in the Union than in the confederate army, and which counties are republican to-day, has introduced this session thirty or forty bills for the payment of loyal men, some of them a mere pittance of a few hundred dollars, and none for very large amounts. Yet several republicans have made speeches this session on "southern claims," and they have all paraded DIBRELL's bills before the country as a part of the evidences of a rebel raid on the Treasury. I happen to have a large acquaintance in that district, and every man I know on Dibrell's list was a Union man, and stands ready to prove his unionism. Some of them can prove it by scars on their bodies, received in the Federal service. I submit if this is just treatment of these men. One of DIBRELL'S claimants is now eighty years old; yet, old as he was, he served as captain in the Union Army, and not only that, but piloted over five hundred men through the mountains into Kentucky on foot, and enlisted them under the flag of the Union, where they fought till the close of the war. He sacrificed his property for the Union cause. Yet this man's claim, along with others just as worthy and meritorious, is paraded around the country as a "rebel claim," and made to adorn the beautiful stump speeches that are to serve as campaign thunder in the North this fall. DIBRELL was a "confederate general," to be sure, but he has put in no claim for himself or for any fellow-confederate.

So much for the speech of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HANNA.] But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] came in with a long list of figures, and I have taken some pains to analyze his table also. Here is one introduced into the Senate by Senator HARRIS for the relief of James Clift, of Tennessee, and the same bill is introduced into the House by Mr. DIBRELL, and repeated twice; that is, it is made to speak three times in the list. This James Clift was a captain in the Union army, and that is one of the disloyal claims that are going to bankrupt the Treasury. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I only know in regard to these claims what I learn from such information as I can gather from the bills and from gentlemen who introduce them. Here is one, for $100,000, of Eugene Leitensdoerfer, of Missouri, for services rendered to Colonel Doniphan, in his great Santa Fé expedition, more than thirty years ago. I find also upon the list a bill for the removal of the political disabilities of somebody, and that is put down as a war claim. And if the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois had examined the bills which they include in this array of southern claims, they would have found that more than one-third of them were for pensions to soldiers, and not one of them to a confederate.

They would have found that nearly every one of these claims was the claim of a Union man. There is a claim, and a large one, for $135,500, for citizens of Brenham, Texas. That is a large amount, but that claim originated fifteen months after the war. There was a Major Smith, I think his name was Smith, commanding United States troops at Brenham, in Texas, and his soldiers went to a colored ball, broke up the ball, and there was a riot, and the town was burned down. The proof goes to show that it was burned down at least with the sanction of the commanding officer. In a report to be found in Executive Document No 145, third session of Forty-first Congress, will be found a full account of this case. It stamps Major Smith with infamy, and I have been told that afterward, not for this offense however, he was dismissed from the Army, but I do not know how this is. He certainly ought to have been punished.

That is one of these claims which occurred long after the war and had nothing at all to do with the war. Five of these bills are for pensions to Mexican soldiers. Then comes my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] with a bill for the widow of a Union soldier; and there is one for the relief of Alden M. Woodruff, of Little Rock, Arkansas, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ALDRICH;] it is a bill for $225,000. I would like to know what sort of a rebel in Arkansas the loyal gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] would introduce a bill for? I apprehend it will not be found that he was a very disloyal man, for if he was the gentleman from Illinois would not seek to commend himself to the favor of his republican constituents by introducing a bill for the relief of any such person. Then comes a bill for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others, the same which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HANNA] repeated so many times. Then there is one introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARTRIDGE] for the relief of James Johnson, late collector of the port of Savannah. That collector had a deputy collector, a loyal man, who ran away with some Government money.

By the way, I make here a statement, astounding as it may seem, and which I would not have believed if I had not found it to be so. During the last three or four Congresses there has been more money appropriated to meet embezzlements by subordinates in the employ of the Government than has been allowed for the whole State of North Carolina. Well Johnson, the collector, wants relief for the money stolen by his deputy.

Then here is one introduced by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] for the relief of James Roberts. It is charged here to Mr. ELLSWORTH, my friend from Michigan, who reported it from the Committee of Claims.

Then here is one which was introduced by my friend from Missouri [Mr. CRITTENDEN] for the relief of certain soldiers of the Eighth Cavalry, State of Missouri. He tells me that they were all Union men.

Then I find one introduced by Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, for the relief of the heirs of General Count Pulaski. Now, I suppose that, Count Pulaski having fought in our first rebellion, it is thought right that the bill for his heirs should be charged to the South in this last rebellion. Then there is one introduced by Mr. COOK, of Georgia, for the relief of the tobacco trade. [Laughter.] There is one to authorize the erection of a light-house. Then there is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] for the relief of a gentleman who was entitled, as he alleges, to commissions under a contract for gathering up cotton.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] says in his speech that these claims amount to $300,000,000. And he repeats that three times.

Now, I say that is such a mistake that it ought not to have gone out from this Hall. All the claims put together, that have been introduced here by all the Representatives from the South, will not amount to anything like that. And if you put in all the appropriations for rivers and harbors and for the improvement of the Mississippi, they would not altogether make three hundred millions, nor one-tenth of it. Yet the gentleman says:

> Why, sir, the idea that the Government owes and ought to pay all damages occasioned by the war throughout the South is so firmly imbedded in the southern mind that it will take several generations to root it out. No man, I care not how great his ability, can be a leader among the southern people unless he openly indorses this idea. There is not a southern gentleman on this floor who would not be overwhelmingly defeated at the coming election if he should dare to stand up here and declare that these claims ought not to be paid.

I am utterly astounded when I hear such statements. I defy the gentleman to name a man on this floor who ever said that he was in favor of making good all the damages sustained by the South in the war. I defy him to find a southern man who has taken an oath to support the Constitution who ever claimed any such thing. I do not mean every one who will say that he was loyal, because I do not vouch for the loyalty of all those who claimed to be such during the war. But I defy him to find a man who fought in the southern army and who has sworn here to support the Constitution who will say that he is in favor of paying for all the damages so sustained. I know that it is sometimes stated that if the democratic party gets into power the Government will be made to pay for all the negroes and other property lost by the South and even the confederate debts, and this has had some effect in some sections; but the charge is so absurd, so preposterous that the man who believes it is to be pitied for want of sense rather than censured.

I say there is not a man on this floor who would come back here from any district in a southern State if he were to go there and declare that he was in favor of adding to the burden of debt now resting upon this Government by the payment of all the losses and damages sustained by the South in the late war.

But there are many claims that are just, and all those claims that are just stand here precisely as they would if they came from any other section of the country. So much for that.

By the way, he says he has evidence in the form of a memorial from a gentleman from North Carolina, (Dr. Ford,) who says that he is in favor of paying all the damages on both sides. Now, I have inquired among my colleagues and friends, and no one from North Carolina has ever seen a memorial presented here signed by a living man asking any such thing.

I have no doubt that Dr. Ford is a very clever gentleman, but I defy the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] to show a single memorial ever signed by anybody for such purpose. He says that two editions of Dr. Ford's pamphlets have been exhausted; it was so popular. It may be popular with the gentleman, but I am sure it was not so in North Carolina. There is nobody there who expects all these damages by the war to be paid; and certainly no one there ever will get paid for such damages until the Constitution is amended. And the gentleman need have no fear about that, for it would require a larger vote than the South has got to do that. Sir, how puny and puerile is such a charge! But, sir, I desire also to review some remarks made by my good friend from the Committee of Claims, [Mr. CUMMINGS.] He joins in the howl against southern claims.

The first count in the charge of the gentleman from Iowa is this: That we want to restore to the pension-roll the soldiers of the Mexican war, about whom my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] spoke so eloquently just now, and I wish my friend from Iowa could have heard him. He seems to think it is a monstrous thing that we should endeavor to secure for the maimed and crippled and disabled soldiers of the Mexican war who may happen to live in the South precisely the same benefits accorded to the maimed, crippled, and disabled soldiers who live in the North

Why, sir, it does seem to me strange, in view of the fact that there are $28,122,683.48 voted as pensions, all of which with insignificant exceptions go to the people of the North—all of it—we do not complain of that; we have nothing to say about that—but it does seem strange to hear this objection in view of that fact. How magnanimous is it that gentlemen who are getting $28,000,000 and upward for their own section shall not be willing to let a few old, crippled Mexican soldiers of the South, who fought to bring States into this Union, have at least a little of it. It does seem to me if my friend from Iowa had listened to the remarks made by my friend from Kentucky he would reconsider that matter and conclude that there was no great danger to the Treasury from these poor, maimed, crippled Mexican soldiers.

I trust my friend does not represent the sentiment of the people of Iowa, but if he does may the Lord help their poor souls!

Again, my friend goes on and says "there is the Texas Pacific scheme for the special benefit of the South, representing $30,000,000 or more." My friend has an eye as keen as an eagle's to see any claim which comes from down toward the South, but he is as blind as an owl at noonday when he looks to his own big section.

But let us see how this matter stands. Thirty millions and more for the special benefit of the South, says he, for the Texas Pacific. There is a great mistake in saying that is for the benefit of the South alone. California and the Northwest are interested in it and New York and Pennsylvania are as much interested in it as North Carolina and South Carolina. So it is not for the special benefit of the South.

But let us stop to inquire how generous a thing it is in gentlemen from the great Northwest to make this objection. I have taken the pains to look over the list of bonds in the Treasurer's report and I find that $64,623,512 have been issued in bonds for railroads, all of which have gone to northern and northwestern railroads, every dollar of it, and yet $30,000,000 for the South, less than one-half, disturbs my friend.

But that is not all. In looking at Spofford's American Almanac, where I find a good deal of statistical information, I find 128,066,374 acres of land have been voted to railroads in the Northwest. This land at $1.50 per acre would amount to $192,000,000 in round numbers. All that has gone to the Northwest. Add that to $64,000,000 in bonds and we have $256,000,000, more than the whole State of North Carolina is worth. The land given to railroads in the Northwest is nearly four times as much as the whole State of North Carolina. Yet the gentleman says it is monstrous in the South to ask for $30,000,000 for the Southern Pacific Railroad when in point of fact it is not a southern measure any more than it is a western or northwestern measure; it is a national measure.

Look again at the generosity of my friend from Iowa; that glorious young State—and I am proud of the young States as well as the old States of the Union—Iowa, a State not as old as the gentlemen who come here to represent it upon this floor; that State of Iowa has received in money only the little sum of $3,250,824.57, and it has received 3,252,000 acres of land, which at $1.50 per acre would make $5,150,528. That young State has received in land and money more than two and one-half times as much as the State of North Carolina, one of the original thirteen States, has received since the war of Independence or during all the years coming down from 1776. Is that fair and just?

He says in addition that bills are pending for the improvement of southern rivers and harbors other than the Mississippi River to the amount of over $5,000,000. Had my friend examined he would have seen that less than one-half of that sum for southern States is in the river and harbor bill which has passed the House. If he will look near home he will find that Wisconsin gets $408,000 and Michigan $567,000, while North Carolina gets only $135,000. And here again my friend shows his keen eye for the South and his blind eye for the North.

Then again the cotton tax is put down at $68,000,000, and North Carolina is charged with $1,959,704 of that, being a little more than one-third of what Iowa has got in the shape of public lands. As to this cotton tax I have not time to enter into an explanation now, but I will say the receipts are held largely by northern men who bought the cotton, paid the tax, and a large portion of it would not go back to the South.

The question has been before the Supreme Court, and that court, if I mistake not, was equally divided upon the question of its constitutionality. I myself should be perfectly willing to abide the decision of the courts upon this as upon all other questions. I hope the gentleman will not find fault with us for believing the tax unconstitutional when republican judges of the highest court in the land concur with us. But I must say to the gentleman that no one in my State troubles himself about this tax half so much as he does. It may be some capital to him; it is none to us.

Then again we are told that there is a large amount of claims for captured and abandoned property which the gentleman puts down at $24,251,269.

Now, with regard to that I have only this to say, that the Supreme Court of the United States, a court to whose decisions gentlemen should be willing to bow, has declared that that amount is in the Treasury as a trust for those who may be entitled to receive it. And I would like to ask my friend if it is a tax upon this Government to pay over to men property to which they are entitled? If, as the Supreme Court says, it belongs to the individuals who are the owners when they prove their claims, is there an honest man who would say they are not entitled to it? And with what propriety can that be put down as one of these claims?

Well, sir, I will hurry on. I will publish with my remarks a short list giving in contrast the appropriations that have been made for the Southern States and those for the Northern States, respectively, taking it from the speech of my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] and to that I will add $13,346,000 added by the bill of my friend from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] since Mr. MONEY'S speech was made.

I know that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] said that he was misrepresented in regard to his magnificent bill. But then just think of two basins, one at Memphis and the other at Saint Louis, with granite sides and bottoms, large enough to harbor fifty seagoing vessels, and then canals sufficiently large for two ocean steamers to pass each other from the mouth of the Mississippi to Saint Louis, with arms to Pittsburgh, to the lakes, and to Omaha. It is a magnificent scheme, entirely too large for my comprehension.

I invite the attention of the House to the following:

Statement showing the amount of money expended by the Government of the United States from the adoption of the Constitution to 30th of June, 1873, in each State and Territory of the Union, for navy-yards, custom-houses, court-houses, and other public buildings; for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and for the construction of forts, arsenals, and armories, railroads, canals, and wagon-roads.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] then publishes a table showing in detail the claims introduced into this Congress for the Northern States. I will not publish the table, but the aggregate is $1,569,122,035 13

Add the bill of my friend from Illinois 13,346,000 00

Making the sum of 1,582,468,035 13

This is more than five times the sum charged to the South by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAYES,] and at least fifty times as much as the true amount of southern claims presented to this Congress.

The bills reported favorably by the republican Committee on War Claims at the first session of the Forty-third Congress were one hundred and eight, amounting to $5,912,790. The number reported favorably at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress by a democratic committee was fifty-one, and the amount $215,361. These facts ought to show our northern friends that the Treasury is much safer in democratic than in republican hands.

But this is not all. Under the law no war claims can be paid to any but loyal people. Our republican friends would require democrats to be particularly observant of this law. Let us see what Mr. John Sherman, now Secretary of the Treasury, said in his campaign speech in Ohio in 1876:

When the war closed innumerable claims against the United States were made from the lately rebel States, and Congress in the most liberal spirit made provision for the payment of all that by the well-settled rules of civilized war could be properly made against the United States. The officers of the Departments, Supreme Court, the Court of Claims, and the southern claims commission were authorized to adjust and pay different classes of claims, and Congress passed many acts for equitable relief; so that it may with safety be said that more than $100,000,000 was paid after the war was over to citizens of the South for losses caused by the rebellion.

Now all this sum was paid of course by republicans, but since 1876 our republican friends have become more careful. In the seventh general report of the commissioners of claims, for instance, they have devised a long list of questions that would exclude from that court nearly every man and woman in the South who has any heart. There are twenty-two questions put to female claimants. One of them is:

Did you ever belong to any sewing society organized to make clothing for confederate soldiers or their families, or did you assist in making any such clothing, or making flags or other military equipments, or preparing or furnishing delicacies or supplies for confederate hospitals or soldiers?

This would exclude every good woman in the South. I never yet knew a woman who was not willing, when she could, to administer to the wants of sick soldiers in the hospitals, whether they were confederate or Union soldiers. I can say that of a truth for the noble, generous women of the South.

At my request, Mr. Smith, the excellent and efficient clerk to the Committee of Claims, has prepared a statement of the claims referred to that committee. I will not repeat the details, for, without doubling, it would make a list nearly as large as that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HANNA;] but I can, with perfect safety, vouch for the accuracy of Mr. Smith, and I give the result as follows: whole amount of claims, $5,373,731.23, of which $4,069,527 are from the North and only $1,304,203.31 are from the Southern States. The States of Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, and this District are included in the Southern States.

Thus largely over one-third of the population of this country are represented before that committee by much less than one-fourth of the claims. And yet my friend from Iowa thought that little matter of $43,000 that came from North Carolina was an evidence of the "southern raid" to bankrupt the Government. And when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was making his speech the gentleman from Iowa felt it his duty to call attention to that enormous claim of the State of North Carolina, but he was sweetly oblivious to the fact that more than two-thirds of the claims before that committee were for northern people. If the gentleman had made an inquiry of our clerk he would have found that much the larger proportion of these claims belonged to the North; that they belonged to the North in the proportion of nearly four to one, putting Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri with the South.

But, not only is the amount of appropriations for various purposes largely in favor of the North, but the revenue system has been made to operate mainly against the South by a system of unequal taxation. I shall quote the preamble and resolution offered by me on the 15th of January last, to show how unequally this works:

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to present the following preamble and resolution, and, as it is a subject in which a great many people take a deep interest, I ask that they be read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas it appears from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1876 that the whole amount of tax collected from internal revenues for that year was $115,417,747.33, of which sum the State of Illinois, with a property valuation, according to the census of 1870, of $2,121,680,579, paid $25,582,960.71, while the State of New York, with a property valuation of $6,560,841,264, paid only $14,655,081.89; the State of Ohio, with $2,235,430,300, paid $16,610,446.09, while Pennsylvania, with $3,808,340,112, paid only $5,981,273.46; the State of Kentucky, with $604,318,552, paid $7,648,612.13, while the State of Massachusetts, with $2,132,148,741, paid only $2,750,653.61, thus showing that Kentucky, with less than one-third the wealth of Massachusetts, paid nearly three times as much of said tax; the State of Virginia, with $409,588,133, paid $7,313,021.13, while the States of Maine and Rhode Island, combined, with $645,121,317, paid only $314,826.48, or less than one-thirtieth, in the proportion, paid by Virginia; the State of North Carolina, with $260,757,245, paid $1,079,345.69, while Vermont, with $235,349,553, paid only $48,097.15, thus making it manifest that the burdens of this tax are unequally and unjustly distributed and made to bear most heavily upon States least able to pay; and

"Whereas it appears from said report that the whole amount assessed was $136,756,374.40, while the amount collected was only $115,417,747.33, showing a loss of $21,338,627.07, while the cost of collection was $4,239,288.22; and

"Whereas the temptations to frauds, evasions, and violations of said law, by reason of its unequal impositions and the modes of its collection, have tended to demoralize the country and diminish that respect and reverence for law which have characterized the American people; and

"Whereas an equal apportionment of the burdens of taxation among the different States and sections of the Union is the dictate of sound policy as well as of justice: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means, in providing the means for defraying the expenses of the Government, be instructed to provide for the total abolition of the internal-revenue system, or, if this shall be found impracticable, then to so modify and change the same as to impose its burdens equally upon all sections, and, by reducing the taxes now imposed and providing a less obnoxious mode of collecting the same, remove the just ground for complaint which now exists, and remove also the temptations to fraud, evasions, and violations which have brought reproach upon the whole system."

Mr. COVERT. I object.

The facts set forth in the preamble to this resolution show how unequally and unjustly the internal-revenue tax operates. They show that the burdens of this tax are not fairly distributed. This tax falls with heavy weight upon the tobacco and agricultural States. North Carolina, for instance, pays in proportion to its wealth more than twenty times as much as Maine or Vermont or Massachusetts, and Virginia pays thirty times as much. We have endeavored to get this changed, and I had hoped that a just sentiment would have corrected the inequality, at least as far as this House is concerned, before now, but thus far we have appealed in vain.

I know it is said the consumer pays the tax. This is true where the tax is moderate and reasonable, but not true when the tax is three or four times the value of the article taxed. It then paralyzes production, as can be illustrated by its effect upon tobacco. Let us examine this a moment.

In 1850, according to the census, the tobacco crop was 200,000,000 pounds. In 1860 it had increased to 434,000,000 pounds, largely more than doubling in ten years. After the tax was imposed the crop fell off to 263,000,000 pounds, as appears from the census of 1870. I give round numbers. And according to Mr. Dodge, the statistician of the Agricultural Department, in 1871 it was 263,196,100 pounds, and in 1874 as low as 178,355,000 pounds, or more than 20,000,000 pounds less than the crop of 1850, and about one-third of the crop of 1860. The largest crop raised since the imposition of the tax—that of 1876—was only 381,002,000 pounds, or 53,000,000 less than the crop of 1860. So much for the production.

Now, look at the price: Mr. Spofford, in his valuable American Almanac, a work that entitles him to the thanks of the public, has given the average price of twenty-five leading staples of the country for fifty-three years, taking the month of January in the New York market. You will see from this table that beef, butter, cheese, ham, lard, coffee, mackerel, molasses, pork, bar-iron, rice, sugar, hops, and leather have sold since the war at prices ranging from 25 to 250 per cent. higher than before the war, and cotton, corn, flour, and other articles are as high or higher. Coal, imported pig-iron, and tobacco are the only articles in the list that have fallen below the average with war prices. For thirty-seven years preceding the war, the average price of leaf tobacco for the month of January in New York was 16 cents; for the last seven years (since the tax) it has been less than 8½ cents, or about one-half of what it was before the war. If the price of leaf-tobacco now were equal to what it was before the war, the crop of 1876 would be worth in the market to the farmers about $60,000,000; instead of that it is worth to them only about $30,000,000. Can this falling off be attributed to increased supply? Of course not; for we have shown that since the war the crops have also fallen off, showing the anomaly of decreased price with decreased supply; in other words, the tax is destroying the production and is a burden upon the producer as unjust as it is ruinous, for it is, as my colleague [Mr. ROBBINS] well said, "destroying the goose that lays the golden egg."

I am also indebted to my friend [Mr. SMITH] for a statement showing that in the Forty-second (republican) Congress, bills were passed allowing claims to the amount of $2,498,172.35, while the Forty-fourth (democratic) Congress passed only $1,378,267.43, making $1,119,904.93 more passed by the Forty-second (republican) Congress than by the Forty-fourth (democratic) Congress. This included claims from the Court of Claims, the southern claims commissioner, and the Commissary and Quartermaster-General's departments. The whole amount of claims allowed other than those, by the Forty-second Congress, was $989,550.68, of which $860,014.06 were from the North, and only $129,536.44, or less than one-sixth, were from the South. Of the amount appropriated by that Congress $62,019.15 were allowed for embezzlements of subordinates in the pay of the Government, that is, to make good money stolen.

A similar statement for the Forty-third (republican) Congress shows whole amount of private claims allowed was $2,541,238.65 and by the Forty-fourth (democratic) Congress, $1,566,232.42, making a difference of $974,956.23.

But that is not all; deducting the claims from the Court of Claims, the southern claims commissioners, and the Commissary-General and Quartermaster-General's departments and the Forty-third republican Congress paid claims to the North amounting to..... $818,088 65
To the South amounting to..... 90,514 34

Excess to North over South 727,574 31

That is more than nine to one. But that is not the worst. The Forty-third Congress passed bills to the amount of $247,968.28 to make good losses by the defalcations and embezzlements of subordinates for the relief of various officers. That is, leaving out the claims from the Court of Claims, southern claims commissioners, and Commissary and Quartermaster-General's departments, the Forty-third Congress paid to relieve officers for defalcations and embezzlements $247,968 28
For South..... 90,514 34

157,453 94

That is, if you exclude loyal claims, the Forty-third Congress allowed and paid (for it has all been paid) more money to make good such defaults as are contained in the extract below from Senate Report No. 236, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, than was paid to all the South. The report refers to bills to relieve officers for defaults (that is, the stealing) of deputies, &c.

William J. Patton, collector of internal revenue, second district of Arkansas, $36,081.88; S. S. Bailey, collector of internal revenue, fourth district of Michigan, $1,752.23; E. B. Pendleton, collector of internal revenue, fifth district of Virginia, $26,476.28; J. L. Thomas, jr., collector of customs, Baltimore, $27,540.25; F. E. Spinner, United States Treasurer, default of Seth Johnson, $37,894.20; also for default of F. A. Marden, $11,413.97.

The following cases are similar in principle:

E. H. Webster, (16 Stats. at L., 703,) John T. Mason, (17 Stats. at L., 704,) R. R. Bolling, (17 Stats. at L., 768,) Logan H. Roots, (16 Stats. at L., 699,) W. B. Thomas, (18 Stats. at L., 555,) Thomas Hillhouse, (18 Stats. at L., 532,) Willard Davis, (18 Stats. at L., 533.)

These were the defaults of subordinates; there were millions that were never made good. Mr. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury, gives, in Executive Document No. 140, Forty-first Congress, third session, a "statement of balances due from collectors of internal revenue who were out of office on the 30th day of June, 1870." This statement was made on the 18th day of February, 1871. It shows the amount of balances on that day to be $20,700,983.33. A portion of this was made good by the securities of the collectors and perhaps other sums were paid, but a large portion of it was never paid. Joshua F. Bailey, of New York, for instance, absconded, March 15, 1870, nearly twelve months before the statement was made. He was behind nearly $1,200,000.

Mr. Speaker, I have another table which I have prepared, and which shows some interesting facts.

A comparative statement of the expenditures of the public money on account of miscellaneous expenditures during the presidential election years 1864, 1868, and 1872, and the next preceding and the next succeeding year to each election, respectively.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

Fiscal year—	Amount.	Increase.	Decrease.
1863-'64	$27,572,216
1864-'65, election year	42,989,383	$15,417,167
1865-'66	40,603,114		$2,376,269
1867-'68	53,009,867
1868-'69, election year	56,474,061	3,464,194
1869-'70	53,237,461		3,237,600
1871-'72	60,984,757
1872-'73, election year	73,328,110	12,343,353
1873-'74	69,641,593		3,686,517

Showing an increase in the miscellaneous expenses of the Government for the three election years over the years preceding each to the amount of $31,224,714 and an excess over the years succeeding each of $9,300,386. I have compiled this statement from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1876, and any one wishing to verify the figures can do so by referring to page 16 of that document.

It will be observed that in the Secretary's report for the year ending June 30, 1874, the amount is put down at $85,141,593; but this includes $15,500,000, as the Secretary says, expended under the Geneva award, which should be deducted, leaving the amount I have stated for that year. This is a statement of what the Secretary calls miscellaneous expenses only, and it is pretty good miscellany.

Now let us examine the receipts and see how the accounts stand. Take the receipts from internal revenue:

Fiscal year 1867–'68	$191,087,589
Fiscal year 1868–'69, election year	158,356,460
Fiscal year 1869–'70	184,899,756
Decrease	32,731,129
Increase	26,543,269

Showing the receipts for the election year to be over $32,000,000 less than the year preceding, and over $26,000,000 less than the year succeeding. These figures can be verified by reference to page 12 of the same report.

I have not referred to the last presidential election, because the appropriations having been under the control of a democratic Congress, our republican officials were limited in their resources, and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1877, shows the net ordinary expenses of the Government to be $144,209,963 against $164,857,813 for the year ending June 30, 1876. That is a decrease in the ordinary expenses of the Government of just $20,647,850; and this result is due to a democratic House. These figures can be verified by reference to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1877, page 17.

Is it simply a coincidence that during the three presidential years I have named the miscellaneous expenditures of the Government were largely in excess of the preceding and succeeding years? Is it a mere accident that the receipts from internal revenue were more than $32,000,000 less than the preceding and $26,000,000 less than the succeeding year of the presidential election? No, they were not mere coincidences, not mere accidents; there was a reason for it, and it was this: the republican officials acted and treated the Government as if it had been the property of the republican party. The revenue officers and marshals and agents of the Government and all the machinery of the Government all over the country, instead of being employed in the interest of the public, were employed in the interest of the republican party, spending the public money to the amount of millions, thus increasing the expenditures, and neglecting the duties of their offices, and thus diminishing the receipts.

No one can estimate even approximately the loss to the Government resulting from the maladministration of its affairs under republican rule. I make the charge, and I propose to make it good, that if all the revenues of the Government had been honestly collected and disbursed we would to-day be without a public debt.

According to the report made to the Forty-second Congress by the civil-service commission appointed by President Grant it is calculated "that one-fourth of the revenues of the United States are annually lost in the collection." This is the conclusion reported by seven distinguished gentlemen, republican gentlemen, with George William Curtis at their head.

Mr. John Sherman, in a speech made in 1876, wished to charge the administration of Andrew Johnson with $182,000,000 lost in one year in the collection of revenue from distilled spirits alone, and this was placed to the charge of a democratic administration, when everybody ought to have known that Mr. Johnson was elected by republicans, that the Senate and House were more than two-thirds republican, that his Cabinet was republican, and that he was allowed no power in the control of the administration, not even to the extent of removing one of his own Cabinet advisers or a defaulter from office. The collectors and revenue officers and agents were republicans.

Any one who will take the pains to examine the statistics relating to the collection of customs and internal revenue will readily see that the estimate of Mr. Curtis and his associates as to the revenue lost to the Government is not too high, and there has been but little improvement since their report. We have shown how the expenses increased and the collections decreased during the years of presidential elections. The report of the Fifth Auditor for the year ending June 30, 1876, shows the aggregate internal-revenue assessments to amount to the sum of $136,756,374.40, and the amount collected, $115,417,747.33; difference between the amount assessed and the amount collected, $21,338,627.07. Now there are no exemptions of any sort as against taxes, and there is no reason why the amount assessed should not be collected. The expenses of collecting this internal revenue amount to the goodly sum of $4,233,288.22; but where do these $21,000,000 go? Is it lost by carelessness? How much of it is in the shape of abatements? And what are these abatements for? Do favorites and political partisans reap the benefit? Are the public or official morals of the country improved by it? Any one who will examine the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1876, page 424, can verify the figures I have given. They need explanation.

But we have seen, from the highest republican authority, the estimate that one-fourth of the revenue never finds its way into the Treasury, and I think they underestimate the loss. Now, if this is correct, and I think no one can doubt that it is below the mark, it can be shown from official data that enough has been lost to the Government to pay the entire national debt. This is a startling statement, but let us see if it is sustained. Any one who will take the pains to add up the figures to be found on pages 11 and 12 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1877 will find that since the republican party came into power the net ordinary receipts of the Treasury have been $5,057,869,221.65, full nineteen-twentieths of which is derived from customs and internal revenue. This is a very large sum and it is not easy to comprehend it, but we have seen that only three-fourths of the revenue finds its way into the Treasury, the other fourth is lost—lost by carelessness; lost by stealings; lost by neglect; lost by rings and combinations of rogues, of which the Saint Louis disclosures, though showing millions in one city, was but as a drop in the bucket. Now, if $5,057,869,221.65 be all that has gone into the Treasury, and that is, as we have shown from high authority and no one ought to doubt the fact, only three-fourths of what ought to have gone there, by a very simple rule in arithmetic we can ascertain what the other fourth—the lost fourth—is, it is just $1,685,956.21.

But this loss was through the period of republican rule, and interest should be added in order to determine the full extent of it; this by a fair estimate will amount to at least $800,000,000, making the aggregate over $2,485,000,000. It will thus be seen that if the revenues of this Government had been fairly and honestly administered more than enough would have been saved to discharge the public debt. It is true that there would not now be quite so many millionaires, nor quite so many tramps and beggars, both to a great extent the legitimate growth of republican rule produced by legislation in favor of a class against the interest of the millions. There would be no bonds creating wealth to the amount of hundreds of millions that pays no tax but is supported and maintained by tax upon the labor of the many. The incomes of some people would not be quite so large, but then they would not labor under the fear of an income tax, for none would be needed. There would be no unjust taxes upon tobacco and the fruit of the orchard and other industries, for it would not then be needed to pay the golden interest of the bondholder. Peace and happiness and prosperity would prevail throughout the land, and we should hear of no strikes nor threats of labor vs. capital.

It is to divert attention from all these sins of commission and omission that the old cry is raised against the South, and gentlemen from that section well understand that, and we wish our friends in the North not to be deceived by misrepresentations in regard to the people of the South. Our people want peace; they wish to see prosperity again; they long and pray for a good and honest administration of the Government, and they despair of getting it until a change by dismissing from control the party that has had power for the last seventeen years.

The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. JOYCE,] in his very bitter speech uttered some time ago, could give the South no credit for sincerity when it declared its acceptance of the situation and its desire for a restoration of harmony and good feeling between the sections. If I supposed that he represented the prevailing sentiment of the North I should utterly despair of such restoration.

The language used by him and other ultra gentlemen on that side is in my judgment as unwise as it is offensive, as unjust as it is insulting. He says, "I can forgive the treason, but I can never commend the traitor." He can forgive the crime, but not the criminal; pardon the sin, but not the sinner. This is a new development of the beauties of Christian statesmanship. And even the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has a relenting heart, and in consoling tone and manner, that should fill our souls with everlasting gratitude, can remind us that in his opinion "it would have been a pitiful and miserable close after the magnificent contest" to have had "struggling wretches kicking out their lives on the gallows." But to return to the gentleman from Vermont. He says "the people of the North will no longer listen enchanted as they have done to this siren song of peace and reconciliation while the political fetters are being forged for their limbs." The South "forge fetters" for northern limbs! How absurd the thought! The idea would be as foolish on the part of the South as it would be cowardly on the part of the North and in the name of the South and in behalf of the manhood of the North I repel it. There is not a brave man in the North who ought not to feel it as an insult; and for the South, I repeat, the charge has no shadow of foundation.

Why, sir, what Southern State has ever at any time or in any way attempted to control or interfere with the domestic institutions of any other State? Name the instance in which any Southern State, or any convention of any Southern State, or any Legislature of any Southern State, or any Representative of any Southern State ever in any way, directly or indirectly, attempted to control or interfere with the institutions of Vermont or any other State. I appeal to history and defy the gentleman to name an instance. The charge is utterly groundless. While New England could turn loose as voters in the South nearly a million of emancipated slaves, reclaimed from African barbarism by contact with the white man of the South, what southern man ever complained that in her leading State no man could vote who could not read the Constitution in the English language? While in the South the ballot is open to every man, what southern man ever complained that one of the New England States disfranchises more than one-half its population by requiring a property qualification, which, if applied to the South, would disfranchise more than two-thirds of her citizens? While we of the South believe that all men should be left free to worship according to the dictates of their consciences, what southern man ever complained that until within the last year in one of the New England States no man could hold office unless he professed a certain religious faith? And yet even now in Massachusetts no one can vote who cannot read, &c.; and in Rhode Island more than one-half of the men cannot vote because her constitution requires every voter to own real estate to the amount of $134 over and above all incumbrances.

But this New England defender of equal rights says that—

> They [the South] should accept the constitutional amendments and grant equal political rights to all men. The trouble is they do not do this.
> As a test of sincerity upon this point, tell me as honorable men whether you think a republican could to-day go into the parish of East Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, make republican speeches and organize republican clubs, without danger of molestation, and if not there, could he in any county in any State south of Virginia. These, sir, are facts plainly spoken in a spirit of fairness and candor, and the sooner we all understand them and act upon them the better.

Now, I desire to state to the gentleman that there was never a greater mistake, that there is no fact about it. I am told by the gentleman from Louisiana that in the parish of East Feliciana, which he represents, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JOYCE] or anybody else could go and make a speech without disturbance. So far as my own State is concerned, I can say that I have taken part in every political contest since the war, and have spoken from the stump a hundred times side by side with my republican competitors, and from the mountains to the seaboard of my State, Governor Vance and his competitor, Mr. Settle, now a Federal judge in Florida, were heard addressing the people from the same stump, and there was no disturbance. Will the gentleman say that there would be no disturbance if they had such joint discussions in the State of Vermont, at least in these latter days?

If all the people of Vermont are as bitter as the gentleman who represents it in part, I should be afraid to make a speech before them. But I will tell him that he can come to North Carolina and speak everywhere throughout the borders of our State and nobody will disturb him. He would be just as safe there as a democrat would be, and I apprehend much safer than a democrat would be in Vermont. The charge made by the gentleman from Vermont is not founded in fact. If I were to say that a southern democrat could not go into Vermont and speak, there is not a man in my district who would not believe me, because all know that I would not state to the people what I did not know to be true affecting the character of a whole State. And yet the gentleman made this statement in regard to my people, and I have no doubt it is believed in Vermont. When he goes back to his State he should tell the people that he was mistaken. If he doubts my statement as to free and open discussion in North Carolina, let him ask my republican colleague of that State [Mr. BROGDEN] if there is a word of truth in the charge. The gentleman has doubtless been misinformed and thus misleads his people. I would make no statement affecting the character of an individual or of a community which I did not believe to be true.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCALES. I ask consent that the time of my colleague be extended.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. No, I will not trespass longer; but, with permission of the House, will incorporate in my remarks the tables to which I have referred.

PRESIDENTIAL TITLE.

Mr. GARDNER addressed the House. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

THE TARIFF.

Mr. PEDDIE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to review in detail the present tariff bill introduced by the honorable gentleman from New York, who has so faithfully given his attention to this complicated subject, but representing as I do the great manufacturing district of my State and the city of Newark, which is now called the Birmingham of America, I wish to express my views in regard to the proposed change, the very discussion of which is having a most depressing effect upon the business of the country and threatens to destroy the possibility of a revival in trade and return of commercial activity.

We have exhausted theories and endless delusive arguments presented to us by political economists, but as a manufacturer I regard practical business experience above all their fallacies, and in my opinion we had better let well enough alone and consider the results which necessarily would follow any change taking as a safe guide for the future our past experience rather than that of other nations whose condition and products are so varied that like laws will not produce the same results.

I feel our great development in the manufacturing industries of the country is sufficient argument to prove the wisdom of the law as it now stands, faulty in some respects as it may be, but taking it as a whole it has accomplished results which have no parallel in history and its maintenance has brought to our shores millions of capital, employing thousands of skilled workingmen who would to-day have been on the other side of the Atlantic, but here have developed our internal resources, opened up our mines, built up our mills and factories, so that we are now almost able to stand upon an independent footing, and not only to supply our own market, but with little help from this Congress in building up our merchant marine we would be able to place our goods side by side with those of other countries in foreign markets, and successfully compete with England, which has so long held the supremacy and is called the workshop of the world.

Let those opposed to protection apply their free-trade maxims as the outgrowth of natural causes peculiar to that country and not apply the same to this. One with a contracted area, a limit of natural resources, densely populated, dependent upon other countries for its raw material; and this, with our vast undeveloped resources, an area covering millions of square miles, with every variety of climate, and soil capable of producing all the luxuries and necessities for the wants of man. Again, this is not the time to agitate the question, just as we are trying to work out of a long and distressing business depression, the result of great waste in our late war followed by extravagant and financial mismanagement of our people. And now upon the eve of returning prosperity we can ill afford to change a policy which is the very foundation of our national wealth, and thus throw us back into deeper misery by stopping the mills now barely able to keep in operation and which must certainly close should the bill before the House become a law, and thereby throw out of employment thousands of honest laborers who are now struggling hard for the bare necessities of life.

If the law is defective, better let it rest until we are able to stand the shock of its revision, and in the mean time let Congress turn its attention to the real wants of the people. Give us a department of commerce as a base through which to foster our commercial relations with those countries which are willing to open their ports and join us, hand in hand, in establishing steam communication for the exchange of our various and abundant products.

Mr. HANNA. Is the gentleman in favor of subsidies to steamship lines?

Mr. PEDDIE. I know the American people do not like the word "subsidies," but I am in favor of a liberal compensation being paid by the Government for carrying the mails to foreign countries. Through this only can we expect to compete with other nations for the commerce of the world, or wade out of our present prostrated condition? Give us foreign markets for our goods and we shall soon stand independent of a protective tariff and solve the maxims laid down to us in the interest of foreign manufacturers. What our people want is legislation that will give them work, not agitation of the tariff nor the appointment of extravagant investigating committees spending millions of their money for partisan purposes in which they have no heart, to the exclusion of everything that will tend again to set in motion our mills and factories, giving employment to the workingmen, who are the bone and sinew of our country and upon whose prosperity is based our success.

Legislation of this kind will be far more acceptable to the people, and will do more to maintain our credit than the partisan political discussions which only plunge us still further into the sea of uncertainty and paralyze the energy of the nation and destroy every opportunity we might have to resist the present downward tendency, which can only lead to universal bankruptcy.

TARIFF.

Mr. ERRETT. Mr. Speaker, the authors of this bill doubtless started out with a distinct purpose in view, that of framing a tariff suited to a particular idea or purpose; but before they got through with it they succeeded only in making a bill that is faithful to no one idea and which pleases or satisfies no one. In the attempt to please everybody they have pleased nobody. Protectionists and free-traders alike disown it, and its one sole merit, in any one's eyes, is that it is a change. Those who think that all change is reform and that any change must be for the better may possibly accept it; but those who believe in letting well enough alone are opposed to it, and they are, I think, a decided majority of the people, if not of their Representatives.

Of all the varied manufacturing and producing interests in this country there is not one that is satisfied with it, so far as I have heard; the sugar-producing interest may be, for it has been amply taken care of, apparently; it always has been. In the days when the spirit of free trade was rampant the sugar interest was always made an exception; tea and coffee might come in free, but sugar never. It is as much an article of necessity as tea and coffee; but the section which produces it believes in protection to sugar, and has always had it. That section believes in free trade in everything else; but, notwithstanding its faith in that fanciful theory, it is to be hoped that it will learn the golden rule and concede to others what it demands for itself.

But while the sugar-producing interest may possibly be the exception which proves the rule, it is certain that no other is. From all over the country comes a protest from the wool-producing interest, which exclaims against the injury that will be inflicted upon it by the passage of this bill, and this is an interest which extends from Maine to Texas, being worthy of much more care than it receives. The manufacturers and dealers in woolens in like manner protest that their interests have been sacrificed. A remonstrance forwarded here shows that the bill imposes specific duties upon one class of woolen cloths and ad valorem upon another class, although both cost the same price and are almost identical in character.

The manufacturers of cotton-bagging, the paper manufacturers who use jute butts and other foreign materials in their factories, the new industries engaged in producing Portland cement and tin plates, the workers in iron, steel, glass, and copper, and almost every other industrial enterprise, all join in lifting up their voices against a tariff that is fated to carry destruction to their interests. It is not necessary to enter here into details. Where a bill excites such general hostility as this does there is no need to be specific in objection; and I leave it to those who are specially concerned in particular branches of industry to present the reasons for their specific objections, as they doubtless will do, fully and satisfactorily. I am content for the present to base my opposition to it on the general ground that it is wrong from top to bottom, from beginning to end, in general and particular, in body and in spirit. It is not based on the doctrine of specific duties, nor on the opposite doctrine of ad valorem duties; but is an uncongenial admixture of the two, without system or reason, a mere hodge-podge of the two, without any special regard to either. It is not a compromise where the friends of each doctrine have yielded something to the other, but a mere jumble of crudities and inconsistencies. Like the church at Laodicea, it is neither hot nor cold—would that it were—and being lukewarm, the only fitting and natural thing to do with it is to spew it out of our mouths.

I will not enter upon the general question of protection to American industry, but I fully believe in the doctrine that it is the duty of the General Government to extend its protecting and encouraging hand to every branch of industry throughout the length and breadth of the land. The friends of protection are more catholic in their views than are the sugar and cotton interests, for while asking protection for themselves they are perfectly willing to accord it to every other interest, to sugar, and rice, and cotton, and tobacco, and hemp, as well as to wool, and iron, and steel, and all the multiplied interests of the North. On this subject they know no North, no South, no East, no West; but treating all honest labor as worthy, and every laborer as worthy of his hire, would secure to every class of workers a sufficient remuneration for their toil. In this they stand upon the same ground as Washington, who stated to Congress in 1790—

> That the interests and safety of the people require that they promote such manufactures as shall render them independent of others (foreigners) for essential supplies.

They believe also with Lincoln—

> That plenty of money from well paid labor elevates, while the reverse degrades.

And with the venerable Peter Cooper that—

> National prosperity cannot be restored by forcing idleness on the masses, since we cannot, as a nation, import anything cheap that leaves our own good raw materials unused and our own people unemployed.

But this is a subject too vast to be entered upon in a limited speech, and I content myself with saying that, even if it be conceded that revenue is the primary object of all tariffs, that is a poor government which cannot afford in levying its duties for revenue to so arrange them as to make them conducive to national prosperity by encouraging and protecting every national industry. It is a foul bird that soils its own nest; and it is a heartless government that not only withholds its protecting hand from its own children but extends its encouragement to the workers and capitalists of other nations. The first duty of a government to its people is protection; and it is as much its duty to protect their industries as to protect their property, their lives, or their rights.

Protection to American industry was the doctrine of the fathers of the Republic. Their first step, when the idea of independence had taken full hold of their minds, was to form a voluntary league to bind themselves not to wear or use any but home-made goods. The self-denial which prompted them to do this sprang from the consciousness that it would be idle to talk of independence while they depended upon foreign wares for their daily use; and it is just as idle to talk of our independence while we are more indulgent to foreign industries than to our own. We are far more able to-day to manufacture nearly all we need than we were then; and although we lack the immediate motive which prompted them to put a voluntary embargo on foreign goods we have the motive, which they had not, of so guarding our home industries as to make us fully and truly independent of foreign nations.

It is urged that we have a surplus of some products to sell, and that unless we buy of other nations they will not buy of us. But that does not follow. This is a favorite fallacy, but it is a syllogism in which the conclusion does not agree with the premises. Other nations buy of us, not because we buy of them, but because they cannot help it. During the ten years from 1863 to 1873 we bought liberally from Europe—so liberally that we bankrupted ourselves; but Europe did not as a consequence buy liberally from us, for at the end of that memorable decade we had bought of Europe one thousand millions of dollars' worth more than we had sold to her. Liberal buying, therefore, does not induce liberal selling. Europe buys from us only what she cannot produce herself, and is sharp and keen enough to take advantage of our tariff legislation to sell us a great deal of what we could and should produce for ourselves. We do not stand upon an equality in the exchange of products, and now it is proposed to give her still greater advantage by opening the doors wider to her products and shutting out our own. The legs of the lame are not equal, and the legs of this syllogism are too unequal to stand upon. The weak cannot contend even-handed with the strong, nor a poor nation with a rich one. Europe has advantages which we have not, and until we are nearer an equality it is idle to talk of an equality in the exchange of products. We buy largely of Brazil in coffee. We are, in fact, her best customer. Yet Brazil does not return the compliment by buying from us. We remit gold to England to be sent thence to Brazil for her coffee, and that gold is transmuted into British goods which are shipped to Brazil instead of the gold. Our purchases in that country have never yet induced Brazil to buy of us, and never will. If she ever does become a customer of ours it will be because she can suit herself better here, and not on account of our liberal purchases of her.

But I will probably be told just here that that is caused by protection, which makes our market too dear for Brazil and other South American nations to buy in. I do not admit the allegation; but even if it were true it would not militate against my argument. Young nations like ours (for, although we boast of our hundred years' existence, we are still very young as a nation) cannot produce cheaply until capital has been freely encouraged to invest in production, and under that encouragement been made secure enough to compete to the point of cheapness. This is to be attained slowly and by very gradual progress. Long-continued protection will bring it about, and if we but have patience it will come. The fault of this bill is that it is an attempt (an awkard one but still an attempt) to bring about suddenly what can come only by degrees; for a sudden cheapening of production must either destroy our power of producing, or must result in such a readjustment of the cost as must materially lower the wages of labor and the cost of the native raw material. This consideration brings us face to face with the great labor problem of the day. Are we to stop our factories, and so turn the laborers out of work, or are we to reduce their wages to the bare point of ability to maintain a miserable existence? There are already hundreds of thousands of men out of work; shall we add to their number? Shall we close up our furnaces, our mills, our workshops, and turn other hundreds of thousands adrift upon the cold charities of an already overburdened people? Or shall we grind down their wages to the European standard, and compel them to live upon black bread and cabbage-broth, with the luxury of meat only upon Christmas and the Fourth of July?

The wisest of doctrinaires stand appalled at the contemplation of this labor problem. No one of them has yet been able to solve it or find a way out of its difficulties. It is a millstone into which their eyes cannot peer; and their terrible fear is that there may be both an upper and a nether millstone that will grind society between them into a powder.

I submit that men who aim to be statesmen cannot afford to trifle with this problem. In monarchical countries, where the laborer is little better than a serf, with no political rights and a cipher as a political power, the strong arm of the government may be able to keep him in his degraded condition and force him to work at wages that barely sustain life, but in a free Government like ours, where the laborer is a voter and a very potent political power, this cannot be done. You may reduce tariffs and with them reduce wages or close up the workshops, but you have got to answer to him for that reduction or for turning him penniless upon a pitiless world. The already unemployed thousands are dangerous beyond all that we are willing to confess; how are we going to confront a maddened half million more? Pass this bill and you have got to meet one or the other of these alternatives: either closed workshops and the hungry cry of the famished men, women, and children who have no means beyond their ability to labor, or an enforced reduction of wages upon an already poorly paid class of men. Either alternative is full of danger to the community; and I do not envy the condition of those who are willing to take the responsibility of making a choice between them.

In the former discussions of this question the workingmen took but little part or interest, and from that fact men have drawn the conclusion that this is a matter in which the capitalists are alone involved. There are those who think that capital is the only thing benefited or to be benefited by the incidental protection of a fair tariff; and probably there are some who lay the flattering unction to their souls that the passage of this bill will simply curtail the profits of the manufacturers. Let them not deceive themselves. Capital is in the main able to take care of itself. Already, under the present tariff, the profits of manufacturing have been cut down so low that any reduction in price must come off of labor, and not from capital. No one knows this so well as the workingman. He has studied this whole subject with as much care as the most studious political economist. He knows precisely what a new tariff means. It means to him less work and poorer pay; and having got this knowledge by heart he is taking to-day more interest in the settlement of this issue than even the foreigner who has come across the wide sea to open up warehouses here for the sale of his wares. This is a new element in tariff discussions, and those who favor this bill may as well understand at once that they are aiming their lances, not at men of means only, but at the million of workers who earn their bread literally in the sweat of their face.

The reason for this new awakening is to be found in the fact that within the last forty years the condition of the worker has been materially changed. The system of common schools which was founded between 1830 and 1840 has made an educated man of the worker, and a thinking man as well. He has not been highly educated it is true, and his thoughts may at times be too crude for the cultured professors of science and believers in philosophical theories and abstractions; but he is the graduate of the people's school and must be dealt with as a man who knows, reads, thinks, and reasons for what he has learned. In all this he differs from the main body of European workers, and he must not be judged from their stand-point nor dealt with as they are dealt with. Forty years ago the workingmen of the country were comparatively ignorant. A visit to the furnace or iron-mill showed them living in squalid and dirty cabins; a house of two rooms perhaps, but frequently only one. The floors were uncarpeted, the furniture was mean and scanty, the cooking-utensils few, and the whole miserable dwelling bore about it the air of constant privation and discomfort. Now, the workingman, although still but poorly paid and compelled to look ahead with some feeling of apprehension, has risen to a higher plane. His house is still a poor one, but he has learned to make it bear the look of comparative comfort. The floors are carpeted with some cheap material; the house is clean; there are more rooms, more furniture, and more attention to personal comfort. There are books and papers, magazines and pamphlets on the table; and altogether the advance is striking enough to be noted and pondered. Then they did not know enough to reason about tariffs; now they do. Tariffs affect them, and the men who undertake to pass a tariff which does not take them into the account are as thoughtless as the man who undertook to build a house without first counting the cost. You cannot deal with these men as European governments deal with their workers or legislate upon their basis, because, in addition to the different degree of intelligence which our workers possess, they have with that intelligence, whatever its degree may be, political power.

It would be the poorest possible policy in this juncture to flourish this fact as a threat, and I do not use it in that way. I only call attention to it as a fact which cannot be ignored or which, if an attempt is made to shut it out of sight, will still demonstrate its existence. Like Banquo's ghost, it will not down at any one's bidding. You cannot legislate for an intelligent working class as you would for an ignorant one, nor for men who have political power as for those who have not. Our labor problem is not that of Europe and is not to be solved by European philosophy. We must treat it as we find it. You cannot make intelligent labor cheap, because it knows too much to submit to the degradation of living in squalor upon ten cents a day. You have established your systems of general education and have even passed laws to send policemen out into the highways and byways to compel the children to come into schools; and now, having educated them, having given them higher tastes and more refined aspirations, you ask them in this bill to grovel in dirty hovels, live upon the cheapest food, wear the cheapest clothes, and drudge out their educated lives in a desperate struggle for existence upon wages gauged by the European standard. Why lift them up if they are to be thus cast down? You have cast the seven devils of ignorance out of the worker and he finds as he starts out in life his house swept and garnished, and then you drive him into the company of seventy times seven devils of destitution and poverty, and the last end of that man is worse than the first. Believe me, it is the part of wisdom and statesmanship to legislate for the elevation of labor rather than for its degradation; for its encouragement and protection rather than for its impoverishment.

I may instance in this connection, because it comes so near home that I can speak of it knowingly, the duties imposed by this bill on iron. The bill in this one respect is not nearly so bad as it was at first, nor so unfair as it might have been, but it establishes an average reduction in duties of $5 a ton. Under the present tariff prices have declined to the point where the manufacturer cannot realize a profit of over one or two dollars a ton at furthest. It is plain, then, that in this reduction in duties the manufacturer has no margin to go and come upon. The reduction cannot come off of him, and the only alternative left is to take it off the workers in iron. If they submit to the reduction their means of living are thereby curtailed; if they refuse, then they have before them all the miseries of a lock-out or a strike. In either event they are the sufferers, and not the only ones; for if you reduce the purchasing capacity of a man you injure every other department of industry. The man who earns nine dollars a week can and does buy more than the man who earns but six, and in reducing his wages you reduce his capacity to buy what others produce.

Again, the present tariff produced last year $131,000,000 of revenue; the duties imposed by this bill, if the same quantities and qualities of goods were imported under it as last year, would produce but $122,000,000. As we have not revenue enough now, it is plain that, even to get up to last year's revenue, we must import much more goods; and still more, if we are to realize the revenue expected from it. Under any circumstances, the free list being greatly enlarged and rates of duty lowered, there must be a great deal more foreign goods imported than now to make up the needed revenue, and every dollar's worth of goods imported in excess of present quantities must deprive some American workman of the chance of producing the same kind of goods here. An increase of foreign imports means a decrease of home products, and a decrease of home products means a decrease in the amount of labor employed and in the amount of its compensation. The passage of this bill may carry joy to Birmingham and Sheffield, but it must carry dismay into the homes of many thousands of American mechanics. If the mission of an American Congress is to legislate for the benefit of foreigners, then this bill is in the right direction; but I know full well that the John Hancocks and George Washingtons of 1776 had too much of the spirit of patriotism to engage in the success of any such measure.

It has been urged as an argument in behalf of a reduction of duties that the agricultural laborer of this country has no protection, because none is possible; but as he is compelled to compete with the cheap agricultural laborer of Europe he is entitled to the privilege of buying what he wants at lower rates than he now pays. I answer that the agricultural laborer of this country does not compete, in the proper sense of that word, with the agricultural laborer of Europe; and if Europe were capable of producing what breadstuffs and provisions it consumes it would never buy a dollar's worth from us. Whatever market we have abroad grows out of a demand which Europe is not able to supply. We simply furnish what is needed over and above the European supply. We make up merely what she lacks, and do not enter into any competition whatever. Europe, under this bill, can flood our markets with goods which we can as well produce ourselves; but we furnish to Europe only what she cannot produce. Any great calamity in Europe increases our market there, while the absence of such calamity decreases it. A war, a plague, or a bad harvest may increase the demand for our products; but it is only their bad luck which makes ours good; and things have come to a pretty pass when we have to depend upon war, pestilence, or famine to create us a market, and when we are compelled to look complacently upon human sufferings as the means of putting money into our pockets. It would be far better if the agriculturists would help, by what General Jackson once called "a judicious tariff," to build up our home industries and thus create a home market for our own products. The extension of manufacturing interests to Cincinnati and Indianapolis, to Chicago and Saint Louis, to Detroit and Toledo, has created a home demand which has been of incalculable benefit to the farmers of the West; and the success of agriculture depends much more upon fostering these industries than in cheapening a few foreign products. Whatever Europe must have she will buy of us under any circumstances, because she cannot help herself; and in no case will she buy what she can produce herself.

If the free-trade argument be true that all duties imposed on imports are paid by the consumers, and if this bill produces as much revenue as the present tariff does, the result is the same to the consumers. They pay their $131,000,000, and it can make no difference to them, viewing it as a tax, whether that sum is collected from them in high or low rates; but to the country at large it makes this difference: that the less we import the less money we have to send abroad and the more we have to spend at home, while the more we import the more money we have to send abroad and the less we have to spend at home. Even so dull a political economist as Mr. Micawber discovered that if his income was £20 a year and his outgoes £20 6s. the result was misery, but if the outgoes were only £19 14s. the result was happiness. In like manner we may say that if we buy more abroad than we sell, as we are sure to do under free trade, the result is misery; while if we buy less abroad than we sell, as we are most likely to do when the tariff is adjusted with a view to encouraging home industries, we can serenely enjoy that supreme happiness which may befall Mr. Micawber or any other man who after his debts are paid has ever so small a balance in his exchequer.

This idea is not popular in the city of New York, which is interested in a big import trade and has the faculty of regarding all the world as happy if the import trade is brisk. But New York is not the United States, however much she may be inclined to think so, nor is she of sufficient importance to have a tariff framed for her exclusive benefit. London may be England and Paris may be France, but New York is simply a city by herself and but a small integral part of this wide-spread nation with its diversified interests. There are many other cities to be taken into the account whose interests are as worthy of attention as hers; and it behooves the representatives of the people to remember that they were not sent here to legislate either for foreign capitalists or for New York importers. The millions of workingmen, whose bread is dependent upon their labor and whose labor is dependent upon the demand for its employment, have more than an equal right with importers to be heard and heeded here. In their name and by their authority I utter a solemn protest against the passage of a bill which must either reduce the revenues or increase importations.

In either event it must be disastrous to the nation; but in the latter event it must inevitably result in exasperating people already sufficiently restless and uneasy. They are in one sense the wards of the nation. Their interests are in the hands of Congress, and they cannot be struck down with impunity. One act, that of simply defeating this bill, will go a long ways toward settling the labor problem, because it will give assurance of a chance to recuperate from past troubles and contribute to that stability of legislation, which is the breath of life to capital and labor alike; while one act, that of passing this bill, will unsettle everything, destroy confidence, and either drive capital and labor into a destructive conflict or drive labor into the terrible necessity of trying to live upon starvation wages. For one I shall stand by the men who are striving to keep their heads above water by honest, earnest work; and if they are to be struck down, let those who aim the blow at them take the responsibility. Of one thing the friends of this hermaphrodite measure may rest fully assured, that in every hamlet, village, town, or city in which the workingman is to be found there will they be held to a strict accountability for their act, and no party cry, no party conjuring, no party appeal will save them from political condemnation.

The time has been when party overslaughed all such considerations; but that time has gone by. There is no longer any magic in party names, and he will be unwise who relies upon them. The great object of an American Congress should be to elevate, exalt, and dignify labor by securing to it remunerative employment, while the great object of this bill seems to be to try to grind down wages to the European standard. It is an experiment fraught with danger, and while I fear that no warning of mine will have any effect in staving off that danger, I only discharge my duty in giving it. If wisdom has its way, this bill will be remitted to the limbo of forgotten vanities; and if not, those who will be victimized by its passage will no doubt find an effectual way of making their voices heard. They may be on the underside of the wheel just now; but ever the right comes uppermost, and when their turn comes let those who have offended them keep themselves out of the way of an overflowing public indignation.

Mr. TURNER submitted some remarks on the tariff and internal-revenue taxation, which will appear in the Appendix.

CONDITION AND NEEDS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, addressed the House upon the subject of the present condition of the American Navy and what is needed for its re-establishment. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

PAYMENT OF BONDS, COIN, AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, on the 29th day of April last I offered the following bill:

A bill to repeal an act approved March 18, 1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act approved March 18, 1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," as pledged the faith of the Government to pay such of the Government bonds in coin or its equivalent as were before the date of said act payable in lawful money, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

PETITIONS FROM THE PEOPLE—WIDE-SPREAD DISTRESS.

Mr. Speaker, there never has been a time in the history of this Government when the people were so largely and so directly interested in congressional legislation as they are now. Never before has Congress been so universally petitioned and appealed to by people of every occupation and from all sections of the country as it has been this session. Petitions touching the repeal of the resumption act, the remonetization of silver, national-bank circulation, currency, tariff, internal revenue, and various other subjects of legislation, have come in upon us like snow-flakes.

In no other period of our history have our crop productions been so extensive and the balance of trade between this country and foreign countries so large in our favor as during the last year. And yet, Mr. Speaker, the sad and painful spectacle is presented to us and to the country of wide-spread distress and suffering; a paralysis of business such as has never been experienced in this country. Failures aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars have occurred. Thousands of the strongest houses in America have gone down into insolvency. Enterprises of all kinds have been stopped. Nearly two hundred railroads, it is said, have failed to meet their interest obligations. Millions of our laborers have been forced into idleness and cut off from the means of earning a subsistence. Many of our workshops are idle and our jails, penitentiaries, and poor-houses are filled. A gloom hangs over the country and the land is filled with disquietude and want.

Run your eye over the recent past and see how it was a few years ago. Take the year 1867, eleven years back. The country was then comparatively prosperous and the people were happy. Since that time we have been blessed with general good health, we have been at peace with all the world, and have harvested good crops. We have not been scourged by war, pestilence, or famine. Then, what is it, I ask, that has so changed the situation? What is it that has hushed the active hum of business industry and stricken down great numbers of our people from prosperity to pauperism? What is it that has driven millions of our laborers out of employment and torn away from men of moderate means their little homes, filling the land with tramps, beggars, and criminals?

WHAT CAUSED THE DISTRESS.

To a large extent, Mr. Speaker, the trouble has grown out of congressional legislation touching Government bonds, coin, and currency. Eleven years ago, as I have said, we were comparatively prosperous. The Government had withstood the rebellion of 1861-'65. It had tided over that terrible internecine strife; the doctrine of secession had been rejected then and for all time to come; the institution of slavery had been destroyed and the former slave had been elevated to citizenship. Notwithstanding the great waste of public money during the war and up to that period the public debt was, on the 1st day of March, 1868, less cash in the Treasury, $2,519,829,622.84; but of this amount $1,407,321,800 was in 5.20 bonds. Of these bonds I shall have occasion to speak after awhile. The coin receipts were about $24,000,000 more per annum than was needed to pay the interest on the public debt.

By the census returns of 1870 it is estimated that the value of the real and personal property in the United States was, in round numbers, $30,000,000,000, or about eleven times as much as the public debt; and in that year the estimated value of our farm productions, with betterments and additions to stock, was $2,447,538,658, the value of manufacturing products $4,232,325,442, and the value of mining products $158,598,994.

We then had a circulating medium of $1,311,515,016. Business enterprises were active, money was brisk, labor was in demand, and the laborer was fully rewarded. It was a source of national congratulation that we had so far rallied from the shock of war, then only two years past. Ten years later we had a circulating medium of $731,002,481.84, or $580,512,534.68 less than we had in 1867. To show how unequally what money we have is distributed through the several sections of the country I submit the following interesting table:

Money in the South, West, and East.

Locality.	National-bank notes.		Total currency.		Annual production to each dollar in circulation.
	Outstanding.	Per capita.	Per capita.	Per square mile.
Eastern States	$112,528,279	$28 05	$56 10	$3,447 03	$21 40
Middle States	110,752,981	9 77	19 54	1,932 56	43 40
Western States	67,480,503	3 98	7 96	204 36	74 94
Southern States	24,620,788	2 25	4 50	65 50	71 24

The total currency in the United States averages $14.60 per capita. The Eastern or New England States have a circulation per capita almost four times as much as the average of the whole country, nearly eight times as much as the Western States, and over eleven times as much as the Southern States.

There is more than fifty times as much money in circulation to each square mile in New England as there is in the South, while the South and West have severally to transact more than three times as much business in the way of industrial productions on each dollar of currency as is done in New England; or, in other words, have for the business they do less than one-third the capital necessary.

These figures account for the great difference of opinion that exists in the several sections of the Union upon current financial questions.

The statement that the New England States have $56.10 per capita, the Western States $7.96 per capita, and the Southern $4.50 per capita shows the inequality so plainly that it needs no comment from me.

The money that is ostensibly in circulation is not really in circulation. Much of it is hoarded up by capitalists in the East to await resumption.

A LEGISLATIVE SWINDLE.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that the financial troubles of the country have, to a large extent, grown out of the legislation of Congress concerning bonds, coin, and currency. I refer to the legislation from the year 1869 to the year 1875, both years included. About two-thirds of the indebtedness of the country was represented by 5.20 bonds. The principal of these bonds was payable in coin or lawful money at the pleasure of the Government. I mean by lawful money the legal-tender, non-interest-bearing notes, commonly called greenbacks.

With the affairs of the Government economically administered and the various industries of the country encouraged, this debt could have been paid off, and no man or section would have been distressed by it. But the money power of the country conspired for their own gain and demanded otherwise, and Congress, in an evil hour, yielded to that demand.

Now, sir, the first move of this conspiracy was entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1868. Those 5.20 bonds had been purchased with greenbacks when the greenbacks were worth about fifty cents on the dollar. The act to which I have just referred falsely declared that they were payable in coin. Its immediate effect was to enhance the value of the bonds to the extent of $500,000,000; and to that extent the burdens of the people were increased and the bondholder was benefited. If it was true that they were so payable in coin, then there was no necessity for that act; but if it was not true and they were not so payable, the act contained a falsehood upon its face and operated as a fraud and a swindle.

Following close upon its heels came the funding act of 1870, by which the holders of many of those 5.20 bonds were enabled to fund them into longer-ranging coin-bearing bonds bearing 4, 4½, and 5 per cent. interest. This completed what may be called the first great achievement of the money power.

ANOTHER LEGISLATIVE SWINDLE.

The next in this series of iniquitous enactments was the act of 1873 demonetizing silver. This act, without discussion on the floor of this House, without previous discussion in the country, with representatives in high standing demanding in vain that it should be read even for information, was forced to its passage under a suspension of the rules. It should have been entitled an act of assassination. It assassinated a coin that our fathers made a legal tender and handed down to us—a coin that was recognized as money more than a thousand years before the Christian era—a coin which, upon the day of its assassination, was worth more upon the American market than gold.

The motive for this act is easy to perceive. About the time Congress provided for the payment of the whole Government debt in coin, silver mines of unexampled richness were discovered in our western mountain ranges and the means wherewith to easily pay the debt were placed in our hands, as if by the interposition of Providence. The bondholders, foreseeing that an abundant supply of this precious metal would reduce the value of their bonds, procured the demonetization of it and the silver dollar was stricken down. The act was so clandestinely passed that not a member of this House raised his voice against it and not a newspaper in all the land proclaimed the fact. This act, Mr. Speaker, was an offense against God and man.

THE RESUMPTION ACT FINISHES THE WORK.

The money power having succeeded by the several acts to which I have referred in changing the payment of the Government's indebtedness from currency to coin, there remained but one thing more to be done for the accomplishment of their purpose, and that was the procurement of the resumption act. By it the 1st day of January next, less than eight months from this time, was fixed for the resumption in gold coin of every form of Government indebtedness payable at that time. This was the crowning iniquity in the conspiracy of which I have spoken. It has done greater violence to popular right, to the honest relations between man and man, than any other act of any Congress convened since the foundation of the Republic. It has destroyed more fortunes, it has silenced more workshops, annihilated more values, bankrupted more homes and blasted more prospects, inflicted more idleness, and harmed more men, women, and children than any other act that ever disgraced a statute-book.

THE RESULT OF THE CONSPIRACY.

The estimated value of the real and personal property of the United States in 1870 was, in round numbers, $30,000,000,000. The contraction of the currency growing out of these several acts has produced a shrinkage, as it is generally estimated, of from 40 to 50 per cent. of that real and personal property of the country; a shrinkage that, in the aggregate, amounts to about $15,000,000,000, a sum more than seven times as great as the amount of our entire national debt. The judgment of mankind will be that this is a most shameful and ruinous oppression for the benefit of a favored few.

The fact that two years after the war the country was in a more prosperous condition than it is now, thirteen years after the war, and the further fact that to secure the payment of these 5.20 bonds in coin instead of currency has, by shrinkage of values, destroyed ten times as much of the national wealth as the bonds amounted to, shocks the moral sense.

WHAT CONGRESS SHOULD DO.

To my mind it is the duty of Congress to repeal these acts which have worked such disastrous results. There was no propriety or necessity for the act "to strengthen the public credit." Its object was to change the contract under which the 5.20 bonds were payable in currency and make them payable in coin. It imposed an additional heavy burden upon the people and gave to the holders of our bonds a bonus amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

I see by a statement furnished me by the Treasury Department a few days ago that these bonds now outstanding and unfunded amount to $454,937,650. Congress should by appropriate legislation at this session direct the Secretary of the Treasury to call in and cancel these bonds, paying them in legal-tender notes to be provided for that purpose. This would increase the circulating medium, leaving it less, however, than it was in 1867. It would revive trade and infuse life into the various industries, and prevent a further shrinkage of values which, if not checked, will virtually transfer the property of the debtor class into the hands of the creditor class.

To more effectually get this additional money into circulation, to prevent its being hoarded, to settle the financial policy of the Government, and for other obvious reasons, the resumption act should be repealed.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that greenbacks are now almost at par with gold. They will remain so if these acts shall be repealed; but if resumption is to be forced upon us on the 1st day of January next, as the volume of currency to be redeemed is much greater than the coin on hand to redeem with, the attempt will necessarily advance the premium on coin and intensify the contraction of the currency that has already worked so much injury to property and business.

SILVER AND NATIONAL-BANK NOTES.

The act passed during the present session remonetizing silver, notwithstanding its narrow scope, has already been largely beneficial in its results. It has re-established silver as money and made it a legal tender for all debts, public and private. It has knocked down the premium on gold and elevated the standard of our national credit, and it is to be hoped that before this Congress shall adjourn silver will be fully reinstated as it was before its assassination.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of recent events it must be apparent to every gentleman upon this floor that it is necessary to avoid in the future what has been so ruinous in the past, a wide margin between the money for the bondholders and the money of the people. This can best be accomplished by making greenbacks receivable for duties on imports. That will give the greenback dollar the purchasing power of the gold and silver dollar, make it as good as either and as good as a Government bond.

Add to this the further reform that is loudly called for of retiring the national-bank notes and substituting greenbacks in their stead.

GREENBACKS AND THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. Speaker, I am an original greenbacker. I have believed from the first, and I insist upon it to-day, that this country can have no well-regulated financial system until it ranks its greenbacks side by side with its gold and silver. Every consideration of fairness and justice to a tax-ridden and oppressed people demands that this be done.

In order to answer the objection of gentlemen who doubt the constitutional authority of the Government to issue paper money and make it a legal tender, I read the following

OPINIONS OF JOHN C. CALHOUN, ALBERT GALLATIN, AND THOMAS JEFFERSON.

I now undertake to affirm positively, and without the least fear that I can be answered, what I have but suggested, that a paper issued by Government, with the simple promise to receive it in all its dues—leaving its creditors to take it, or gold and silver, at their option—would, to the extent it would circulate, form a perfect paper circulation, which could not be abused by the Government; that would be as steady and uniform in value as the metals themselves.

No one can doubt but that the Government credit is better than that of any bank—more stable, more safe. The question is not between credit and no credit, as some would have us believe, but in what form credit can best perform the functions of a sound currency.—J. C. Calhoun.

The right of issuing paper money as currency, like that of gold and silver coin, belongs exclusively to the nation, and cannot be claimed by any individual.—Albert Gallatin.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to his son-in-law Eppes, dated June 24, 1813, recommended the issue of Government notes, instead of allowing bank-notes to be circulated, giving at the same time cogent reasons for his conclusions. "And," says Mr. BUCKNER, "he thus foreshadowed the proper monetary system of the country."

But, in addition to these opinions, we have that of the Supreme Court of the United States in the "legal-tender cases" decided in 1870, (Wallace's Reports, volume 12, page 457,) sustaining the constitutional power of Congress to issue these greenbacks and make them legal tender. In speaking of the difficulties the Government had to contend with at the beginning of the war and during its prosecution, and of the absolute necessity of having money to maintain its Armies and Navy, the court said:

That they [the greenbacks] did work such results is not to be doubted. Something revived the drooping faith of the people; something brought immediately to the Government's aid the resources of the nation; and something enabled the successful prosecution of the war and the preservation of the national life. What was it if not the legal-tender enactments?

Mr. Speaker, if there ever has been another time when something was needed to revive "the drooping faith of the people" that time is now.

SOURCES OF WEALTH NEGLECTED.

I am met by the objection urged by various gentlemen upon this floor who represent the wealth of New York and New England that the plan I propose will throw too much money into circulation. That objection applies to those whose coffers are filled to overflowing, but it does not apply to the millions who are to-day without the means to purchase food and raiment; it does not apply to the thousands whose farms are mortgaged and shingled over with judgment liens; it does not apply to the great West which has $7.96 per capita; it does not apply to the down-trodden and impoverished South, which has $4.50 per capita, while New England has nearly eight times as much as the West and over eleven times as much as the South.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I can satisfy the mind of any reasonable man who will contemplate this great subject from an impartial and patriotic stand-point, how we can readily and profitably employ this additional capital and more, too, if it were issued. Bear in mind the drooping industries of the country, or, to put it in the language of the Supreme Court, that something is required to revive "the drooping faith of the people." I might give many instances in which the money could be well used, but I shall content myself with one or two. Take the article of sugar. We are now sending to foreign countries over $100,000,000 a year to buy sugar for our own consumption in addition to the sugar produced at home. The fact has been demonstrated by past experience and verified by General Le Duc, the competent head of the Department of Agriculture, that we can produce here in the United States all the sugar we consume and thereby save the expenditure of this vast sum of gold annually paid out to foreign countries.

We have every element necessary to accomplish this result except the money. The lands fit for sugar-producing are principally unenclosed and waste. Laborers, white and black, would be anxious to begin the enterprise. But while the land and the labor are abundant and cheap, there is yet wanting houses, horses, mules, harrows, plows, hoes, and other requisite articles which only money can obtain.

There is another interesting subject well worthy the consideration of this Congress. We are now purchasing from abroad, and paying for it in gold, over twenty millions' worth of tea every year. Experiments in the growth and curing of tea in this country have demonstrated that this article of common use can also be produced in the United States. Through the enterprising spirit of the Commissioner of Agriculture thirty thousand tea plants have already been distributed through the States and they are now growing luxuriantly. And he contemplates distributing a million more before long. The tea already produced in this country in quality and flavor is ascertained to be equal to that produced in China.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other subject of great national importance that I wish to speak of a moment in this connection. It relates to our shipping interest. I have attempted to draw a parallel between the condition of the country in the year 1867 and its condition in 1877. And now, for the purpose of showing the decline in our shipping interest, I desire to call attention to the year 1857. That I may be exact in dates and amounts I quote from the report accompanying House bill No. 3580:

The decadence of our foreign navigation is alarming. Since 1857 the proportion of tonnage as between our own and foreign ships engaged in trade to and from this country has been reversed, although the commerce has increased nearly 100 per cent. In 1857 the value of the foreign trade carried to and from all American ports in American bottoms was $510,000,000, and the total carried in foreign bottoms was $213,000,000. In 1867 the figures were reversed, foreign ships carrying $580,000,000, while American ships carried only $296,000,000. In 1877 the proportion was still greater against us, foreign bottoms carrying $858,000,000, to $315,000,000 carried in American bottoms, and this being a million less than our vessels carried twenty-five years ago. It is estimated that we now pay yearly to foreign ship-owners, for carrying passengers, goods, and mails, at least $50,000,000. Steam is rapidly superseding sails, and with the same tonnage does three times the work. Our steam marine is insignificant, and therefore we cannot compete with the other nations of the world in the carrying trade until we build it up. Europe has two hundred steamships running to and from the United States, and the United States has less than fifteen steamships running across the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Three-fifths of the exports, nine-tenths of the imports, and all the passengers and mails to and from New York go by steamships. Twenty years ago we spent for ship-building $25,000,000 per annum, exclusive of the immense sums expended for repairing old vessels. Nearly all this money was paid for labor. Now we expend less than half this sum, or about $11,000,000.

From this carefully prepared statement it will be seen that we are now paying to "foreign ship-owners for carrying passengers, goods, and mails, at least fifty millions" annually, and that we are paying to our own ship-builders about $15,000,000 less than we paid them twenty years ago.

THE POWER OF CONGRESS IN THIS CRISIS.

Mr. Speaker, if this Congress will by appropriate legislation remove all inducements for capitalists to hoard money, and will increase the circulation to meet the wants of trade, our starving thousands will bound with alacrity from idleness into the pursuits of labor; our vacant lands will go into cultivation; we will soon resume our supremacy in the carrying trade of the ocean, and by the means I have suggested save to the country millions of dollars that we now pay as tribute to foreign countries.

Do this, and it will revive "the drooping faith of the people;" it will revive the drooping industries of the country; it will feed the hungry and clothe the naked; it will remove the disquiet that sends us warning through every mail; and if there is one element of communism in all the country it will wipe it out forevermore; it will send a thrill of joy throughout the land and gladden the hearts of forty millions of people.

Mr. Speaker, I am not an alarmist, nor am I an extremist, nor would I array one class against another; on the contrary, I would gladly do whatever I can to give repose to the country; but I cannot shut my eyes, nor can this House shut its eyes to the fact that the country is filled with want and alarm. It is a high duty we owe to our fellowman to give him relief. I will not go into detail or point out the suffering that stalks throughout the land; other gentlemen get the information as I do; it comes to us by newspapers morning, noon, and night.

Why, sir, right here in this capital city of Washington the Labor League has appealed to Congress upon this subject. After stating that the $75,000 which had been appropriated to pay them had been misapplied, if not embezzled, by the contractors, they say:

We are therefore compelled to appeal to you for personal aid, as there are now twenty thousand men, women, and children in the District who are actually starving.

I read from the Washington Capital the following graphic account of the situation:

This is the time when people should reflect that more than a million hands are out of work, which means that four or five millions of mouths are without bread. There is no prospect of relief through revival of industry. The alternative which confronts the starving millions is that of being helped or of helping themselves. The experience of the past summer should admonish those who are in condition to do the helping that it is not wise to wait for starving mobs to begin the dreadful business of helping themselves.

* * * * * * *

There pauperism is accepted as a necessary evil, and the body of society is taxed by Parliament to remedy the inequalities of fate. Here pauperism is a festering sore, sapping the vitals of society, but no treatment is applied. We have provided nutriment for the pauper mind in our public-school system, but the needs of the pauper stomach, which are of equal importance at least to the pauper himself, are not recognized.

In another issue the same writer says:

One wrong does not justify another wrong. But this high moral maxim has not much weight with a man excited by a sense of wrong, when his family is suffering for food. On the contrary, regarding the attempted resumption and the refusal to remonetize silver as infamous wrongs perpetrated for heartless Shylocks who have fattened upon the distresses of the people, the next popular outbreak will be one that will fill the moneyed mind with abject terror. They are making a word less obnoxious by their obnoxious course and familiar use of it, and that word is "repudiation."

Mr. Speaker, people of this country desire to see our Government perpetuated and all of its honest obligations paid according to the letter of the bond. They are not willing, however, by unwarranted and vicious legislation, for selfish ends, to see their obligations swelled beyond their ability to pay, and then to have the currency hoarded beyond their reach. It seems to me that if the money power were to consult its own ultimate interest it would come promptly to the front and take the lead in giving relief to the people. It must not be forgotten that they are the source of all political power in this Government, and that if they shall be further oppressed they may, as they can, send representatives to Congress in the future who will suspend the interest on these bonds, scale that interest, or, if you please, repudiate the debt itself. The people are reasonable, their demands are reasonable; they are not voluntarily idle and helpless and without bread; they are suffering and petitioning to Congress to unfetter the wheels of trade and commerce and give them work.

Mr. Speaker, during the Forty-fourth Congress, now nearly two years ago, in a speech I made on this floor advocating the remonetization of silver, I used this language:

I have said, and here repeat, that if this Congress does not afford the relief which the people of the country are clamoring for, distress, deep and heart-rending distress must follow.

* * * * * * *

The people of this country are in no frame of mind to be driven to the wall and beggared. They will not go into involuntary bankruptcy nor have their property improperly wrung from them to pay in coin Government bonds that should and would without question have been paid in greenbacks except for the fraudulently procured acts of Congress to strengthen the public credit.

What has occurred since that time was eloquently described the other night by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in discussing the Army bill. Referring to the labor strikes of last summer he used this language:

The American people are not likely soon to forget the events of July last, when, in a great group of States belting the continent from ocean to ocean, the lives and property of many millions of citizens were rescued from sudden and imminent peril by the prompt and effective response of our Army to the constitutional demand of the States for its aid.

Here, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the copies of brief but eloquent letters and telegrams from ten great States of this Union, (see note,) and all of them were sent within the space of one week—calling upon the President of the United States for help; ten great States, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, Maryland and West Virginia among them; ten great States, among them California and the empire States of the Northwest, calling for the arms of the Republic to shield and save in their hour of distress.

My friends, had we been at that moment in session do you think we would have voted to decrease the Army to twenty thousand men? Would we not rather have put it up to fifty thousand?

I do not agree in the conclusion of the gentleman from Ohio. I do not admit that I would under the circumstances pointed out by him have voted to increase the Army to fifty thousand men, nor do I admit that Congress would have done so. If a wanton and inexcusable uprising shall occur against the Government, then all will agree to put it down; but if the laboring-men of the country, impelled by hunger and a want of the means to support their families, shall strike for wages commensurate with their toil, the question is addressed to the legislative and not to the military department of the Government.

I rather agree with the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] on the night of the 21st instant. Speaking of events that now surround us, he said:

Mark my words, for I desire to be held responsible for them, there is great danger if we allow ourselves to go home and give no relief to the present condition of the country. When the day of reckoning comes, as come it must, how mean and pitiful will our economies in appropriations appear.

Gentlemen may as well dispel from their minds now as hereafter the delusion that this Government ever was intended to be or ever will be controlled by the Army, anything that may have been said upon that subject by General Sherman to the contrary notwithstanding. I was surprised, Mr. Speaker, to see that military chieftain step aside from his duties as commander of our Army, at the Chamber of Commerce in this city last year, and enter into a disquisition upon the conduct of civil government, holding that the United States cannot exist without the aid of the Army. I quote from his speech upon that occasion:

Without your Army what are you but a mob? The Government of the United States cannot exist without an army, and a good one, too.

As our country increases in population and wealth, and as great cities become numerous, it must be clearly seen that there may be great danger of uprisings of large masses of people for the redress of grievances, real or fancied; and it is a well-known fact that such uprisings enlist in a greater or less degree the sympathies of the communities in which they occur. This fact alone renders the local militia unreliable in such an emergency. * * * Coolness, steadiness, and implicit obedience to orders are the qualifications most needed in soldiers who are to deal with an excited and exasperated mob; and they are qualities acquired only by training, and are seldom found in inexperienced militia.

In view of these considerations it is respectfully recommended that authority be given to the President to increase the strength of the depleted companies now embraced within Army organization.

Military commanders are slow to believe that the people possess a sufficient amount of virtue, patriotism, and intelligence to conduct the affairs of a republican government without the aid of the military, and are ever ready to believe that the military can at any and all times be usefully and profitably employed in the conduct of civic affairs.

Mr. Speaker, history is repeating itself. We are passing through a fearful monetary crisis that is shrinking values, blasting hopes, and destroying homes. We are approaching an ordeal similar to that through which England passed in her resumption iniquity between 1819 and 1823. Will gentlemen on this floor blindly and persistently force this country into the position of hushing the cries of its starving millions with the sword, the ball, and the bayonet? England did this, but it shook her from center to circumference. Nothing but her powerful army sustained the government. The result of that ordeal was to build up a moneyed and landed aristocracy. We have no such army in this country, and as long as the people retain their intelligence and the love of self-government we will have no such army.

It is worthy of remark that wherever silver has been demonetized people are suffering more from stagnation of business, monetary panics, and starvation than where the double standard exists; and this is particularly applicable to England, Germany, and the United States. It is essentially different in France. Notwithstanding the fact that France recently passed through an exhaustive war with Germany, within three years after that war she paid to Germany a thousand million of dollars in coin, and now has, at the lowest estimate, fifteen hundred millions in circulation. Her population is less than that of the United States, and yet the volume of her circulating medium is doubly as great. She has money enough in circulation to answer all the purposes of trade and commerce and her paper currency as well as her gold and silver is a legal tender for all debts public and private, and hence her prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I desire before taking my seat to repudiate the idea that there is a communistic element in my State. It is true there was an uprising last summer, and if the apprehensions of gentlemen are well founded, there may be similar uprisings in the future; but these did not and will not grow out of any vicious desire to reorganize society, or to disturb or destroy the rights of others. Such uprisings as have occurred and such as may unfortunately hereafter occur have been and will be purely attributable to the suffering of the people. Such men as have struck or may strike for remunerative wages have done and would do no more than the millionaires of the country would do if they were similarly situated.

Mr. Speaker, uprisings, seditions, and rebellions are not new in the history of the world. We are taught by the essays of Lord Bacon, which were written three hundred years ago, that they existed at that period and were attributable to any one of the various causes that operated oppressively upon the people. I quote the following interesting passage from one of those essays:

> The first remedy or prevention is to remove by all means possible that material cause of sedition whereof we spoke, which is want and poverty in the estate. To which purpose serveth the opening and well balancing of trade; the cherishing of manufactures; the banishing of idleness; the repressing of waste and excess by sumptuary laws; the improvement and husbandiug of the soil; the regulating of prices of things vendible; the moderating of taxes; and the like.
> There be but three things which one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture, and the vecture or carriage. So that if these three wheels go, wealth will flow in as a spring-tide.

We are taught by this distinguished writer that of all the rebellions known to man "the rebellion of the belly is the worst." Fanaticism may be appeased, political uprising may be quieted, sectional discords adjusted, but "the rebellion of the belly" knows no law and will yield to no compromise that does not satisfy the cravings of hunger.

Elevated statesmanship will not justify the use of force to suppress the "rebellion of the belly." The crack of the musket is not the proper answer to the cry for bread, nor is the plunge of the bayonet the remedy. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. When a man is starving it is his God-given right to protest against the cause of his distress. Whenever that distress and suffering is produced by unwise legislation gentlemen will find it to be a costly and sad mistake to use the Army against the sufferers. An army of double or quadruple the size of our present Army raised for this purpose would disappear before an indignant people as frost before the morning sun.

> NOTES.—As was very well said by the Senator from Indiana a moment ago, unless this contraction that is going on by the million every day is stopped, there will be no money with which to meet the appropriations that may be passed by Congress. Talk about voting to provide for armies to keep down mobs! No wonder there are mobs when all of your laws are against the wishes of the people, as they have said, and against their interest. Make your laws in consonance with the wishes and the interests of the people, and then there will be no necessity for an Army except a mere skeleton of one.—Extract from speech by Senator Hereford.

> As it stands to-day, there is a sad lack of opportunity. With the exhaustless productiveness of the earth to mine, to cultivate, to explore, the channels of industry are everywhere blocked and gorged, and the hand of labor is palsied. The earth teems with raw material, awaiting the magic transformation of man's energies; but labor stands idle in the market-places, and capital lies piled up uselessly in banks. Millions of men are either in enforced idleness, or are unprofitably employed.

CLAIMS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAYHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have not since I have occupied a seat upon this floor consumed much of the time of this House in discussing the measures that have been before its members for their deliberation and determination, but have usually been content with expressing my judgment by the votes which I have cast upon the questions under consideration. And I should not depart from that custom on this occasion did I not feel that the measure under consideration had not fully arrested the attention of gentlemen on this floor; and that the importance of this bill to the people of this District not only, but to the Government of the United States was not fully understood and appreciated by all the members of this House who will be called upon to vote upon the measures embraced in it.

This apparent want of attention and understanding of this measure does not arise from any intentional neglect on the part of the members of this House of the general business of legislation, but rather from the fact that the legislation for this District is not of a national, but of a local character, and that the Congress of the United States feels called upon to devote its time and energies to the great subject of legislating for the whole people, and cannot turn aside from those great and responsible duties to consider questions of detail pertaining to the government of a District only ten miles square, embracing a population of only about two hundred thousand inhabitants. Gentlemen seem to forget or at least to ignore the fact that the inhabitants of this District are completely and absolutely dependent upon Congress for all legislation and for all the protection of a government in all its departments, that the people living in this District are but the helpless wards of a paternal Government, and that when that Government withdraws from them its care and protection they are shorn of all available means of defending or maintaining their just rights of person or property.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is no part of my purpose to lecture gentlemen upon this floor in reference to their duty, but rather to call attention, as briefly as I may, to the provisions of this bill, trusting that the measures which it contains will be judged by their merits without passion or prejudice, and that so far as they commend themselves to the judgment of the House they will receive indorsement and approval without regard to any preconceived opinions against either the District of Columbia or any individual who may happen to reside within the limits of its territory.

The Constitution provides that Congress shall have exclusive legislation over this District; and by this provision the inhabitants of the District are not only rendered powerless to legislate for themselves, but the duty is imposed upon Congress to legislate for the District in all matters whatsoever. We cannot, therefore, if we would, relieve ourselves of the constitutional obligation to enact all needful laws for the government of the District, but also for the protection of all the just rights of its citizens.

Under this provision of the Constitution laws have been enacted conferring authority upon certain officers of the District to make improvements and contract debts; under which it is alleged that contracts have been made, and services and materials furnished, and other liabilities have been created and debts contracted against the District of Columbia, which are due and unpaid; for the ascertainment and payment of which no provision has been made by law; and the holders of such claims are clamoring at the door of Congress for some law by which these claims may be adjusted and some provision made for the payment of such amounts as are found due from the District.

It is not my purpose now to enter into any extended argument as to the justice of these claims. It is sufficient for the purpose of this bill that it is conceded on the part of the commissioners of the District that large liabilities do exist against the District, growing out of such contracts and services for the District, for which the commissioners of the District have no power or authority to pay. The practice has heretofore existed for Congress to adjudicate such claims against the District and enact the proper laws to collect the necessary money and liquidate and pay the same out of the taxes and other revenues of the District.

This practice probably arose out of the peculiar relations existing between the District and Federal Government, and was founded upon the principle that the District of Columbia was in the relation of a sovereign territory or a part of the sovereignty of the Federal Government, and could not be prosecuted before the judicial tribunals of the country. But the Federal Government in the establishment of the Court of Claims innovated upon that principle, and provided that even the United States might be prosecuted before that court, in certain enumerated cases, and the stern rule of the common law having been relaxed as to the sovereignty of the United States, it is not perceived that its relaxation may not even with more propriety be applied to the District of Columbia, which in itself is scarcely distinguishable from a municipality which may always be sued in a court of law.

But there is another and much stronger reason arising from the situation of the case, which may be urged for allowing this District to be prosecuted in the Court of Claims.

The difficulty and almost impossibility of properly and intelligently examining and adjusting the claims against the District of Columbia before Congress must be apparent to every gentleman upon this floor. To require Congress, with the vast accumulation of the legislation of this great country, to examine and adjudicate the numerous claims that may arise between individuals and corporations and the District, and expect a just and satisfactory result would be to aim at miracles. Such duty cannot in the nature of things be properly done before Congress.

For the three hundred men in this House to examine as judges and suitably investigate the thousands of claims, take the necessary testimony, examine the legal questions, and intelligently decide the same would occupy more time than can be given by them to the subject of legislation for the whole Government.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, it is not in the line of the constitutional duty of Congress to adjudicate such claims. It is not clothed with constitutional power, and its exercise of that prerogative is little less than a bold usurpation of authority properly vested by the Constitution in a co-ordinate department of the Government.

The Constitution provides that—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

No judicial power or authority whatever is vested in Congress; and it is not a little surprising to me that gentlemen of democratic notions and proclivities, strict constructionists, who believe in the exercise by the different departments of the Government only of such powers as are conferred by the Constitution, should be found giving such latitudinary powers to Congress in reference to the exercise of judicial authority over the District of Columbia.

The bill under consideration is intended to remedy this evil; to place the exercise of this judicial power in the courts, where it constitutionally belongs, and to relieve Congress from the burden and responsibility of judicially determining the claims against this District and to remand them to the courts to be determined according to the forms of law and judicial rules.

The Court of Claims constituted as it is seems admirably adapted to the performance of this duty. Its whole machinery is adapted to the examination of claims against the Government, and its present and permanent existence as one of the courts of the country obviates the necessity of creating a new tribunal and relieves the Government of any additional expense in that direction.

This bill provides for the extension of the jurisdiction of that court and conferring upon it both legal and equitable powers for the adjudication of all claims against the District of Columbia. It makes it the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, through his assistants and deputies, to defend the District of Columbia before said court, and on appeal when any appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States from its adjudications.

It provides for appealing from the decision of the Court of Claims in all cases provided for in this bill to the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the existing practice on appeals from said court when the United States is a party.

By these provisions the bill throws all suitable guarantees around the treasury of the District to protect it against any possibility of fraud and speculation, and at the same time makes it possible for those having claims against the District to realize on them the full measure of their just dues.

I am aware that it is claimed that many of these claims are unjust and should not be paid, but it cannot be seriously pretended that injustice will be done to the District even if unjust or fraudulent claims are presented, with an impartial and intelligent court to examine and a vigilant and efficient law officer of the Government to resist and litigate them.

To the action of such tribunals the rights of parties in all litigated cases in this country are submitted, and all experience has demonstrated that the rights of all have in the main been justly and fairly administered. If we cannot trust the courts, then indeed has human government proved a failure, and society should be dissolved into its native elements, where might becomes right, and law and justice cease to exercise control over the conduct of mankind.

I for one cannot subscribe to any such monstrous and unreasonable theories. In a practice of over a quarter of a century before the various courts of this country, I have been established and confirmed in the conviction that the courts at least may be trusted and that an impartial judiciary is the surest bulwark against anarchy and the safest depository of the rights of the citizen.

In addition to the adjudication of these claims by the court, this bill provides for the payment of final judgments of this court by the Treasurer of the United States out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and directs that officer to reimburse the Treasury of the United States out of funds in the Treasury belonging to the District of Columbia. The object of this provision is to provide for the speedy payment of the judgment, so that the claimants whose claims may be established by the judgment of the court without unnecessary and, to many of the claimants, ruinous delay; and it will be seen that by this means the Government of the United States is not called upon to lose one dollar by reason of these claims.

The justice of this provision will be apparent when it is remembered that all of these claims originated in contracts and transactions made with officers created and appointed by the Government of the United States under various acts of Congress.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come back to the question: ought not this tribunal to be established? No just man can for one moment contend that the just claims against this District ought not to be justly and promptly paid. If no just claims exist, then no judgments will be rendered against the District and none will be paid. If just claims exist, common honesty and even-handed justice demand their payment.

To determine whether or not such claims do exist either a court like this or some other judical tribunal must be created, or Congress must take upon itself the unauthorized prerogative of assuming judicial power not belonging to it; and in the exercise of which there is great danger from its want of adaptability to judicial proceedings that great injustice will be done, both to the District and claimants.

By creating this tribunal Congress will have done its duty in providing a high and impartial tribunal for the adjudication of these claims, and claimants will no longer have any just grounds of complaint; at the same time Congress will have relieved itself from the burden and annoyance of sitting in judgment upon the questions which belong essentially to the court, and may devote its time and attention to the great and pressing legislative duties which alone pertain to it.
